The Third Annual Conference of the churches in Ohio will be held at Marysville, Union Co., commencing at one o'clock P. M. on Thursday the 8th Sept., and continue over the Sabbath. Ministers and lay brethren of this and adjoining states are affectionately invited to attend. It is hoped that all the churches of Ohio will be represented. The brethren of Marysville and vicinity will see that adequate provisions are made for the accommodation of all who can make it convenient to attend; and as the committee think they ought not to be further burdened, take the liberty of recommending the several churches to provide their delegates with traveling expenses. The place is accessible in different directions by Rail Road.

Come, one and all, panoplied, not like the warriors of earth, with the weapons of destruction, but having on the entire christian armor, with hearts imbued richly with the spirit of prayer, love and faith, that we may yet, if needs be, a little longer wield the sword of the Spirit, which is mighty, even to the pulling down and destruction of all earthly and oppressive dominions. Let us come thus armed, dear brothers and sisters, and our meeting will be one of profit to us all, and God will be glorified.

} Committee.

Norwalk, O., July 20, 1859.

P. S. Brethren from abroad coming to this Conference either by Railroad or otherwise, will call on Brother Patridge, where further provisions will be made for their entertainment.

E. R. Southwick.

☞ The next Quarterly Conference of Western Central Maine has been invited and will meet in South Livermore, Sept. 1st, Thursday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. We hope all the ministers of the quarterly conference will be there, (and ministers from other parts of the State are cordially invited,) and as many brethren and sisters as can consistently come. Come with faith in God, ready to work in his cause for the salvation of souls. Call on Bro. Sousa, Silas Timberlake, Addison Cambell, and Chs. Boothby, about one mile from North Turner Bridge. In behalf of the Conference,

I. C. Wellcome, Mod.
L. Wight, Sec.

I see thee still.

I see thee still,—

Here, where I watched thee day by day,

And saw thy life fast ebb away,

And felt to murmur 'gainst the hand

That thus should break our social band,

And snatch from us a brother dear,

Whose presence o'er our hearts did cheer.

Dark hour! again its woes unfold,

As then I saw thee, pale and cold—

I see thee still.

I see thee still;

Though in the grave thou art laid low,

Thou shalt not always sleep, we know,

For Jesus in the clouds shall come

With power to take his children home;

Then, sleeping ones, ye shall awake,

Your Master's likeness ye shall take,

Death in victory be swallowed up;—

In that blest land, loved one, we hope

To see thee still. Sister.

The Glorious Prospect.

Friend "Crisis" and beloved Saints who are heirs of the Kingdom:—How constant and how welcome are the visits of the "Crisis" to the lonely pilgrims here in this old broken down earth! O, may it continue to find its way to us until "He who is our life shall appear," and then it will no longer be needed. Then will that world of glory appear, and Abraham will see his promised land, and will inherit it forever, with his seed, the heirs with him of the promise.

"O, that beautiful world! that beautiful world!" How I long to see it! How I long for the time to come when I can enter in through the narrow gate into the golden city! There will Jesus be, and all the holy men of old: Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; and Job the perfect man, and Paul the persecuted, and John, the beloved disciple who leaned on Jesus' breast. O, there'll be a goodly company there—"a great multitude which no man can number." And, thanks be to God and to our great Prince, the saint's reward is bliss indescribable, eternal! and in Eden—Paradise restored, too. What a glorious prospect! This world to be restored to its primeval beauty; and above all, the saints to be raised to life and immortality, having "bodies fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body;" "and they will dwell in the land forever," saith the Lord. In the land? Yes, land,—land that will bring forth in her full strength; where "the wilderness and the solitary places shall be glad; and the desert shall blossom as the rose . . . and rejoice even with joy and singing;" and "in the wilderness shall water break out, and streams in the desert," and "instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree;" and "the mountains and the hills shall break forth into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands," and all creation "shout for joy and sing." Then once more, as in the creation, will "the morning stars sing together, and all the sons of God shout for joy." Then will Jehovah "clothe his priests with salvation: and the saints will shout aloud for joy;" for the King of glory reigneth forever and ever: Amen. Lord, hasten that day; for then "the blind shall see, and the deaf shall hear, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing, and the lame man shall leap as an hart." O, then "the redeemed, the ransomed of the Lord," shall rejoice in Zion and Zion's King, "with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads" [illegible] joy and gladness. Then "sorrow and sighing shall flee away;" there shall be no more death, neither pain, nor sickness, nor weeping, nor mourning, for the [illegible] "shall wipe away all tears from their eyes," and "will dwell with them, and be their God" in glory forever, even forever and ever.

For Woman's Position in the Church.

Woman's Position in the Church.

No. 2.

According to the comments of Drs. Whitby and Clarke, the women was empowered with the gift of prophecy in precisely the same way as the man. Mark Clarke's language—"Whatever may be the meaning of praying or prophesying in respect to the men, they have precisely the same meaning in respect to the women; so that some women, at least, as well as some men, might speak to others to edification, and exhortation, and comfort." Again he says: "He that prophesieth has the gift of preaching."

A Clarke, a Wesley, a Fletcher, a Taft, a Bramwell, and a host of others, could believe in, justify, and sustain, by most hearty co-operation, female preachers; but it falls to the lot of modern reformers,—those who lay claim to having resurrected long buried truths, and brought them up from the dusty beds of error and tradition, to the sunlight of heaven—to withstand woman, when, with her heart fired with perfect love and holy zeal, she would fain give utterance to that gift of prophecy imparted to her by the Holy Spirit, and "speak to men, to edification, exhortation, and comfort." In her heart, the fire must be smothered or quenched,—she will overstep the bounds of womanly propriety if she give utterance publicly to those burning truths which have been to her so precious,—her mission is by her own fireside, her law-giver is her husband, and for his individual happiness and comfort, solely, she must labor. What though thousands are perishing for lack of knowledge—knowledge, which by gifts and requirements she is able to impart? she must not be a missionary beyond the precincts of her own fireside or village.

A Miriam may prophesy, a Deborah may preside over the tribes of Israel, and lead forth their armies to conquest; a Huldah may counsel the king, and a Mary announce to the sorrowing disciples a Savior's resurrection; a Phebe may be a deaconess, and sent to the other churches to transact business; a Triphena and Triphosa might labor with Paul in the gospel; Philip's daughters might prophesy, or preach; but it will not do in these modern times for women to assume (?) such responsibilities, or occupy such public positions.

Yes, there are those who call themselves Adventists, who claim to have more light on the Bible than any other class of religionists, that do occupy this hostile position to female laborers. They should take some retrograde steps and stand by the older Reformers, a Paul for instance, who said, "Help those women who labored with me in the gospel,"—not put them down, not reject them, but "help them." Again: "I commend unto you Phebe, our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea, that ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you, for she hath been a succorer of many, and of myself also." The Greek word signifies deaconess.

Theodoret says, "The fame of Phebe was spread throughout the world, and she was known not only to the Greeks and Romans, but also to the Barbarians." This shows that her labors were not limited to her own fireside.

One writer in speaking on this subject says: "There were deaconesses in the primitive church, and it is evident that they were ordained to this office by the imposition of the hands of the bishop, and the form of prayer used on the occasion, is still extant in the apostolic constitution. And this order was continued for several centuries in the church, until the reign of the man of sin commenced." That spirit which would bind a woman's conscience, and hinder her from occupying upon those gifts imparted to her by divine grace, seems much in harmony with that of the man of sin.

Let me refer you again to Dr. Clarke, on Rom. 16: 12, where he says, (speaking of those women who labored in the Lord,) "We learn from this that christian women, as well as men, labored in the ministry of the word. In those times of simplicity, all persons, whether men or women, who had received the knowledge of the truth, believed it to be their duty to propagate it to the utmost of their power. Many have spent much useless labor in endeavoring to prove that these women did not preach. That there were some prophetesses, as well as prophets in the christian church, we learn; and that a woman might pray or prophesy, provided she had her head covered, we know; and that whoever prophesied spoke unto others to edification, exhortation, and comfort, St. Paul declares in 1 Cor. 14: 3. And that no preacher can do more every person must acknowledge; because to edify, exhort, and comfort, are the prime ends of the gospel ministry. If women thus prophesied, then women preached."

Will any one say after reading such positive testimony as this, that the highly cultivated and intellectual Dr. Clarke did not sanction woman's preaching?

BY CARRIE F. ALLEN.

THE BUILDING OF BABEL.

What has not man's ambition led him to undertake? and, when heaven has not directly interposed, what has he not accomplished? The shores of the past are thickly strewn with the monuments of his boasted greatness; the wrecks of his foolish pride, and the mouldering ruins of his vile superstition. Here, grand and gloomy, frowns the time-enduring pyramids; there rise the columns gray of heathen temples, silent and alone in their desolation. Here are the vestiges of a young nation's dawning life, and there are the lasting testimonials of its overgrown greatness, vice and folly. These relics of the past! What a tale they tell us of mighty energies wasted for nought; of the utter darkness of the mind, unillumined by the light of heaven.

Not least among the wild schemes that once occupied the ancient mind was the conception and the building of the tower of Babel. This subject carries us far back into the night of the past—so far, indeed, that profane history can assist but little or nothing concerning the mighty undertaking. But from divine record we gather that the posterity of Noah, having increased to a great people, journeyed eastward, under the direction of the mighty Nimrod, and on the fertile plains of Shinar commenced the building of a city and a tower whose top should reach unto heaven.

There on the banks of the winding Euphrates were laid the foundations of the first city of the post-diluvian age,—a city which was destined to become the most magnificent of antiquity, and the nucleus of an universal empire. Busy were the founders of that ancient city in prosecuting their vast design. Close at hand were the materials for building, for the slimy and bituminous earth furnished an admirable substance for brick, which were baked by the heat of the solar rays. Soon the city's walls arose, and the tower, terrace upon terrace, looked grandly down upon the plain like some solitary hill upreared by wand of magician's art. Still went on the work, till the multitude exultant with first success, began to dream that they had built them walls that should defy the ages.

In all this work they did not acknowledge God; they trusted in their vaunted strength, blinded by madness and folly. But God saw their pride, and punished them with his sore displeasure. The Almighty but willed it, and confusion confounded the multitude. A strange and different speech was upon the tongue of every workman, so that none could give or obey orders. Thus in one hour was crushed the mighty plan that boastful man had thought to accomplish, teaching him how vain a thing it is to dream of self-glory. God in his divine economy had marked out a different course for man than to settle down in one compact mass, and they were scattered abroad, each little clan going forth to lay the foundations of nations and empires, that in the coming future were to figure grandly in the drama of earth's progressive march.

Thus ceased the building of Babel; but its influence, and that of the young city around it, ceased not here. The ambitious Nimrod, foiled in one design, laid the foundation of idolatrous worship, and he in after ages was worshiped in this same temple as a god. Here, long after Nimrod and his followers had passed away, the proud queen Semiramis held her court. Here she commenced to build the mighty city of Babylon, decorating it with all the devices of oriental splendor.

Ages pass on. This city has become the mistress of the nations. Towering battlements frown on every side, that might well defy a world in arms. The gorgeous palaces of princes dazzle the beholder on every hand, resplendent with glory and luxury. Proudly rising above all other objects, now decorated with a world's tribute, may be seen that same tower that was reared in the dawn of the world's second age. It has now become the shrine of the Chaldean's deity, and from its cloud-capped summit the oriental sages study the stars in their course. Here in the proud supremacy of the Babylonian dynasty reigns Nebuchadnezzar, sole monarch of the world. Drunk with glory and deceived by the phantasms of present prosperity, this monarch idly dreams that the "pride of the Chaldee's excellency" shall dazzle the world with undimmed brightness through all time. But soon the visions of night reveal to the astonished king how unstable is earthly glory. The panorama of the ages is but spread out before him, and how quickly his boasted greatness is dissipated. His mighty empire is wrecked amid the crash of war's tornado. How true this night vision proves. A few years revolve, and the brazen gates of Babylon swing open to the Persian foe, who soon revel in her palaces, and repose on the couches of her princes. The prestige of the queenly city has departed, and amidst the changes and the mutilations of time, she slowly crumbles till overwhelmed in one grand ruin.

Nearly four thousand years have passed since that opening scene of Babylon's history. And what's history for contemplation [illegible] tainty, then suddenly we are dazzled with the brightness of its noon-day glory, and finally we are lost in wonder as the splendid vision fades from our gaze like a dissolving view. A mighty mound of sunburnt bricks now alone marks the spot where Babel's temple stood. Dark fens and marshes overspread the site of many an avenue where once thronged the busy multitude. Foul beasts inhabit the mouldy chambers where once reposed the king's household. Wide spread desolation broods over the spot where pride and glory sat enthroned in ages gone. Babel rose and around it Babylon. They had their day of glory and decline, teaching us that naught of earth is truly abiding, and for that reason all our hopes should centre in Heaven, whose glories will never fade nor pass away.

Mad River.

I.

Cool shades and dewy groves invite my lay,
And woo me from the sultry noon of day;
'Mid the dark groves that watch thy rocky bed,
The rising spray is circling round my head,
While here and there, unrippled by a fall,
Some tiny lake sleeps 'neath thy mountain wall,
Fringed with the evergreens that cling the rock,
Unshaken by the tempest's 'wildering shock.

Fair river, all unknown to classic song,
Thy tiny waves in beauty roll along;
Amid the dark green woods thy fount is seen,
Embower'd with every tinted shade of green;
Beneath thy rocky wall, untired and wild,
I hear thy voice, as sweet as when a child;
How like thy restless tide the lot of him,
Who musing roams along thy water's brim.

III.

Here innocence might safely, sweetly dwell;
Its beauty crowns each crag with mystic spell;
The dancing stream, the silent pool, the wood,
Awake a love for nature's solitude;
And giant trees are waving in the breeze,
And softly swells the hum of birds and bees;
Yon hills that 'neath the fog encurtain'd lie,
Seem just suspended in the mimic sky.

IV.

Upon thy banks, bright stream of years gone past,
Youth's visions woke! too beautiful to last;
Thou hast, I ken, the self-same winning song,
That then I cherished with a love so strong:
Stream of my father-land, and granite rock,
Embower'd amid the ever green hemlock,
Thy magic music makes my weary spirit glad,— Because thou hast thy flood and foam, they call thee mad. E. A. W.

Home.

In God's revealed will concerning man and his redemption, he has promised those that secure that redemption a home, literal and tangible as the earth upon which we walk. The children of God have never yet had a permanent home, but the time is drawing near when they shall inherit one, everlasting and incorruptible, where sorrow, sickness, pain and grief shall never enter. That will be a home adapted to immortal beings; where peace and tranquility shall always abound; where every thing will be made subservient to the joy and happiness of its possessor; where every countenance shall glow in the health and vigor of youth.

It outvies the power of human reason to grasp eternal things, and it is vastly beyond the scope of human language to delineate in all the details the grandeur, glory and eternal excellency of that home; and in view of it, Paul, in the fullness of his heart, gave utterance to the expression—"A far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

But while we anticipate the future enjoyment of that home, we need not harbor doubts as to its locality, for God has unmistakably marked its boundaries to Abraham—the father of all the faithful—which included the land of Canaan, over which God has exercised especial care, ever since the time he promised it to Abraham and his seed. The history of that land, if carefully studied, is sufficient to convince any man of its peculiar destiny. Nearly every nation that ever had an existence has fought for that land, but God has never suffered one of them to hold a permanent possession. Heathens and idolators never could find a home there; and even God's own chosen people, who were beloved for the Fathers' sake, were not suffered to dwell there any longer than they walked in all the ways of their God; if they disobeyed they were immediately driven out, as obnoxious in the sight of God, who has chosen Zion, the beauty and glory of the whole earth, for his holy habitation.—May we all dwell in his sanctuary.

Experience.—There is a pretty German story of a blind man, who, even under a misfortune, was happy—happy in a wife he passionately loved; her voice was sweet and low, and he gave her credit for that beauty which, had he been a painter, was the object of his idolatry. A physician came, and curing the disease, restored the husband to sight, which he chiefly valued as it would enable him to gaze on the lovely features of his wife. He looks, and sees a face hideous in ugliness. He is restored to sight, but his happiness is over. Is not this our history? Our cruel physician is Experience.

Selected for the Crisis.

"May God make us patient to live!" prays Henry Ward Beecher, in his Life Thoughts; and, reader, has not your heart often echoed this prayer? For our part, we think it is no easy thing to live; we don't believe it ever was, since the gates of our home were closed, and our father and mother went out with the curse on their heads, to wander homesick over the face of the earth!

And what is it to live? It is a long battle with evil and temptation, with weakness of body and weariness of soul, with care and vexations, with sharp sufferings and petty trials. It is to hear always the discords of sin drowning the harmonies of life; it is to bear disappointments, and hidden heart aches, and unrealized aspirations that crown us with thorns.

O, it is not a light thing to live. Yet God forbid, that in writing thus we should seem at all ungrateful, or unmindful of his mercies, or of all the joy and beauty with which he has crowned the earth.

Does not the night come for every soul of us, with its mighty and solemn speech, and its curtains run up with cornices of gold and purple, and every fold stuck thick with flashing jewels? Does not every day rise out of the night (did you ever think of this) a glorious miracle? First of all, out of the blackness and darkness comes the dawn, with its pillars of pearl, and its flutings of rose; and at last, royal, raidant, comes the day, glistening with dews, and perfumed with all fragrances, and welcomed with all sweet flowing melodies!

Have we not, all of us, the seasons, with their lavish treasuries of gifts and beauties? There is Winter, that old sculptor, setting over the land its white, massive cathedrals and monuments! There is Spring with her smiling face, and her hands full of sweet smelling wild flowers! There is the Summer with its joy of leaves, its song of birds, and its glory of woods and streams! There is the Autumn, coming from "afar with its dyed garments," and its burdens of juicy fruits. And yet, with all these gifts heaped on us from God's royal bounty, it is no easy thing to live.

Oh, ye who strive to carry your lives truly, bravely, patiently, through this world, answer ye us, is it a little thing? Is it no more than "a succession of falls," its chief glory being, that having fallen it is not content to lie there? No; it does require patience to live. The soul grows homesick through time, the storms batter and bruise it, the cares eat and corrode it. Look at existence as you will, it is still a struggle and a battle! But blessed be God, not a long one! The hearts that have beaten to this march for seventy years, looking back, say the journey only appears a day's length. And for us, reader, it will be over so soon: so soon shall we rest from our labors, and the winds will be stirring the short, green grass over our graves. And going out on that unknown ocean, we can carry but one prayer, the one that binds all our humanity in common need; the same for prince, for peasant, for saint, and sinner; all that any soul ever has carried, ever shall carry, out from this life. May God make us patient to live, that when the mountains shall fade away, and the momentum of all earthly things shall be lost in the general wreck of nature, we may be clad in robes of righteousness, with voices attuned to the melody of heaven.

Humility before God.

I think that a view of what we are before God, of our leanness, of our littleness, of our weakness and imperfection, is enough to keep down the risings of any man's pride. I think there are times when, if a man should receive a full, clear view of what he is himself, in comparison with what God is, all hope and almost life itself would be crushed out of him! And it is only when God reveals himself in the person of Jesus Christ, pardoning sins, and overlooking our errors and imperfections, that we are enabled to have hope! But while, in the view of God, every Christian feels that he is not only sinful, but ignominiously so, and degraded beyond all expression, yet there is in his experience of the love which Christ has for him notwithstanding his weakness and impurity, a certain boldness that lifts him up and gives him confidence to stand in the very presence of God!

Did you ever see a child, which through a period of days and weeks had little by little been gathering ugliness, and seeming to be aching for a whipping? By-and-by he comes to a state in which it is plain that there must be a break-out; and an occasion occurs, perhaps, from some trifling circumstance, in which he is brought to a direct issue with the parent, and the question is, who shall conquer, the mother or the child? She expostulates, but the child grows red and swells with anger; she pleads with him, and uses all her power to bring him to a reconciliation on the basis of justice; but nothing will do; and at last, when everything else has failed, and she has been unable by gentle means to subdue his haughty pride—if she does what she ought to do, she gives him a sound whipping! He is quickly subdued and filled with shame, yet not entirely humbled; but when he sees the much-loving mother, who has wept with even more pain and suffering than the child himself, going about the room—a kind of living music to the child's [illegible] upon her face, he comes to himself, and thinking a moment, feels that all the old dark flood of ugliness has gone away, and an entirely new feeling begins to take possession of him. He looks at the face of the mother, with love swelling in his heart, and wishes that he were sitting at her feet. And when she says, "My child, why do you not come to me?"—with another burst of tears, not of pain and wounded feeling, but of joy and love,—he throws himself into her arms, and buries his head in her bosom! Ah! if I remember aright, I can recount many similar experiences in my own early life; and I am brought back into the remembrance of such childhood's scenes, because the relation of my own disobedient heart to my mother when she punished me, is the best illustration which I can give you of the relation of the soul of a rebelling child of God to his chastising hand! When after being puffed up with pride and vanity, from being engaged in worldly pursuits, and being contented with mere worldly moralities, I am suddenly, by afflictions or disappointments, or by the direct visitation of God's Holy Spirit, humbled and brought to the very earth with contrition, oh! who can tell how sweet it is to take hold of the outstretched hand of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to go up into the confidence and embrace of his love! I am nothing myself; I am entirely humbled and subdued; only I feel his love in my heart, and my heart swells with love in return. These are days of sweetness! These are days of heavenly joy! These are days of true humility! O how lowly a man bows, and how lowly he walks, who has a view of his own littleness and emptiness in comparison with the greatness and the fullness of the ever-loving God!—Beecher.

Truth and Freedom.

BY W. D. GALLAGHER.

He is the Freeman whom the Truth makes free,
And all are slaves beside.—Cowper.

For the Truth, then, let us battle,
Whatsoever fate betide;
Long the boast that we are freemen,
We have made and published wide.

He who has the Truth and keeps it,
Keeps what not to him belongs,
But performs a selfish action,
That his fellow mortal wrongs.

He who seeks the Truth, and trembles
At the dangers he must brave,
Is not fit to be a freeman;
He, at best, is but a slave.

He who hears the Truth, and places
Its high promptings under ban,
Loud may boast of all that's manly,
But can never be a man.

Friend, this simple lay who readest,
Be thou not like either them;
But to Truth give utmost freedom,
And the tide it raises, stem.

Bold in speech, and free in action,
Be forever! Time will test,
Of the free-souled and the slavish,
Which fulfills life's mission best.

Be thou like the noble Roman;
Scorn the threat that bids thee fear:
Speak! no matter what betide thee;
Let them strike, but bid them hear!

Be thou like the first apostle—
Be thou like heroic Paul;
If a free thought seeks expression,
Speak it boldly—speak it all!

Face thine enemies—accusers;
Scorn the prison, rack or rod!
And if thou hast Truth to utter,
Speak! and leave the rest to God!

The Author of "Sweet Home."

It is said the author of "Sweet Home," J. Howard Payne, whose song has been sung all over the world, was himself a wanderer in life, and never had a home. He was at one time Consul of Tunis, and was a man of fine conversational powers. A friend of his records that he gave a history of his wanderings, his trials, and the cares incident to his sensitive nature and to poverty. "I have been in the heart of Paris, Berlin, and London, or some other city, and heard persons singing or hand-organs playing 'Sweet home,' without having a shilling to buy myself the next meal, or a place to lay my head. The world has literally sung my song until every heart is familiar with its melody. Yet I have been a wanderer from boyhood. My country has turned me ruthlessly from office, and in my old age I have to submit to humiliation for my bread." Thus he would complain of his hapless lot. His only wish was to die in a foreign land, and be buried by strangers, and sleep in obscurity. His wish was realized. He died at Tunis.

Sprays of Wisdom.

Only the idler or the coward rails against his fortune.

Happiness is not promised to the learned, but to the good.

Practice flows from principle; for as a man thinks, so he will act.

The thinking man hath wings; the acting man only feet and hands.

The greatest misfortune of life is old age without the remembrance of virtue.

Only weak minds allow their judgments to be warped by sympathy or indignation.

Traits of character which you seek to conceal, you had much better need to reform.

It is a noble species of revenge to have the power of a severe retaliation, and not to exercise it.

Happiness and sorrow are the measures of our mortal life; we willingly record the moments of gladness, and sorrow's hours make their own impress.

It is not best to strive so much to appear virtuous as to be virtuous.

The True Test of Love.—It is perfectly well understood, or if not, it should be, that almost any husband would leap into the sea or rush into a burning edifice to rescue a perishing wife. But to anticipate the convenience or happiness of a wife in a small matter, the neglect of which would be unobserved, is a more eloquent proof of tenderness. This shows a mindful fondness which wants occasions in which to express itself. [illegible]

Useful Family Receipts.

Sore Lips.—Wash the lips with a strong tea made from the bark of white oak.

Ulcer.—Boil the leaves of the walnut tree in soft water, and frequently wash the sore with it, keeping a cloth wet with the wash on the parts all the time.

Felon.—Take of blue flag-root and white hellebore equal parts, and boil them in milk and water; hold the finger in this as hot as can be borne about fifteen minutes, then lay the hot roots on the felon about an hour, and it will soon disappear.

Distress after Eating.—Take of salt two parts, and of rhubarb one part, mix them well together, and take an even teaspoonful in water fifteen minutes after eating.

Warts.—Make a strong solution of corrosive sublimate, and rub it on the warts two or three times a day.

Sore Nipples.—Spread a plaster of fir balsam, and apply it to the breast after the child has nursed.

Consumption.—Take one table spoonful of tar, and the yolks of three hen's eggs, beat them well together, and then add half a pint of wine, and shake all well together. Dose, one table spoonful morning, noon and night.

Consumptive Cough, with Distress.—Take of the extract of cicuta one ounce, and oxide of zinc half an ounce; make them into a common sized pill, and take one night and morning.

Tape Worm.—Boil the stem of pomegranate very strong, and when cool, drink freely of the tea; or, take of spirits of turpentine and rum, each half a wine glass, and sweeten with molasses; take a little of this every hour, and afterwards take a smart dose of physic.

Bleeding at the Stomach.—Take a table spoonful of camomile tea every ten minutes until the bleeding stops.

Windy Stomach.—Chew saffron leaves, and swallow the spittle.

To Procure Sleep.—Wash the head in a decoction of dill seed, and smell of it frequently.

Weeping Eyes.—Wash them in camomile tea night and morning.

Spine Complaints.—Mix beef-gall with vinegar, and bathe the back with this wash night and morning.

Liver Complaint.—Make a strong tea of snake's head (herb) and drink freely.

How often we are Renewed.

It was once said, even by learned men in learned books, that the human frame was wholly renewed every seven years. But it is by no means probable that we are renewed with equal rapidity at every period of our lives. Nor is it more probable that every one, even at the same age, is renewed in exactly the same time. Much must depend on the temperament, and on vigor of constitution.

Infants, for example, when first born, have a circulation more than twice as active as that of the adult. Besides, their solids are not so rigid as those of older people. Their bones are not yet hard, and many of them are quite soft. It seems to me, therefore, quite reasonable to believe they are changed more rapidly than adults—perhaps three or four times as rapidly. It is indeed true that they have less of "wear and tear" from attrition than we who are older; at least while they are unable to walk or run about. But after they are able to go abroad and play, they are almost always in motion. It is quite as likely that they are renewed once in seven months, as once in seven years.

But whether the process requires seven weeks, seven months, seven years, or seventy, the great doctrine of the renewal of the body is well established, and generally admitted. We are never twice the same. None of us, beyond the merest infancy, have a particle about us, either solid or fluid, which was born with us, and some of us have already been wholly built over many times.

Every living individual should understand this at the earliest possible age. Let him know that he is never twice the same person any more than the river which passes by his door is twice the same river.—Alcott's "Laws of Health."

Loose Bowels.—The first, most essential and most efficient step towards a cure in all cases, is that which instinct prompts; to wit: perfect quietude of body; next take nothing but rice parched like coffee; then boil, and eat in the usual way.

Good Tidings!

I.

"Behold, I come quickly!" how sweet is that voice!
It is the Good Shepherd, he bids me rejoice;
'Tis music—'tis blessing—'tis gladness to me,—
A captive no longer, I soon shall be free.
It whispers of home—of heaven—of rest,
Of the joys that encircle that land of the blest;
Of trials all past, and glory all gained,
Of sins blotted out, and the sinless attained.

II.

It wakens an echo of voices long gone,
That gladdened my pathway in life's sunny dawn;
Of voices long sealed in the hush of the tomb,
That shall burst forth with shoutings when Jesus shall come.
The shadows shall flee from those "eyes as a flame,"
And the dull orbs of death gather light from the Lamb!
'Twill be spring-time indeed, when our Lord shall return,
And spring shall then "visit the mouldering urn."

III.

Then I'll keep on my journey, nor faint by the way;
I'll sing when the sun shines, when afflicted, I'll pray;
When the storm rages loudest, then oft'nest I hear
That sweet voice repeating, "Fear not, I am near!"
'Tis lonely and weary, but what's that to me?
The pierced feet have been here, their traces I see:
Enough for the servant to be as his Lord,
Enough to tread meekly where Jesus has trod.

For the Crisis.

"Choose ye this Day Whom ye will Serve."

After a long period of wanderings, suffering, battles and triumphs, the Israelites were at length enjoying the quiet blessings of the promised land. Every enemy had been overcome, and peace reigned throughout their camp. Then their intrepid leader, the faithful Joshua, who had long led their hosts to fight, but now "waxed old and stricken in age," called the elders of the people together, with the judges and officers, unto Schechem, there to deliver unto them his dying charge. With rapid perspicuity, he touched upon the chief events which characterized the especial providence of God towards this people. The choosing of Abraham; the bondage of the tribes in Egypt; their forced liberation; their miraculous passage through the red sea, and the awful destruction of their pursuers; their victory over the fierce Amorites on the opposite banks of the Jordan; the overthrow, successively, of the Perizzites, the Canaanites, the Hittites, Girgashites, the Hivites and the Jebusites; and, finally, how they were settled in a land for which they labored not, and in cities which they did not build, eating of the fruit of the olive and the vine which they did not plant. He slightly alluded to their acts of idolatry, and urging upon them the necessity of immediate action, he said: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served, that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites in whose land ye dwell." They might make choice in the form of their idolatry, if, after all that the Almighty had done for them, they preferred idol-worship to his service; "but," cried the dying chief, "as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord!" And this decision was the cause of the people signing a covenant to abjure idolatry.

Promptitude in all things good is to be recommended; but especially that step which may decide the eternal fate of man. The evil of procrastination, which day by day gains strength, is one of the greatest hindrances which Satan throws in the way. It is a presumptuous sin, inasmuch as it puts off the acceptance of mercy till to-morrow; which is urged so earnestly upon you to-day. It puts Jesus in the humiliating position of a suitor for favor, instead of the donor of a blessing; and if the devil can keep the sinner in this state long enough, he is quite sure of his deluded victim. The offers of salvation are only good for to-day, not one of them extending till to-morrow. If the longsuffering goodness of God does reach them, it is with this admonition—"To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Ps. 95: 7; Heb. 3: 7 [illegible] precious gift, may be sold and [illegible] before the dawning of another [illegible]

The uncertainty of life is such that a man believing in a future of rewards and punishment must be under strong, blind, infatuation, who will fritter away his time, day after day, without seeming to care a pin's point whether he is ready for the imminent change which may any hour come upon him. Were he even guaranteed a long life, it could not justify the spending of a single hour in sin; how much less, when we know not the moment that the dread summons may be given for execution into the hands of the angel of death!

"Choose you this day whom ye will serve." Mankind is divided into two great bodies—those who serve God, and those who serve Satan; the latter, numerically, predominating. The devil gives to many of his votaries the riches, pleasures and gaities of this world, that they may enjoy sin for a season; while to many he is a hard master from the first, where poverty and crime are mixed. Often the means of indulging are squandered before the insane appetite is satisfied. Then comes the toil indeed, the anxiety, the peril and disgrace; the startled, throbbing heart, lest a half accomplished burglary be detected, or a successful robbery be found out. The lurking wretch who prowls about at night, unable to stand the light of day, wasting in mad debauch the dollars for which he has periled his own life, and sacrificed, perhaps, the lives of others, could bear testimony to the dreadful slavery of Satan's yoke. The wealthy roue, with an inexhaustible supply of wealth, at length with broken constitution gives up the chase of pleasure; not because he ceases to love it, but because his enfeebled body, trembling upon the grave, will not move another step in obedience to the vitiated will.

In the sick chamber through the long sleepless night, what mental suffering the patient must endure, who, when he set out in life, did not choose the service of the Lord. He sees the days of his prime gone to waste, and nothing left but an enfeebled, premature old man, without a ray of hope. He may repent, perhaps, and be accepted, too,—who knows? but oh, what danger and audacity lie in the putting off of a day of penitence to the desperate chance of a death-bed repentance! Where one sinner has a dying bed, or a sane exit from the stage of life, an hundred are summoned to their grave.

"No reckoning made, but sent to their account,
With all their imperfections on their head."

Then the happiness of the wicked is short, uncertain, vain, and impure. "Knowest thou not this of old since man was placed upon earth, that the triumph of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment?"—Job 20: 4, 5. "And I will say unto my soul, Soul, thou hast goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee!"—Luke 12: 19, 20. What a fearful interruption of the contemplated season of luxurious repose. "Behold thou hast made my days as an hand-breadth; and mine age as nothing before thee: verily, every man at his best estate is altogether vanity. Surely every man walketh in a vain show; surely they are disquieted in vain; he heapeth up riches and knoweth not who shall gather them."—Ps. 39: 5, 6. Their happiness is derived from worldly prosperity; Ps. 73: 3, 4, 7; flattery; Isa. 22: 13; drunkenness; Isa. 5: 11; vain pleasure; Job 21: 12, and successful oppression; Hab. 1: 15. These are the impure sources, and the streams must be polluted.

Again, let us consider to what this pleasure leads. "Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and the end of that mirth is heaviness."—Prov. 14: 13. How true is this! When the hapless creatures have abandoned virtue, and thrown themselves madly into the seething vortex of dissipation, the cheek may flush and the eye sparkle with unhealthy excitement, and the laugh may sound gay and careless; but oh, if the eye could pierce the dark caverns of that heart, what a scene of despair and desolation would appear! It is a painted tomb; and as well bring gladness out of it, as attempt to beat a reveille on a muffled drum. And the end of all this is death.

But let us turn and view the happiness of saints. It is entirely in God. "Who have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee. My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever."—Ps. 73: 25, 26. This foundation is sure, to begin with; and every layer in the stable structure partakes of the same enduring quality. This happiness is derived from fear of God; Ps. 128: 1, 2; trust in God; Phil. 4: 6, 7; obedience; Ps. 40: 8; Jno. 15: 17; hope in the Lord; Ps. 146: 5; hope of glory; Rom. 5: 2; mutual love; Ps. 133: 1; Divine chastening; Job 5: 17; [illegible] poor; Prov. 3: 13; finding and retaining wisdom; Pro. 3: 13, 18. These fountains are pure, and the streams are clear and life-giving.

"Choose you this day whom ye will serve." All the hollow pleasure that the wicked can have, or the sorrow which the righteous shall know, is confined to this brief span of existence. And yet amid persecution and poverty, the peace which often pervades the soul of the christian is in itself preferable to all the wild excitement of folly. Who would not exchange the galling yoke of sin for the liberty of Christ? Who would prefer the rags of iniquity to the robes of righteousness,—the spirit of heaviness to the garment of praise? And then the future! The obdurate sinner can have no hope; but a fearful looking to for fiery indignation which will devour the adversaries of Christ. But all is bright to the christian's vision. The earth without a bramble or a thorn to pierce or tear—nor reptile, nor beast of prey to sting or devour. Flowers unfading shall surround his path. Thick clusters of the bread of life hang within his reach, and the clear river, the waters of which make glad the city of God, sparkle and roll on for ever and ever. There shall be no sorrow there, for there shall be no sin. No darkness or eclipse shall interrupt the brightness of that endless day which has once dawned upon the glorified heads of the Redeemed. And this state of joy unspeakable shall never cease, for

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less years to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun!"

Again let me urge you to make this choice to-day. The work of the devil is sin—the wages DEATH; the work of God is righteousness, and the reward ETERNAL LIFE! Perhaps ere another year, if Christ does not come in the interim, both he who writes, and ye who read this, may be slumbering in our graves. It will then be too late. But now, now the thing may be done, if set about at once. The blow which is to cut us off from probation, may be, even now, uplifted and ready to fall. Close with the offers of mercy, and let your determination be that of Joshua—"But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord!"

"Poor Old Horse."

BY F. H. BERICK.

I presume all who read this article are familiar with the quaint remark—"Poor old horse, let him die!" Now this expression is said to have originated under the following circumstances:—

A certain person—a mere "niggard"—noted less for sagacity and wisdom than for covetousness, was distinguished, during the latter part of his life, for retrenchment of his expenses. His acts in this direction, and also the disposition that prompted them, was of a decided character. Having done what he could to lessen his expenses in the culinary and other departments connected with the house, he struck upon the idea of learning his horse to live without eating. He commenced the experiment by giving the noble animal, for the first week, but half his regular allowance. The second week he reduced it still more; till, finally, on the fourth week he concluded to give him nothing. "Tiger," for this was his name, who had never been treated so before, but hitherto was "Blithe and Bonny," concluded to stand it no longer, and, bidding farewell to his friends, left the world for the want of something to eat. The owner, who, as we have intimated, was a sordid wretch, coming in just as "Tiger" was breathing his last, muttered, "It is a pity, after I have taken so much pains to learn him to live without eating;" and after a moment's reflection exclaimed, "Poor old horse, let him die!"

The foregoing was suggested to my mind while thinking of the trials and hardships of him who is called to preach the gospel; and also, the demands and expectations of community. He is expected not only to be unlike other men—the laity—but unlike other good men. While they are looked upon as human, and treated as such, he is regarded as a kind of "demi-god;" hence there is more demanded of him. Unlike the heroes of antiquity, he is pressed with demands, but fails to secure the veneration of the multitude. He must not laugh, but be serious and solemn. He should resemble the "livery of autumn," or look, as we may suppose, like a nun when taking the black veil. The countenance should be long, always of a weighty and momentous import; resembling the person who stands trembling, or waits breathlessly, while the judge, with uplifted voice, declares his condemnation, or the jury pronounced the word "guilty!" His voice ought not to be like the voice of others. It must be neither loud nor sharp, but of a [illegible] low, sepulchral tone, like that of "Pluto" the infernal Jupiter, or the king of the "Shades." Ought not to walk too straight or erect, as that would have an air of pride or self-importance; but to incline gently forward, with the chest contracted, the shoulders rounded, and thus to demean himself with humility. Ought never to meddle with secular affairs, or things pertaining to the present world, as that would have a tendency to divert the mind and estrange the heart from God. The whole time should be employed in laboring for the good of others. He should always hold himself in readiness to go at the beck or call of everybody. As he has nothing to engage his attention excepting on the Sabbath, he should, if opportunities offer themselves, preach three or four evenings, and attend as many conference meetings. If any person belonging to the parish is sick, the minister is expected to be the first to call and converse with the sick and dying, and to continue these visits until the matter turns favorably, or terminates fatally.

If, after laboring on the Sabbath, having preached two or three times, beside attending to other duties, he is afflicted with sore throat or lungs, and is nearly down sick, he receives comfort and satisfaction on meeting some of the brethren, who remark—"Well, brother, it is better to wear out than rust out." How comforting!

He must not be influenced by gain. He must preach for just what people will give him; otherwise he would be an hireling. He must live on his scanty pittance, although it does not furnish an ample supply for his wants. If he expresses any anxiety as it regards the matter, he is met by the remark, coming from some of these "six-and-a-quarter-cent-christians," "Trust in God, brother, trust in God, he'll take care of you!" This allays his anxiety (?) With a heavy heart he resumes his labors. He preaches, but there is a something about his ministrations peculiarly impressive. It does not, however, consist in the word spoken, but in the manner of speaking. There is a depression of spirit. He is accosted. "Brother, you seem to be very downcast; is there any trouble?" Having met with the encouraging remark so often, viz., "Trust in God, brother; he'll take care of you," he feels loth to discover the true cause of his dejection, and hence, turns it off by saying, "Not much of anything."

Thus he toils on from day to day, until, in consequence of his labors and discouragements, his health is destroyed, constitution broken; when all we discover is the mere wreck of a man. Who inquires after him now? who supplies the wants of his family? The memory of community is jogged, perhaps, once or twice; those who have shared in his labors, or been blessed under his ministrations, send him twenty-five cents, or perhaps fifty; and, it may be, one or two dollars; but the poor man is soon forgotten, and the world pass on as busily and as heedlessly as ever; the feeling is, "Let him take care of himself, he is as able to work as I am;" and, if he cannot work,—"let others take care of him, I have got as much as I can attend to."

Is it strange that one, while looking at these things, should be reminded of the quaint expression,—"Poor old horse, let him die?" There is something radically wrong about these things. When you ask a man to come and preach to you, are you aware that you, thereby, enter into a contract with him, just as much as though you engaged him to build a house, or do any other work? Don't you know it takes from eight to ten, and perhaps twelve or fifteen dollars a week, to support you and your family? Then how can you, as a church, or you as an individual, let the minister go off with a sum, out of which he must pay his fare, which, when done, leaves him three or four dollars to live on during the week; while you are making from a dollar and a half to three dollars a day, and pay, perhaps, twenty-five or fifty cts. per week toward the support of God's cause.

You say you feel poor and can do no more, when you know that every year is adding to your property; you are worth considerably more to-day than six months ago, and more then than one year since.

Some of you remark—"I don't see why the preachers don't visit us as they used to. We used to have brother A, B, C, etc., but they don't come this way any more; and I heard the other day that Bro. 'so and so' had engaged in trade or gone to work." Now this is not altogether inexplicable, let me tell you; the matter is quite clear. When you send for a preacher to come and visit you, knowing that he is poor, enclose $5, or $10 in an envelope, and send to him; a part of it he can leave with his wife and children, and use the other to pay his fare. You do this, and though you may not always get just the man you want, there are enough [illegible] get, good, talented and faithful brethren who will listen to your call. And when they have labored with you, don't send them away empty, but give to them freely. If you have no money, sell some of your produce and get some. If you have none to sell, go and work out a day or two and raise something to help in spreading the truth.

You pursue this course and I will warrant that you will hear the word of truth preached. Now suppose you try it, make the experiment, but don't forget to supply the wants of those who have left their farms and shops, and pulpits, to preach the unpopular truths you profess to believe. Don't be backward in asking them of their circumstances. There are but few preachers in the field, and if the church does not do her duty there will be fewer still.

You must not think that I have written this on my own account, for it is not so. I have written it because I felt it my duty to do so. So far as I am concerned, I have no disposition to complain. But I would stir you up to duty. Don't, if you want to retain the preachers you have, don't forget their wants. Remember as they travel from place to place, that they need both your sympathy and your money. Now if you heed this lesson, perhaps I will write you another good epistle before long. Farewell.

"All Thy Works Praise Thee."

The lowliest flowers, the violets blue,
Hid where no careless eye can see,
Refreshed by every evening's dew,
Seem but to offer praise anew,
Their Author, unto Thee.

The rocks and hills Thy goodness tell,
As does the veriest forest tree;
Thy praise is echoed through the dell,
And birds and beasts the chorus swell
In giving praise to Thee.

Shall man, who hath the charm of voice,
Forget to bow the humble knee,
Forget the ways of wisdom's choice,
Forget, 'mid blessings, to rejoice
And give all praise to Thee?

Thou giv'st us food, and givest breath,
Thou givest all we have or be,
Our guide through life, our HOPE in death—
The flesh rebels,—the spirit saith,
We'll offer praise to Thee.

No. 3.

We said in the commencement that we did not design to give to the reader so much our own thoughts, as the thoughts of others, touching this question. We purposed to give Bible testimony first, and then wall it around with the testimony of good men of erudition—men of influence—men of sound mind, whose testimony would be weighty.

We have already established the fact from the Scriptures, that women have occupied a public position, both politically and religiously, and that, too, with the sanction of heaven. We have established incontrovertibly, as we believe, by the united testimony of the Bible and learned critics, that women did proclaim the gospel—in other words, did preach; and that is the main object we had in view when we commenced writing these articles. For years we doubted this; we have questioned its propriety; but, after a thorough examination of the subject, we are settled in the belief that women are sometimes called to preach, i. e., to speak "unto men to edification, to exhortation and comfort." We believe that there are women in the church to whom God has imparted this gift of prophecy, and who have failed to exercise it to the extent they ought, because popular opinion was against them. It exposes a female to much reproach. Queen Victoria may sway the sceptre of royalty over England's wide domain; women may lecture on moral reform, temperance and spiritualism; Mrs. Macready may read Shakspeare to large assemblies, and receive the eulogies of the public and the press; but let a woman feel that woe is her if she proclaim not abroad the glad tidings of salvation,—let her voice be heard publicly uttering forth the truths of divine inspiration,—and how ready are the votaries of the world and the christian professor to cry out,—"Impropriety, imprudence, immodesty!"

We know those whose hearts are crushed, whose spirit is sore wounded, because of the oppressor. They feel that God bids them go and labor in his vineyard; their souls feel the burden of the word of the Lord; they seek in vain for peace, and joy, and rest, in other duties; but there is an oppressive power that binds them, against which they feel loth to struggle. Multitudes confess that they have a gift to edify and comfort, but none speak the encouraging word, or allow them a helping hand, to free them from the power of prejudice and oppression [illegible] If they were only [illegible] many would [illegible] there be to say to them, "You ought to exercise your gift;" and encourage them to go forward, ministering the word to others. But it is only a woman, and scarcely one thinks that she is called to such a work. O, the buried talents, which if occupied might win many souls to Christ! The gospel system is a leveler. Male and female are all one in Christ Jesus.

We purpose now to make still stronger our position by further quotations, and we hope it will put to the blush, and to eternal silence, those who talk so largely against female preachers. We quote largely from Dr. A. Clarke, because he was eminent as a linguist, as a Dr. of Divinity, and a christian. In commenting on Ps. 68: 11, which reads thus; "The Lord gave the word, great was the company of those that published it;" he gives the original, and then translates it thus: 'Of the female preachers there was a great host.' "Such," he observes, "is the literal translation of the passage; the reader may make of it what he pleases."

Dr. J. Benson, in his commentary, renders it thus: "Large was the number of the women who published the glad tidings." He says further, that the Hebrew word here rendered, that published it, is in the feminine gender, and therefore refers chiefly to women. Grotius thus explains the passage: "The Lord shall give the word, that is plentiful matter of speaking, so that he would call those which follow the great army of preaching women, viz., victories, or female conquerors." Thus we have the combined testimony of three critics on that passage, that female preachers are specially referred to.

Dr. A. Clarke estimates the influence of one woman to be equal to seven men.

The Rev. H. Woodruff says; "Christian women can talk; and it is thought generally that they are more eloquent, more winning and persuasive, in proportion to their educational advantages, than the other sex. Christian women have souls to save, and their growth in grace is affected by the exercise of their gifts, and in bearing the cross."

Says the Rev. Mr. Pawson; "As to myself, I have long thought it more difficult to prove that women ought not to preach than many imagine. Let any one seriously consider 1 Cor. 11: 5,—'Prophesieth with her head covered.' Now prophesying there has generally been understood to mean preaching. If, then, the women never did preach at all, why did the Lord, by the apostle, give these instructions respecting their heads being covered or uncovered?"

Tendencies of the Times.

BY REV. S. H. PLATT.

Its superficiality and want of principle. Our whole life is superficial!

The tendency of social intercourse and sentiments is, to make a showy and superficial society. To dress well and appear well, is the climax of desired attainment, and the great object of polite education. Our educational system spreads over a vast surface, but, it is to be feared, fails in the thoroughness which ought to characterize it in view of the light and advantages of the times. This tendency has scaled the walls of the Church, and a transient and superficial piety is too often the result.

In literature, the veriest trash, if it be only well seasoned with a certain degree of sickly sentiment, is in great demand. Benevolence is superficial. Many will give liberally; but the name of the donor must be announced in the great congregation and heralded by the daily papers to the extremities of the land.

A want of principle is especially observable! No one knows who to trust! Some Schuyler lays his plans everywhere. We are cheated in quality, weight and measure. We put our money in the bank, and some rascally defaulter pockets it, and starts for Europe. We get our lives or buildings insured, and lo! it is a sham! We take a periodical for the amusement of our children, and it poisons them! We buy a patent drug to heal, warranted "all-healing," "never-failing," "safe and sure," and find it the reverse. We buy village lots, and they prove a speculation. We go to see a sight, and are shown a hoax. No other age could have produced a Barnum! And it is hoped that this may never raise another. The extravagance of the times is a result of this superficiality; and the want of principle is, in part, the consequence of this extravagance. When dress and equipage are made the standard of respectability in any community, it will certainly afford aspirants enough for the honor, who will question the moral character of few schemes, if they only lead to the goal of desire. When the merchant's store costs $200,000, he must needs charge the public with the cost of maintaining his extravagance by an increased profit on his goods. [illegible] glory," himself his only [illegible] when the same extravagance is universal. It is not so easy to find a remedy, for the people must be clothed and fed.

By a recent statement in the New York Journal of Commerce, I learn that, in New York city, nearly $4,000,000 are being expended this season, mostly for decorations! $4,000,000 drawn from the active business capital of a city (as most of this probably is) must be felt somewhere. But the greatest injury is the imitation of this example, by those who have not the means, until want of principle, bankruptcy, and ruin are the consequences. Our increasing extravagance as a nation is ominous of evil at no distant day.

The cost of maintaining a single church in New York city is said to be $22,505 per year. And, the writer adds, there are not more than ten in the city that equal it, but there are three or four that exceed even this amount. We need make no comments!

Its skepticism and pietism.

Never were opposites more closely blended, or in a more anomalous position than now. The man of letters doubts, the statesman doubts, the professional man doubts, the man of little learning doubts, the illiterate doubt, the scientific investigator doubts. So, many doubt but still believe much more than they doubt.

They doubt the Bible, and believe the crazy vagaries of Mormonism. They doubt long settled facts, and heartily throw their credence at the feet of a few rapping and tipping women. They doubt concerning all belief, and yet believe all unbelief. So, while they repudiate all religion, their very pietism compels them to adopt infidelity as their religion, and the demon of doubt as their God.

These tendencies are extreme, and hence are worthy of notice. The pietism of the age may be seized upon by the Church as a most powerful auxiliary in the work of evangelization, while the very skepticism of the day may be bent to the scathing investigation of all erroneous systems, and by the very truthfulness of Christianity may be made its most triumphant vindication.

Only let us see a living Christianity, glowing with the unction of the Holy Ghost, and, as surely as the needle points to the pole, the pietism of the age will be attracted to it, while skepticism will oppose till overpowered by the effulgence of its evidence, and then will come all the more meekly, and sit at the feet of Jesus. O for the shining power of the Holy Ghost! The skepticism of the age is eminently practical, the result of the strong religious influences which exist.

Men have learned that religion is the principle from which springs all that tends to elevate the race; and hence, when atheism has presented its hideous form, they have repulsed it, as the worst enemy of their interests. Hence the advocates of infidelity have been compelled to change their tactics; and now the great humanities of the age are taken under their especial care and claimed as their foster children. While some have openly repudiated the supernatural claims of Christianity, because it has practically failed to do what it has been expected to, others have veiled their hostility under a profession of the most profound reverence for the Bible, but a deeper love of truth! If they love the Bible, they love science more. As if the Bible were antagonistical to scientific truths! The Bible has quite as much reason to fear its friends in this respect, as its foes!

It is sad to see to what an extent hostility to Christianity has reached, sustained as it is by such undeniable evidence. That the most profound philosopher of the age should utterly discard revealed truth, is perhaps not surprising when we recollect under what influences he has lived; but that the theory of Comte should be adopted and heralded through the world as the final climax of philosophical wisdom, by some leading English minds, who should feel as well as know the truth, is deeply to be regretted as indicating the sympathies of the educated intellect of the age. But Combe's Constitution of Man, followed by a large proportion of the works from "Fowler's" pen, is the most dangerous of any system to which we are exposed. The more so, because so much of the good is blended with the evil as to blind the eyes of many, and render the fatal result the more certain. An untold amount of this species of infidelity exists in undetected [illegible] The disciples of Emerson, Parker, [illegible] Davis, etc., are using all their efforts to spread their theories through the land. Good Tidings!

I.

"Behold, I come quickly!" how sweet is that voice!
It is the Good Shepherd, he bids me rejoice;
'Tis music—'tis blessing—'tis gladness to me,—
A captive no longer, I soon shall be free.
It whispers of home—of heaven—of rest,
Of the joys that encircle that land of the blest;
Of trials all past, and glory all gained,
Of sins blotted out, and the sinless attained.

II.

It wakens an echo of voices long gone,
That gladdened my pathway in life's sunny dawn;
Of voices long sealed in the hush of the tomb,
That shall burst forth with shoutings when Jesus shall come.
The shadows shall flee from those "eyes as a flame,"
And the dull orbs of death gather light from the Lamb!
'Twill be spring-time indeed, when our Lord shall return,
And spring shall then "visit the mouldering urn."

III.

Then I'll keep on my journey, nor faint by the way;
I'll sing when the sun shines, when afflicted, I'll pray;
When the st[illegible] rages loudest, then oft'nest I hear
That sweet voice repeating, "Fear not, I am near!"
'Tis lonely and weary, but what's that to me?
The pierced feet have been here, their traces I see;
Enough for the servant to be as his Lord,
Enough to tread meekly where Jesus has trod.

"Choose ye this Day Whom ye will Serve."

After a long period of wanderings, suffering, battles and triumphs, the Israelites were at length enjoying the quiet blessings of the promised land. Every enemy had been overcome, and peace reigned throughout their camp. Then their intrepid leader, the faithful Joshua, who had long led their hosts to fight, but now "waxed old and stricken in age," called the elders of the people together, with the judges and officers, unto Schechem, there to deliver unto them his dying charge. With rapid perspicuity, he touched upon the chief events which characterized the especial providence of God towards this people. The choosing of Abraham; the bondage of the tribes in Egypt; their forced liberation; their miraculous passage through the red sea, and the awful destruction of their pursuers; their victory over the fierce Amorites on the opposite banks of the Jordan; the overthrow, successively, of the Perizzites, the Canaanites, the Hittites, Girgashites, the Hivites and the Jebusites; and, finally, how they were settled in a land for which they labored not, and in cities which they did not build, eating of the fruit of the olive and the vine which they did not plant. He slightly alluded to their acts of idolatry, and urging upon them the necessity of immediate action, he said: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served, that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites in whose land ye dwell." They might make choice in the form of their idolatry, if, after all that the Almighty had done for them, they preferred idol-worship to his service; "but," cried the dying chief, "as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord!" And this decision was the cause of the people signing a covenant to abjure idolatry.

Promptitude in all things good is to be recommended; but especially that step which may decide the eternal fate of man. The evil of procrastination, which day by day gains strength, is one of the greatest hindrances which Satan throws in the way. It is a presumptuous sin, inasmuch as it puts off the acceptance of mercy till to-morrow; which is urged so earnestly upon you to-day. It puts Jesus in the humiliating position of a suitor for favor, instead of the donor of a blessing; and if the devil can keep the sinner in this state long enough, he is quite sure of his deluded victim. The offers of salvation are only good for to-day, not one of them extending till to-morrow. If [illegible] goodness of God doth [illegible] day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts[illegible] [illegible]

The uncertainty of life is such that a man believing in a future of rewards and punishment must be under strong, blind, infatuation, who will fritter away his time, day after day, without seeming to care a pin's point whether he is ready for the imminent change which may any hour come upon him. Were he even guaranteed a long life, it could not justify the spending of a single hour in sin; how much less, when we know not the moment that the dread summons may be given for execution into the hands of the angel of death!

"Choose you this day whom ye will serve." Mankind is divided into two great bodies—those who serve God, and those who serve Satan; the latter, numerically, predominating. The devil gives to many of his votaries the riches, pleasures and gaities of this world, that they may enjoy sin for a season; while to many he is a hard master from the first, where poverty and crime are mixed. Often the means of indulging are squandered before the insane appetite is satisfied. Then comes the toil indeed, the anxiety, the peril and disgrace; the startled, throbbing heart, lest a half accomplished burglary be detected, or a successful robbery be found out. The lurking wretch who prowls about at night, unable to stand the light of day, wasting in mad debauch the dollars for which he has periled his own life, and sacrificed, perhaps, the lives of others, could bear testimony to the dreadful slavery of Satan's yoke. The wealthy roue, with an inexhaustible supply of wealth, at length with broken constitution gives up the chase of pleasure; not because he ceases to love it, but because his enfeebled body, trembling upon the grave, will not move another step in obedience to the vitiated will.

In the sick chamber through the long sleepless night, what mental suffering the patient must endure, who, when he set out in life, did not choose the service of the Lord. He sees the days of his prime gone to waste, and nothing left but an enfeebled, premature old man, without a ray of hope. He may repent, perhaps, and be accepted, too,—who knows? but oh, what danger and audacity lie in the putting off of a day of penitence to the desperate chance of a death-bed repentance! Where one sinner has a dying bed, or a sane exit from the stage of life, an hundred are summoned to their grave.

"No reckoning made, but sent to their account,
With all their imperfections on their head."

Then the happiness of the wicked is short, uncertain, vain, and impure. "Knowest thou not this of old since man was placed upon earth, that the triumph of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment?"—Job 20: 4, 5. "And I will say unto my soul, Soul, thou hast goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee!"—Luke 12: 19, 20. What a fearful interruption of the contemplated season of luxurious repose. "Behold thou hast made my days as an handbreadth; and mine age as nothing before thee: verily, every man at his best estate is altogether vanity. Surely every man walketh in a vain show; surely they are disquieted in vain; he heapeth up riches and knoweth not who shall gather them."—Ps. 39: 5, 6. Their happiness is derived from worldly prosperity; Ps. 73: 3, 4, 7; flattery; Isa. 22: 13; drunkenness; Isa. 5: 11; vain pleasure; Job 21: 12, and successful oppression; Hab. 1: 15. These are the impure sources, and the streams must be polluted.

Again, let us consider to what this pleasure leads. "Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and the end of that mirth is heaviness."—Prov. 14: 13. How true is this! When the hapless creatures have abandoned virtue, and thrown themselves madly into the seething vortex of dissipation, the cheek may flush and the eye sparkle with unhealthy excitement, and the laugh may sound gay and careless; but oh, if the eye could pierce the dark caverns of that heart, what a scene of despair and desolation would appear! It is a painted tomb; and as well bring gladness out of it, as attempt to beat a reveille on a muffled drum. And the end of all this is death.

But let us turn and view the happiness of saints. It is entirely in God. "Who have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee. My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever."—Ps. 73: 25, 26. This foundation is sure, to begin with; and every layer in the stable structure partakes of the same enduring quality. This happiness is derived from fear of God; Ps. 128: 1, 2; trust in God; Phil. 4: 6, 7; obedience; Ps. 40: 8; [illegible] 15: 17; hope in the Lord; Ps. 146: 5; hope of glory; Rom. 5: 2; mutual love; Ps. 133: 1; Divine chastening; Job 5: 17; [illegible] [illegible] Christ; 2 Cor. 12: 10; [illegible] mercy for the poor; Prov. 3: 13; finding and retaining wisdom; Pro. 3: 13, 18. These fountains are pure, and the streams are clear and life-giving.

"Choose you this day whom ye will serve." All the hollow pleasure that the wicked can have, or the sorrow which the righteous shall know, is confined to this brief span of existence. And yet amid persecution and poverty, the peace which often pervades the soul of the christian is in itself preferable to all the wild excitement of folly. Who would not exchange the galling yoke of sin for the liberty of Christ? Who would prefer the rags of iniquity to the robes of righteousness,—the spirit of heaviness to the garment of praise? And then the future! The obdurate sinner can have no hope; but a fearful looking to for fiery indignation which will devour the adversaries of Christ. But all is bright to the christian's vision. The earth without a bramble or a thorn to pierce or tear—nor reptile, nor beast of prey to sting or devour. Flowers unfading shall surround his path. Thick clusters of the bread of life hang within his reach, and the clear river, the waters of which make glad the city of God, sparkle and roll on for ever and ever. There shall be no sorrow there, for there shall be no sin. No darkness or eclipse shall interrupt the brightness of that endless day which has once dawned upon the glorified heads of the Redeemed. And this state of joy unspeakable shall never cease, for

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less years to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun!

Again let me urge you to make this choice to-day. The work of the devil is sin—the wages DEATH; the work of God is righteousness, and the reward ETERNAL LIFE! Perhaps ere another year, if Christ does not come in the interim, both he who writes, and ye who read this, may be slumbering in our graves. It will then be too late. But now, now the thing may be done, if set about at once. The blow which is to cut us off from probation, may be, even now, uplifted and ready to fall. Close with the offers of mercy, and let your determination be that of Joshua—"But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord!"

"Poor Old Horse."

BY F. H. BERICK.

I presume all who read this article are familiar with the quaint remark—"Poor old horse, let him die!" Now this expression is said to have originated under the following circumstances:—

A certain person—a mere "niggard"—noted less for sagacity and wisdom than for covetousness, was distinguished, during the latter part of his life, for retrenchment of his expenses. His acts in this direction, and also the disposition that prompted them, was of a decided character. Having done what he could to lessen his expenses in the culinary and other departments connected with the house, he struck upon the idea of learning his horse to live without eating. He commenced the experiment by giving the noble animal, for the first week, but half his regular allowance. The second week he reduced it still more; till, finally, on the fourth week he concluded to give him nothing. "Tiger," for this was his name, who had never been treated so before, but hitherto was "Blithe and Bonny," concluded to stand it no longer, and, bidding farewell to his friends, left the world for the want of something to eat. The owner, who, as we have intimated, was a sordid wretch, coming in just as "Tiger" was breathing his last, muttered, "It is a pity, after I have taken so much pains to learn him to live without eating;" and after a moment's reflection exclaimed, "Poor old horse, let him die!"

The foregoing was suggested to my mind while thinking of the trials and hardships of him who is called to preach the gospel; and also, the demands and expectations of community. He is expected not only to be unlike other men—the laity—but unlike other good men. While they are looked upon as human, and treated as such, he is regarded as a kind of "demi-god;" hence there is more demanded of him. Unlike the heroes of antiquity, he is pressed with demands, but fails to secure the veneration of the multitude. He must not laugh, but be serious and solemn. He should resemble the "livery of autumn," or look, as we may suppose, like a man when taking the black veil. The countenance should be long, always of a weighty and momentous import; resembling the person who stands trembling, or waits breathlessly, while the judge, with uplifted voice, declares his condemnation, or the jury pronounced the word "guilty!" His voice ought not to be like the voice of others. It must be neither loud nor sharp, but of a low, sepulchral tone, like that of "Pluto" the infernal Jupiter, or the king of the "Shades." Ought not to walk too straight or erect, as that would have an air of pride or self-importance; but to incline gently forward, with the chest contracted, the shoulders rounded, and thus to demean himself with humility. Ought never to meddle with secular affairs, or things pertaining to the present world, as that would have a tendency to divert the mind and estrange the heart from God. The whole time should be employed in laboring for the good of others. He should always hold himself in readiness to go at the beck or call of everybody. As he has nothing to engage his attention excepting on the Sabbath, he should, if opportunities offer themselves, preach three or four evenings, and attend as many conference meetings. If any person belonging to the parish is sick, the minister is expected to be the first to call and converse with the sick and dying, and to continue these visits until the matter turns favorably, or terminates fatally.

If, after laboring on the Sabbath, having preached two or three times, beside attending to other duties, he is afflicted with sore throat or lungs, and is nearly down sick, he receives comfort and satisfaction on meeting some of the brethren, who remark—"Well, brother, it is better to wear out than rust out." How comforting!

He must not be influenced by gain. He must preach for just what people will give him; otherwise he would be an hireling. He must live on his scanty pittance, although it does not furnish an ample supply for his wants. If he expresses any anxiety as it regards the matter, he is met by the remark, coming from some of these "six-and-a-quarter-cent-christians," "Trust in God, brother, trust in God, he'll take care of you!" This allays his anxiety (?) With a heavy heart he resumes his labors. He preaches, but there is a something about his ministrations peculiarly impressive. It does not, however, consist in the word spoken, but in the manner of speaking. There is a depression of spirit. He is accosted, "Brother, you seem to be very downcast; is there any trouble?" Having met with the encouraging remark so often, viz., "Trust in God, brother; he'll take care of you," he feels loth to discover the true cause of his dejection, and hence, turns it off by saying, "Not much of anything."

Thus he toils on from day to day, until, in consequence of his labors and discouragements, his health is destroyed, constitution broken; when all we discover is the mere wreck of a man. Who inquires after him now? who supplies the wants of his family? The memory of community is jogged, perhaps, once or twice; those who have shared in his labors, or been blessed under his ministrations, send him twenty-five cents, or perhaps fifty; and, it may be, one or two dollars; but the poor man is soon forgotten, and the world pass on as busily and as heedlessly as ever; the feeling is, "Let him take care of himself, he is as able to work as I am;" and, if he cannot work,—"let others take care of him, I have got as much as I can attend to."

Is it strange that one, while looking at these things, should be reminded of the quaint expression,—"Poor old horse, let him die?" There is something radically wrong about these things. When you ask a man to come and preach to you, are you aware that you, thereby, enter into a contract with him, just as much as though you engaged him to build a house, or do any other work? Don't you know it takes from eight to ten, and perhaps twelve or fifteen dollars a week, to support you and your family? Then how can you, as a church, or you as an individual, let the minister go off with a sum, out of which he must pay his fare, which, when done, leaves him three or four dollars to live on during the week; while you are making from a dollar and a half to three dollars a day, and pay, perhaps, twenty-five or fifty cts. per week toward the support of God's cause.

You say you feel poor and can do no more, when you know that every year is adding to your property; you are worth considerably more to-day than six months ago, and more then than one year since.

Some of you remark—"I don't see why the preachers don't visit us as they used to. We used to have brother A, B, C, etc., but they don't come this way any more; and I heard the other day that Bro. 'so and so' had engaged in trade or gone to work." Now this is not altogether inexplicable, let me tell you; the matter is quite clear. When you send for a preacher to come and visit you, knowing that he is poor, enclose $5, or $10 in an envelope, and hand to him; a part of it he can leave with his wife and children, and use the other to pay his fare. You do this, and though you may not always get just the man you want, there are enough you can get, good, talented and faithful brethren who will listen to your call. And when they have labored with you. don't send them away empty, but give to them freely. If you have no money, sell some of your produce and get some. If you have none to sell, go and work out a day or two and raise something to help in spreading the truth.

You pursue this course and I will warrant that you will hear the word of truth preached. Now suppose you try it, make the experiment, but don't forget to supply the wants of those who have left their farms and shops, and pulpits, to preach the unpopular truths you profess to believe. Don't be backward in asking them of their circumstances. There are but few preachers in the field, and if the church does not do her duty there will be fewer still.

You must not think that I have written this on my own account, for it is not so. I have written it because I felt it my duty to do so. So far as I am concerned, I have no disposition to complain. But I would stir you up to duty. Don't, if you want to retain the preachers you have, don't forget their wants. Remember as they travel from place to place, that they need both your sympathy and your money. Now if you heed this lesson, perhaps I will write you another good epistle before long. Farewell.

"All Thy Works Praise Thee."

The lowliest flowers, the violets blue,
Hid where no careless eye can see,
Refreshed by every evening's dew,
Seem but to offer praise anew,
Their Author, unto Thee.

The rocks and hills Thy goodness tell,
As does the veriest forest tree;
Thy praise is echoed through the dell,
And birds and beasts the chorus swell
In giving praise to Thee.

Shall man, who hath the charm of voice,
Forget to bow the humble knee,
Forget the ways of wisdom's choice,
Forget, 'mid blessings, to rejoice
And give all praise to Thee?

Thou giv'st us food, and givest breath,
Thou givest all we have or be,
Our guide through life, our hope in death—
The flesh rebels,—the spirit saith,
We'll offer praise to Thee.

Woman's Position in the Church.

No. 3.

We said in the commencement that we did not design to give to the reader so much our own thoughts, as the thoughts of others, touching this question. We purposed to give Bible testimony first, and then wall it around with the testimony of good men of erudition—men of influence—men of sound mind, whose testimony would be weighty.

We have already established the fact from the Scriptures, that women have occupied a public position, both politically and religiously, and that, too, with the sanction of heaven. We have established incontrovertibly, as we believe, by the united testimony of the Bible and learned critics, that women did proclaim the gospel—in other words, did preach; and that is the main object we had in view when we commenced writing these articles. For years we doubted this; we have questioned its propriety; but, after a thorough examination of the subject, we are settled in the belief that women are sometimes called to preach, i. e., to speak "unto men to edification, to exhortation and comfort." We believe that there are women in the church to whom God has imparted this gift of prophecy, and who have failed to exercise it to the extent they ought, because popular opinion was against them. It exposes a female to much reproach. Queen Victoria may sway the sceptre of royalty over England's wide domain; women may lecture on moral reform, temperance and spiritualism; Mrs. Macready may read Shakspeare to large assemblies, and receive the eulogies of the public and the press; but let a woman feel that woe is her if she proclaim not abroad the glad tidings of salvation,—let her voice be heard publicly uttering forth the truths of divine inspiration,—and how ready are the votaries of the world and the christian professor to cry out,—"Impropriety, imprudence, immodesty!"

We know those whose hearts are crushed, whose spirit is sore wounded, because of the oppressor. They feel that God bids them go and labor in his vineyard; their souls feel the burden of the word of the Lord; they seek in vain for peace, and joy, and rest, in other duties; but there is an oppressive power that binds them, against which they feel loth to struggle. Multitudes confess that they have a gift to edify and comfort, but none speak the encouraging word, or allow them a helping hand, to free them from the power of prejudice and op[illegible] [illegible] If they [illegible], many would there be to say to them, "You ought to exercise your gift;" and encourage them to go forward, ministering the word to others. But it is only a woman, and scarcely one thinks that she is called to such a work. O, the buried talents, which if occupied might win many souls to Christ! The gospel system is a leveler. Male and female are all one in Christ Jesus.

We purpose now to make still stronger our position by further quotations, and we hope it will put to the blush, and to eternal silence, those who talk so largely against female preachers. We quote largely from Dr. A. Clarke, because he was eminent as a linguist, as a Dr. of Divinity, and a christian. In commenting on Ps. 68: 11, which reads thus; "The Lord gave the word, great was the company of those that published it;" he gives the original, and then translates it thus: 'Of the female preachers there was a great host." "Such," he observes, "is the literal translation of the passage; the reader may make of it what he pleases."

Dr. J. Benson, in his commentary, renders it thus: "Large was the number of the women who published the glad tidings." He says further, that the Hebrew word here rendered, that published it, is in the feminine gender, and therefore refers chiefly to women. Grotius thus explains the passage: "The Lord shall give the word, that is plentiful matter of speaking, so that he would call those which follow the great army of preaching women, viz., victories, or female conquerors." Thus we have the combined testimony of three critics on that passage, that female preachers are specially referred to.

Dr. A. Clarke estimates the influence of one woman to be equal to seven men.

The Rev. H. Woodruff says; "Christian women can talk; and it is thought generally that they are more eloquent, more winning and persuasive, in proportion to their educational advantages, than the other sex. Christian women have souls to save, and their growth in grace is affected by the exercise of their gifts, and in bearing the cross."

Says the Rev. Mr. Pawson; "As to myself, I have long thought it more difficult to prove that women ought not to preach than many imagine. Let any one seriously consider 1 Cor. 11: 5,—'Prophesieth with her head covered.' Now prophesying there has generally been understood to mean preaching. If, then, the women never did preach at all, why did the Lord, by the apostle, give these instructions respecting their heads being covered or uncovered?"

Tendencies of the Times.

BY REV. S. H. PLATT.

Its superficiality and want of principle. Our whole life is superficial!

The tendency of social intercourse and sentiments is, to make a showy and superficial society. To dress well and appear well, is the climax of desired attainment, and the great object of polite education. Our educational system spreads over a vast surface, but, it is to be feared, fails in the thoroughness which ought to characterize it in view of the light and advantages of the times. This tendency has scaled the walls of the Church, and a transient and superficial piety is too often the result.

In literature, the veriest trash, if it be only well seasoned with a certain degree of sickly sentiment, is in great demand. Benevolence is superficial. Many will give liberally; but the name of the donor must be announced in the great congregation and heralded by the daily papers to the extremities of the land.

A want of principle is especially observable! No one knows who to trust! Some Schuyler lays his plans everywhere. We are cheated in quality, weight and measure. We put our money in the bank, and some rascally defaulter pockets it, and starts for Europe. We get our lives or buildings insured, and lo! it is a sham! We take a periodical for the amusement of our children, and it poisons them! We buy a patent drug to heal, warranted "all-healing" "never-failing," "safe and sure," and find it the reverse. We buy village lots, and they prove a speculation. We go to see a sight, and are shown a hoax. No other age could have produced a Barnum! And it is hoped that this may never raise another. The extravagance of the times is a result of this superficiality; and the want of principle is, in part, the consequence of this extravagance. When dress and equipage are made the standard of respectability in any community, it will certainly afford aspirants enough for the honor, who will question the moral character of few schemes, if they only lead to the goal of desire. When the merchant's store costs $300,000, he must needs charge the public with the cost of sustaining his extravagance, by an increased profit on his goods. [illegible] "glory," himself his only [illegible] when the same extravagance is [illegible]? It is not so easy to find a remedy, for the people must be clothed and fed.

By a recent statement in the New York Journal of Commerce, I learn that, in New York city, nearly $4,000,000 are being expended this season, mostly for decorations! $4,000,000 drawn from the active business capital of a city (as most of this probably is) must be felt somewhere. But the greatest injury is the imitation of this example, by those who have not the means, until want of principle, bankruptcy, and ruin are the consequences. Our increasing extravagance as a nation is ominous of evil at no distant day.

The cost of maintaining a single church in New York city is said to be $22,505 per year. And, the writer adds, there are not more than ten in the city that equal it, but there are three or four that exceed even this amount. We need make no comments!

Its skepticism and pietism.

Never were opposites more closely blended, or in a more anomalous position than now. The man of letters doubts, the statesman doubts, the professional man doubts, the man of little learning doubts, the illiterate doubt, the scientific investigator doubts. So, many doubt but still believe much more than they doubt.

They doubt the Bible, and believe the crazy vagaries of Mormonism. They doubt long settled facts, and heartily throw their credence at the feet of a few rapping and tipping women. They doubt concerning all belief, and yet believe all unbelief. So, while they repudiate all religion, their very pietism compels them to adopt infidelity as their religion, and the demon of doubt as their God.

These tendencies are extreme, and hence are worthy of notice. The pietism of the age may be seized upon by the Church as a most powerful auxiliary in the work of evangelization, while the very skepticism of the day may be bent to the soothing investigation of all erroneous systems, and by the very truthfulness of Christianity may be made its most triumphant vindication.

Only let us see a living Christianity, glowing with the unction of the Holy Ghost, and, as surely as the needle points to the pole, the pietism of the age will be attracted to it, while skepticism will oppose till overpowered by the effulgence of its evidence, and then will come all the more meekly, and sit at the feet of Jesus. O for the shining power of the Holy Ghost! The skepticism of the age is eminently practical, the result of the strong religious influences which exist.

Men have learned that religion is the principle from which springs all that tends to elevate the man; and hence, when atheism has presented its hideous form, they have repulsed it, as the worst enemy of their interests. Hence the advocates of infidelity have been compelled to change their tactics; and now the great humanities of the age are taken under their especial care and claimed as their foster children. While some have openly repudiated the supernatural claims of Christianity, because it has practically failed to do what it has been expected to, others have veiled their hostility under a profession of the most profound reverence for the Bible, but a deeper love of truth! If they love the Bible, they love science more. As if the Bible were antagonistical to scientific truths! The Bible has quite as much reason to fear its friends in this respect, as its foes!

It is sad to see to what an extent hostility to Christianity has reached, sustained as it is by such undeniable evidence. That the most profound philosopher of the age should utterly discard revealed truth, is perhaps not surprising when we recollect under what influences he has lived; but that the theory of Comte should be adopted and heralded through the world as the final climax of philosophical wisdom, by some leading English minds, who should feel as well as know the truth, is deeply to be regretted as indicating the sympathies of the educated intellect of the age. But Combe's Constitution of Man, followed by a large proportion of the [illegible] ler's" pen, is the most dangerous of any system to which we are exposed. The more so, because so much of the good is blended with the evil as to blind the eyes of many, and render the fatal result the more certain. An untold amount of this species of infidelity exists in undetected quarters. The disciples of Emerson, Parker, Owen, Davis, etc., are using all their efforts to spread their theories through the land. [illegible] to German rationalism, French [illegible] native Mormonism, and [illegible]

For the Crisis.

The Storm is Coming!

Professors are rejoicing that peace has been declared between France and Austria. Nations were preparing, men were looking, and some hoping, for war. Is this "peace" secure? Recently there was a fire in Boston; it was said to be extinguished: the engines were ordered home; but before [illegible] away, the flames burst forth again, and once more the firemen rushed to the scene. "I think the fires of war are not" quenched, only choked for a while to burst forth with better vengeance, it may be in a new spot, but surely the fire is burning; else what mean such things as we read of daily, like these:—

"A foreign correspondent of the London Times says: 'A gentleman, who had just arrived from Italy, states that he saw the people [illegible] the bust of the French Emperor through the kennels of the town.'" —"Louis Napoleon has hastened to assure England that he means her no harm, but the tone of the Paris press has been such as to cause a decline in the English funds. Louis Napoleon seems determined to throw upon England the onus of keeping up the agitation which her fears of a French invasion have created."—"Garibaldi is determined to keep the Italian revolution in motion, if possible, and it is not certain that if the affairs of Southern Europe can be arranged permanently between France and Austria, England will not be the next object of attack by the French. The army of France will hardly be content with the Italian peace if some new channel for their martial energies be not opened. They are disappointed as well as the Italians by the abrupt termination of the late war, and it may be necessary to mobilize them in some other direction in order to keep them long quiet. It is thought by some that Louis Napoleon was disgusted with the small amount of substantial aid given to his armies in the war, and therefore made terms with Austria such as he would not have taken under other circumstances. It is the opinion of others that he made an understanding with Russia that in consideration of his terminating a contest which might have given Kossuth power to revolutionize Hungary if it had been continued, Russia would agree not to interfere in any war he might choose to wage against England, and to prevent any interference on the part of Prussia. If such an arrangement has been effected, France is in a commanding position against England."—"France has an account to settle with her neighbor, on the score of the loss of her Indian Empire, and the war waged upon the revolution and the Empire.—Waterloo remains to be avenged, and, in spite of all the smooth things Louis Napoleon is saying to his enforced ally, but natural enemy, we believe he will yet be the avenger of France upon England."

The next expedition of the French army is said to be [illegible].

"One of the best informed correspondents of the [illegible] papers writes from Italy that, amongst general officers an opinion prevails that the war which has terminated is but the prologue to another. This impression tallies with that expressed by a French general officer, to an Italian at [illegible] the other day—'Now we have done with Lombardy, we hope that the Emperor will lead us to Lombard street.' Nor do these sentiments differ from those attributed to Napoleon the III: 'Do not believe from the past that I have forgotten or forgiven the combinations devised by the English against my uncle. The day may not be far distant when I shall be able to prove it to you.' My informant was an ex-minister of the Prince Napoleon during the republic, and unless his Majesty's sentiments have changed, the Old Lady of Threadneedle street and her neighbor of Lombard street must look to their strong boxes."—"The English journals and English statesmen continue to agitate the subject of national defences."

The London Times, in referring to the announcement in the French official papers that "the Emperor had decided that the army and navy shall be restored to a peace footing with the least possible delay," says:

"We shall, of course, in due time follow the example of our neighbor. We are, however, much behind him in the completeness of our peace establishment. There are many specks of rust yet to be rubbed away, and many mouldering works yet to be repaired. But these are merely the ordinary matters of defence. Having no ideas of aggression, and being too careless of remote possibilities, we have let many things run into disrepair. The careful householder paints and papers periodically, and we have been stimulated by recent events to survey our premises and make good dilapidations. Happily, there is now no further need that this should be done in haste. We have handed the consideration of these matters over to a commission, which is about to decide what is the permanent defensive establishment these islands require in times of peace, as the basis whence, upon an emergency, a full war establishment might be speedily built up. By the report of that commission we shall be guided, and we congratulate ourselves and our readers that we may hereafter deal with those questions dispassionately as points of moral engineering or strategic science, and without that [illegible] England [illegible] are in danger of being, at an early day, invaded by an enemy."

This all shows that, though they rejoice at peace, they keep on preparing for future war. The Emperor of Austria, said, in his address to his army on the proclamation [illegible] bravery [illegible] had [illegible] only on [illegible] in [illegible] He is looking for war, and [illegible] the reason? [illegible] may well be [illegible]

[illegible] correspondent of the London [illegible] Hungarians who [illegible]

The [illegible] of earth are [illegible] coming upon them; they are in [illegible]

[illegible] read with [illegible] They fear the [illegible] ing of [illegible] The [illegible] name [illegible] of whose martyrs for liberty cries from the ground, and from the frozen regions of Siberia, to their fellow brethren now dreaming of freedom, frightens the Czar of Russia. The hills and valleys of Hungary re-echo threats of vengeance against the Austrian vulture. The noble homes of liberty of that downtrodden country are disheartened, but still the hope of freedom inspires them to wait for revenge. From the mountains and plains of Piedmont and Sardinia, from other Italian states, the warning cry of Freedom is borne on the passing breeze, and Pope Pius IX. trembles for his seat, whilst in whining tones he beseeches through his Cardinal, Antonelli, for France and Austria to crush the struggling people and destroy their hopes of freedom.

The London Times says in regard to his circular:—

"The Sovereign Pontiff has appealed to Europe in a diplomatic note. The manifesto is not quite in the Hildebrand vein. It no longer thunders, and threatens, and hurls excommunications, and awakens sleeping claims. But, if its tone is less haughty, its purport is not less that of the unchanging and unchangeable policy of the Holy See. It claims all things, and it recedes from nothing. It accepts no responsibility, and it renounces no atom of power. It is like the cry of a weak and wounded beast of prey. It complains of the interference of stronger powers with the gratification of its instincts; but it bears no remorse for the past, and no promise for the future. In such a document we might have expected some broad view of the Pope's position as the head of the Catholic Church. The circumstances of the moment are such as to invite a serious comment. The honorary presidency of the new Italian Confederation has just been offered to the acceptance of Pio Nono. Desolation reigns at Perugia, and the half-heretical Switzers of the Papal Guard are yet red-handed from the slaughter of the orthodox subjects of the great Father of Christendom. Austria and France may be supposed to be meditating a retreat from the abnormal position which they have so long held in the states of the church. An opportunity has offered for exchanging a small material sovereignty for a great mortal empire, and under the guidance of a bold and enlightened man, the Popedom, which now for the tenth time appears to be in the crisis of its fate, might have come forth revivified, and stronger than ever it has been in these modern days. This manifesto, however, tells us that no such dreams as once passed over the mind of Pius IX. in the days of his manhood, ever now recur to him in his obstinate and unpitying old age. He makes no apology for the massacres committed by his troops; he gives out no hope to his ill-ruled people. He satisfies himself, by a solemn protest, all interference with the continuance of his weary and wasting system of tyranny, and he invokes the assistance and protection of all the great European Powers to enable him to do what he likes with his own.

We can quite appreciate the difficulty of France and Austria in this matter. No person is more unreasonable to deal with than a man who is ready to stand still and be a martyr, but who makes it a point of conscience to continue to martyrize others. Pio Nino cannot, in his conscience, prevent that cloud of ecclesiastical locusts from devouring the Roman people, and he cannot withdraw his countenance from the kidnapping of Jews and the sack and pillage of Italian cities; but Pio Nino is quite content to die upon the steps of the Vatican if either Napoleon III. or Francis Joseph should wish to put him to death. They may break him, but they shall not bend him. They may "demand from him indispensable reforms in the states," but he will refuse to do anything except to submit to death or exile—edifying the Catholic world with the exhibition of a Pope persecuted by the two eldest sons of the Church. Now, of course, this is precisely what no one wishes to do. No one out of Rome has any desire to injure a hair of the head of this obstinate old man.

But so long as the French remain to protect him he will, by his ecclesiastics and his bravos, drain the country and destroy the people; and, if the French go away, the people, exasperated beyond all moderation, will probably expel him. This is the dilemma. Perhaps the solution may be found in the formation of a confederate Italian army, which may be strong enough to be guided by moderate counsels, and may be trusted to repress any violent reaction when the foreign troops are withdrawn. But, however this may be, the present position of France in Rome is too humiliating to be long endured by a high spirited and civilized nation, whose sympathies, when properly touched, seldom failed to be excited by unmerited oppression. The Emperor must be anxious to find some way out of this most aggravated difficulty; and every lay Frenchman would in his heart be glad to see the Roman garrison in Paris, and all Roman questions left to be settled between the Pope and his people. How it may end no man can foresee, but, in every event, we have great cause to congratulate ourselves that we Englishmen have no art or part in the matter."

How thankful we are that we are not now "kings." Our King will reign righteously. His subjects will never be oppressed by him. None can hurt or make them afraid. As we look at the world and see what a condition it is in, how can we but wish for our King to come soon? When men are not at war, they are preparing for it. He who makes the best improvements for killing his fellow men, [illegible] the most fame and money. In the patent office at Washington [illegible] of [illegible] that load themselves [illegible] affixes are to [illegible] which [illegible] [illegible] of revolvers, rapid shooting rifles, and many [illegible] revolving pistols, [illegible] killing [illegible] is enough to make me shudder to think what havoc would [illegible] from the use of these tools of Satan in time of necessity.

"Captain Dahlgren, U. S. A., has proved one of his best guns, and states that it does good execution at the distance of two thousand yards, which is the distance at which such effect was reported of the rifle guns at the battle of Solferino. The boat gun carries an oblong twelve pound ball, and is of the same calibre, probably, as the French field guns."

"The storm is coming;" but after it is over there will be a calm. No more violence, war or sorrow on earth then. Let it come. The ship of Zion will ride safely over the raging billows. Our Father is at the helm. The Captain of our salvation commands, and we shall be safe aboard, and arrive "home at last."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 31, 1859.

Our Western Tour.

We parted with our readers at the close of the interesting meetings at Sandy Hill, Aug. 1st. The 2nd of Aug. we started for our appointment at Seneca Falls. After passing through a beautiful farming country, of rich fields and many pleasant villages and cities, among which are Saratoga, where we spent some hours at the springs, Schenectady, Utica, Syracuse, Auburn, Cayuga and its beautiful lake, we arrived at our next field of operations. We would say in passing, that we think Auburn the most delightful place through which we have passed in our travels in the state of New York.

Seneca Falls, we should think, has some four or five thousand inhabitants, and does an extensive business in iron works, especially pumps. They also make steam fire-engines, and a steam plough, or spading machine, for the western prairies, which tears up nine feet in width at each furrow. They have excellent water privileges here. The Seneca and Cayuga canal passes through the place, and the Auburn and Canandaigua Branch of the N. Y. Central R. R.

Our Brn. and Srs. have passed through some discouraging trials in this place, and at times have been almost overwhelmed by the enemy; but notwithstanding all their trials, some have held fast, determined to endure to the end and obtain the prize. Those things which had caused the trials of the faithful ones, had also produced considerable prejudice in the place among the people generally, so that but few came at first but those who understood and loved the blessed hope. We began our meetings at Advent Hall, and continued there till Saturday evening, when it became apparent that our place would be too small to hold the people during the remainder of the meetings; accordingly Union Hall, the largest in the place, was engaged, where we continued over two Lord's days, and every evening during the intervening week. The interest continued to advance from the commencement to the close, and on the last day it was said to be the best meeting they ever enjoyed.

During the week, while examining the Bible doctrine of life only through Christ, several asked questions at the close of the discourses, interposing their objections, which only aided to elicit the truth more fully. On the last Saturday evening we had a very earnest and exciting time, when the victory turned fully in favor of the truth. Our subject was future punishment, and after examining all that the apostle Paul wrote on the subject, we summed up the evidence, and found no hint that he believed in the doctrine of eternal misery, but expressed himself very clearly to the contrary, showing that "the wages of sin is DEATH." As Paul declares he "kept back nothing that was profitable," and has kept back the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and eternal misery, we concluded such doctrines were not profitable. We then inquired if there were any in the audience who thought Paul taught the doctrine of eternal torment, when one man arose and stood alone in the large congregation. We asked the gentleman to show cause of dissent from all others present, and to point out the Scripture in which Paul taught the doctrine of eternal suffering? He said he would do it at "a proper time." We replied, this is a proper time; but he utterly refused to show the passage in which Paul expressed the idea that the wicked will be eternally miserable. We soon found this objector was one of the prominent preachers in the place, who had, but a short time since, preached eight sermons on the rich man and Lazarus, to prove the truth of the popular theology. At the close of the meeting, a gentleman came to the desk and said, "I am sorry you did not press the Elder more earnestly to give his reason for believing that Paul taught the eternal suffering of the wicked. I am a member of his church, but I think he ought to [illegible] you [illegible] till you are [illegible] We [illegible] the Elder is [illegible] view our discourses.

[illegible] Lord's day meeting we met at 1 o'clock for a love feast and had a very heavenly season. Brn. were in from Auburn, Geneva, So. Butler and other places, to enjoy the feast with us. In the evening about sixty sat down to the table of the Lord, and we truly felt that it was good to be there. The Lord gave us a glorious victory, and "peace like a river." The scene will not be soon forgotten by those present. Quite a number of the members of other churches enjoyed the sacrament with us, and expressed an earnest desire to have the meetings continued, as they now saw the harmony of the Scriptures as never before, and were satisfied that we were not "modern heathen," as denominated by the Elder.

At the close of the meeting we found several under conviction, who appeared to be decided to serve the Lord. We talked with one who was said to be an infidel, but we found that the reason why he was such, was because he could not believe in the doctrine of eternal misery.

So far as our information extends, we have found the majority of infidels are made such by the preaching of eternal torment. The doctrine of the destruction of the wicked has no such effect, but on the contrary, leads men to repentance, from the fact they can see it is a merciful act to put the wicked out of misery, by taking away their lives, rather than to cause them to live in eternal suffering. In every place where we have presented the Bible view of this subject, we have seen happy results, and have felt the sweet approving influence of God's Holy Spirit. This was emphatically the case at Seneca Falls. The truth has taken strong hold of many minds in this place. May the Lord enable them to remain steadfast, endure to the end, and be saved. We had a pleasant interview with Bro. Wm. Ingmire, who lives in this place, and will preach occasionally as his strength will admit.

Monday, 15th, we went to Rochester and preached at the Brick Chapel, which was well filled with an attentive audience. We were very pleasantly entertained at Dr. Narramore's. While at R., we formed a pleasant acquaintance with Bro. P. A. Smith, who is a faithful and energetic laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, and whose efforts are much blessed. Tuesday evening we preached at East Shelby, one of his fields of labor, where we found some true christians, who had been raised up by his labors. The house was full, and another congregation listened at the windows and doors. We were kindly entertained at Bro. Grinnell's, who, with his companion, embraced Christ and the truth under Bro. Smith's preaching, and are firmly established in the Christian's pathway.

On our way to E. Shelby, we ran up to the great "Thunder of waters," and listened awhile to its deafening roar, bathing in its spray, beneath the frightful precipice, over which pours the vast volume of waters flowing from lake Erie to lake Ontario. We felt our weakness as we gazed at the resistless power of this vast cataract, and the terrible, boiling foam where it plunges into the awful chasm. A little below the falls, we crossed the stream in a row boat, and notwithstanding all the skill of our guide in directing us among the rapids, the angry waters leaped into our boat as we were tossed about upon its foaming waves, thus saying, beware how you trespass upon my rights and trifle with my powers. Just below us, far above the deep, was stretched the cable over which Mons. Blondin walks for the amusement of the people and the profits arising from his daring deeds. A little further down is the great suspension bridge, spanning the broad river at a dizzy height above, and connecting the pride of America with the dignity of John Bull. This bridge is a noble structure, on the top of which passes the ponderous rail-way teams, and beneath, carriages and foot passengers. We paid twenty-five cents to walk across, and were then examined by a British officer, lest we should carry something over forbidden by his Queen. After a short visit to her majesty's dominions, including a view of the Falls, and the battle-field at Lundy's Lane, we hastened to our native soil, satisfied with our freeborn home on the other side of the angry, watery fence.

Wednesday, we went to Dansville, to visit Dr. Jackson and his associates, at their delightful situation on the mountain side, very properly denominated, "OUR HOME." [For a better description, see article in our column on Hygeine in next issue.] We felt sorry that there are not many like Dr. Jackson, Dr. Austin, and their colleagues, so that places like "OUR HOME" might be multiplied, and established in every town in our land. We really think there is no other place in our country where the sick and afflicted will find so kind and successful treatment as at this Health Institution of Dr. Jackson's. Rarely have we left a place more reluctantly than "OUR HOME" at Dansville. When we shook hands in parting with the Dr., and received his hearty benediction—"God bless you!" we felt assured we were leaving a friend in the [illegible] May the good hand [illegible] for their kindness [illegible] pilgrim, while on his way to the land [illegible] sickness [illegible] forever un-[illegible]

[illegible] Lord's day, Aug. 20th and 21st, we spent with the church at Conesus Centre. This is one of the fields where Bro Hastings has labored with happy success! We had large and attentive congregations, and formed pleasant acquaintances with the friends of Jesus. We would say to Bro. H. they are very anxious to see him there again. Considerable interest was awakened and the field seemed to be a favorable one for cultivation.

Monday, Aug. 22nd, we started for the campmeeting at Collinsville, Ct., and arrived Tuesday, P. M., thankful for the privilege of seeing once more our dear Brn. and Srs. from our old field of labor.

To our Correspondents.

We wish to make our paper just such a one as good people, who love the truth, will delight to read and lend to their neighbors; one that the Lord will own and bless, and make instrumental in leading men from darkness to light, from error to truth, from sorrow and doubt to joy and peace in believing. Our paper can not be like a slop-pail, fit to receive every thing that every body might wish to insert; neither is it a sectarian organ that admits nothing but what is in harmony with the views of the editor and the publishing committee. Each one is responsible for his own articles, and we never review what is inserted. We do not believe in dosing people with poison for the sake of giving an antidote.

We can allow no unkind words, or reproachful epithets toward those of our brethren who may honestly differ from us in sentiment. When we would lead people from the wrong way, we believe the most successful course to be by presenting them with something better, in a kind spirit, instead of wrangling about fables, and disputing with error. On this account we allow no controversy in our columns, lest a spirit of bitterness be engendered, and some weak one be overthrown.

Each contributor is desired to write his own views in a kind manner, and make his position so clear, truthful and lovely, that error will hide its hideous face, and give way to the joyful and triumphant victory of light and truth. By taking this course, every point of error can be most successfully met, without giving cause for offense or reply.

We purpose, in short, that the "Crisis" shall be a herald of light and truth, peace and love. Let all our correspondents unite in helping to make it the best paper in the world. Remember us in your prayers, that we may have wisdom to publish nothing only what is for the glory of God.

Work for Christ.

The requirement, that directs us to do all to the glory of God, is most reasonable; because, in doing so, we are at the same time doing that which is for our own and our neighbor's future welfare. He who acts on this principle is truly a happy man, and is preparing for an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God.

But few are aware how much they can do in the vineyard of the Lord, till they have consecrated all to his service, and are ready for every good word and work. If you are in the social meeting, speak a word for Jesus. Stand up for him. Acknowledge him in all your ways and he shall direct your steps. Shrink from no cross. Talk with that young man, that young woman, at the close of the meeting. Invite them to go with you to the better land—the land of rest. Speak kindly, earnestly, and follow them with your prayers. Let us all do something for Jesus, who has done so much for us.

When you go to the grove, or campmeeting, work for Christ. Do not be an idler in his vineyard, when there is so much to be done, and so few to labor. Let us interest ourselves in the eternal welfare of our fellow beings. A single word often turns one's entire course of life, and leads him to the Lamb of God. Remember, he that winneth souls is wise. Be wise. Go speak to that friend, and ask him to love Jesus, and be a christian. You may be an instrument of his salvation, and thus get one more to help praise our Life-giver in the land of glory. Never mind the cross; do it to please Jesus. Do it now.

Our Work, Hopes, etc.

CHRISTIAN BRETHREN, FRIENDS AND SUPPORTERS:—To-day we present you with the first number of the Crisis, on entering upon its tenth volume. We never had more reason for thankfulness than at this hour; the truth is making progress, and we know that this journal is proving itself a blessing to many. This thought cheers us amid our toils, and encourages us to abound in the work of the Lord. In carrying on the Crisis we are conscious of a desire to clear the Divine character of foul aspersions that a cruel theology has cast upon it, and to open up the transporting hopes exhibited in the gospel of grace; and when these [illegible] imperfectly—on account of our insufficiency—the work [illegible] be done, we are moved to pour out [illegible] hearts in thankfulness and praise. Heaven's [illegible] future efforts and on all who are in any way associated with us in this spiritual [illegible] the land will [illegible] with an [illegible] it [illegible]

It is needless for us, on this occasion, to particularize the doctrines for which we are called upon especially to testify, in these last times. They rise on our pages like Alpine mountains on a plain. There is Life in Jesus, the Resurrection of the Dead, the Return of the Imperial Savior, the Restitution of all things, the cleansing of the Universe from sin and woe! These to us are eternal truths; and we summon the intelligent world to contemplate their grandeur. These revelations of the Divine plans and intentions are fitted to disarm the bitterest hostility; for they conspire in assuring us that God is love,—a being actuated by no relentless vengeance, but determined to clothe the universe with the fairest beauty, and to hush every voice but the anthems of joy. We are exponents of the Divine mind, so far as it has been discovered to us; we look to our friends to sustain us in our testimony; we express an assurance that they will, and so be instrumental with us in turning many from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God.

Far and wide the Crisis now circulates; and sometimes we mentally follow the numbers to their several destinations. We trace them over the great city, and to the log cabin on the verge of the wilderness; to the farm-house on the prairie, and the busy factory in the village. We see them in the hands of the aged saint and of the youthful disciple; now studied by the vigorous when the day's toil is over, and now by the lonely near the valley of the shadow of death. A blessing on you all, good friends; thanks for your sympathy and prayers. It is no common privilege to speak to you from week to week; and the thought that we may send you a cheering word, and a supporting word, animates us with zeal to serve you more fully and God more faithfully.

To the readers of the Crisis it is surely unnecessary to give this caution;—remember after all that we are fallible like yourselves. Try what you read by the unerring standard; we are but finger-posts pointing to the true and divine. In the truth-search let every one recognize his own responsibility; when what we deliver is held to be final, then our pages are put in the room of the Sacred Oracles,—the worst calamity that could happen to us and them. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." And accompanying this,—do not be alarmed or offended when you discover sentiments and views in these columns, diverse from your own. They are not necessarily false, because they are new to you. Remember the rule—"Prove all things!" We suppose you have not forgotten the day when some ideas you now entertain, were very strange to you, very suspicious, and, as far as you could determine, very unscriptural. But how do you think of them now? How do you now regard immortality in Christ, and the literal and early return of the Savior? Frequently, you must admit, strange things have done you good; and surely you cannot imagine that you have found all the truth, and crept from beneath all the darkness? Let others draw a full breath; there is atmosphere enough for each of us. Above everything, do not imagine that because one pens what you deem erroneous, that therefore he has become your enemy, or the enemy of truth and righteousness. Hear calmly what any writer has to communicate; what seems, at the first glance, to be gilt, may turn out to be gold. In a movement like the one in which we are engaged, we can have a general harmony, and leave a wide margin for individual variety; we can differ, and still preserve the charity that thinketh no evil; we can be faithful without being fierce; we can contend earnestly for the faith, and very gently with man.

The existence of the Advent cause is a sign that heroism is yet alive in the church of God; and it is a branch of our mission to feed the flame. We remember the struggles of the past; we consider the reproaches of the present, and say to our brethren, be strong, quit you like men. This is an earnest day. The conflict between truth and error, between sin and righteousness, between a gory theology and the stainless message from heaven; is going on, and is destined to become closer and more determined. On our side there can be no compromise. Each man on the Lord's side to his place; and shame to all show of pusillanimity.

Many will read these lines at our annual campmeeting, and we can but express a desire that the assembly may be large, and the spirit celestial. Heaven give wisdom to the counsels of the brethren, and grace to the preachers and hearers. On the hill of Wilbraham may "the Lord of hosts make a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined." No winter be there to blight one soul; but spring and summer, and autumn, all in one, with their reviving and maturing influences. Our sun, be the Sun of righteousness; our joy, the joy of men in harvest, and of those who divide the spoil.

Christian Brethren and Friends; "Now unto him who is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy; to the only wise God and Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen."

For the Crisis.

Martha's Vineyard.

The campmeeting on Martha's Vineyard, held annually, is this year larger than heretofore. The tents number about five hundred. The attendants are reckoned as high as near ten thousand, and the expenses over $100,000.

I have been here six days, and am to stay through to the end. The location is well chosen. It is isolated from the rush and confusion of the great world. The surrounding ocean and sea air render it most pleasant and healthful; and altogether the place is as good as if made on purpose for "the campmeeting."

The preaching has been of a high order. The subjects presented have not suffered in the hands of their advocates on this occasion; and yet truth demands that I add, that this remark applies to denominational preaching. The range of thought, and testimony, has been, of course, limited to the Methodist platform; but the widest range has been taken that that denominational platform allows, and, so far, has been highly commendable. It included the Judgment, Second Advent, Resurrection—nay, it embraced "prophecy," and by consequence justifies all who have a heart to trace these themes further. On the principle that these portions of the word are to be preached at all, we are authorized to preach them freely, fully, and in their scriptural order, time, and revelations!

Prophecy was not applied, in my hearing, only up to the first Advent; hence the Second Advent, Resurrection, and Judgment were not presented in their scriptural order, objects or revelations—no, not at all!

This appears to me a great defect. This defect constitutes a demonstration that God will not (can not consistently) work out his plan by any or all of such denominational agency. Every agency adequate to accomplish a plan, must understand it; Noah, Abraham, Moses, David, Daniel, John the Baptist, and the disciples (praying before the Pentecost), all acted in faith. Their faith embraced the revealed purpose of God so far as it was to be by them accomplished, or even participated in.

All the worthies, Heb. 11, saw the promises afar off and were persuaded of them—the better Resurrection and the Heavenly city and country. Every inspired song from Deborah to that of the Virgin Mary—every promise from Gen. 3:15 to John the Baptist—and every leading gospel promise or Apostolic sermon and epistle reach on to the consummation. Many of them give the whole world's outline history, that fills up the entire period, till the judgment; and then we have given us the objects to be accomplished by the judgment through the great and notable day of the Lord—the 1000 years. Hence it follows that all who will not echo the Spirit's utterance, are so far sectarian—so not of God!

The earnestness, fervor and zeal manifested were altogether commendable. I felt that it was my privilege to appropriate all the Bible truth, the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, and the christian devotedness, there enjoyed. I do not dare to be sectarian knowingly,—no, not even among sectarians. Christ everywhere, and in all respects, belongs to the christian.

For so much truth, among so many, I felt thankful. But that the inspired apostolic reply to inquiring souls, Acts 2:37, 38, should not once find even an echo, I felt sad. This with other omissions proves the nature and cause of the church's weakness.

For the Crisis.

Holiness.

How great is the contrast between this world and the promised one yet in the future! How much purer and pleasanter it seems to reflect upon the bright and glorious world which we are so soon to gain, if only faithful, than to think of this ruinous, rebellious, and sin-cursed earth, which is so soon to be destroyed. May God deliver us from being destroyed with it. Here, fraud and deceit are carried on to a very great extent; there, there will be nothing to harm or molest us, but all will be happiness, joy and peace. There, friends will never prove treacherous; no, there will be no traitors there; sickness, sorrow, pain and death can never enter; but this present earth will be purified, and restored to its paradisiacal state; and oh, if we are only faithful, only endure all things, overcome all things, we shall certainly at the last inherit all things!

MARTHA ROBERTS.

Danielsonville, Ct.

THE PARISH MINISTER.—The author of Adam Bede, in sketching the rector of a parish says, he was not much of a preacher. He preached short moral sermons. But then he acted pretty much up to what he said. He didn't set up for being so different from other folks one day, and then be as like 'em as two peas the next; and he made folks love and respect him. Mrs. Poyser used to say he was like a good meal o' victuals, you were better for him without thinking on it.

☞ Look for immortality.

Correspondence.

From J. Parry.

Bro. Grant:—I promised to let you know how the work prospers with us since the Grove Meeting. I trust we have not yet lost the influence then manifested, and I have reason to think the leaven is silently working in the minds of some who are not yet fully persuaded to embrace the truth.

Our Sunday meetings at the school-house continue to be well attended; but it is not the number, it is the spirit our brethren and sisters manifest, that gives us encouragement for better things to come. There is evidently a spirit of prayer and earnestness in our little company, that cannot plead in vain with Him, who is ever more ready to give than we are to ask spiritual blessings; and I do not think we go empty away. We have a Bible class in the morning; prayer and conference at three P. M., and a sermon at four P. M.; and nearly all who attend come to the prayer meeting, and a goodly number take a part in the exercise. Opposition, however, still goes on unabated; and those who are half-hearted in the cause keep aloof from our meetings, and seem ashamed even to be seen speaking to us on these forbidden subjects.

Oh, what a snare is the fear of man in these days of apostasy from the truth! How few of those to whom God has given light and knowledge are "valiant for the truth upon the earth!" There are not a few in our churches, who are convinced in their own minds that we have the truth as it is in Jesus; and yet they sit dumb from week to week and hear, what they know to be the word of God, reviled, and misrepresented. "How dwelleth the love of God in them?" But God has patience with them, and it is our duty to follow his example; may he give us grace to do so, and wait to see the end. There are some who make a compromise in the matter, and as long as these things are not openly condemned, and denounced as heretical, they are content to remain in the church, and keep a dignified silence for the sake of peace; thus burying their talent in the earth, or hiding their light under a bushel; and fondly persuading themselves they are doing God service.

But notwithstanding all these discouragements from cold friends and open foes, the doctrine of life only in Christ is making its way to the hearts of some, who make no compromise with the unfruitful works of darkness, but fearlessly confess the truth before men, and are willing to abide the consequences; each have their reward, even here; the testimony of a good conscience in the sight of God, which is of great price; and I have never yet found the man who thought he purchased it too dearly.

We have circulated a subscription to build a meeting-house, and have about 7 or $800 subscribed; but we shall not be able to build before the spring; and, in the meantime, we intend to hire a large room in the village, that is now being fitted up for the purpose of public meetings. When it is finished we hope you will spend a week or two with us, and try what can be done to raise an interest in this place and neighborhood in favor of the "old paths."

Sandy Hill, N. Y., Aug. 21.

From B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—Once more I am in the vineyard of God, sowing the good seed of Bible truth broadcast, both by distributing tracts and papers and visiting families, and giving lectures. I stopped a few days at Mount Desert, then came to Millbridge. This was a new field. Here I went forth into a neglected neighborhood, where ignorance and destitution abound. I visited twenty families the first day, and fourteen the second. I distributed tracts freely, both from the tract depository, and from the World's Crisis office. I acknowledge a very large bundle of tracts and papers from that office. To whom I am indebted for this very valuable lot of tracts, I do not know, but they were put up and directed to me. I praise the Lord with all my heart, for the favor, for I feel it a very great one. May God bless the donors, and water their souls with heavenly dews while they have contributed to water others. These little winged messengers will go into hundreds of families, carrying the light of God's word, and enlightening many dark minds on the truth of God's word,—dispelling traditionary ideas, and opening the eyes of the mind to see the beauty of God's plan of salvation for the redemption of fallen man, by the resurrection from the dead and immortality through Christ alone. I rejoice that God has counted me worthy to be a co-worker with himself, and with my brethren and sisters, in this great and good work.

I have already spent eight or ten days visiting from ten to twenty families a day, distributing tracts freely, and very readily have they been received.

From Millbridge I came to Jonesport. Here they have had no preaching for five years. As I have but just arrived, I do not know their particular state, but expect I shall spend a few weeks with them. They have received me very cordially. The work I do has many pleasant things connected with it, although it is laborious, and I have many discouragements to meet, as you may well suppose, among a people who have been taught many traditions for the truth. Kindness and hospitality characterize these Islanders. Oh that the time may soon come when these Islands shall resound with the praises of Jesus, and be converted to God, according to the predictions of God's word!

Pray for me, all ye who love Jesus and his appearing, and feel interested in this mission. I need heavenly wisdom, holy boldness, tenderness of mind, and the child-like spirit. I need to be raised above the fears, frowns or flatteries of the vain world, that I may declare the truth, the whole truth, seeking only that honor which comes from God.

Let me say, brethren, be faithful, be devoted, labor on, be not discouraged, the day of redemption is at hand; soon the joyful news will come,

"Child, your Father calls, come home!"

The night is far spent, the day is at hand! Iniquity abounds, the love of many waxes cold, knowledge is increased, and the wicked do wickedly. The nations are getting angry; peace and safety are being preached, and sudden destruction is coming. Let us lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption draws near!

Jonesport, Me., August 10th.

From Jno. W. Everson.

Bro. Grant:—To be at all brief, I cannot better express the unbounded gratification and pleasure that your paper affords me from week to week, than rendering my thanks to God, for the instrumentalities he has brought into requisition, for the defence and spread of the glorious gospel of the kingdom, furnishing his people, scattered abroad, the highest possible degree of enjoyment, through the medium of your mirror of truth and vehicle of Christian literature—gem of a paper. I am ever anticipating with renewed interest, the arrival of the future copy, and when a detention occurs, (as it does occasionally,) I experience with one of old, that, "Hope deferred, maketh the heart sick." This may appear to you, my dear brother, as extravagant, but I assure you it is but the spontaneous expression of one who "speaks forth the words of truth and soberness" when at this "Feast of fat things," I reiterate my assurances of love for the cause, the people, and the paper.

Although an exile, in a strange land, in an enemy's country, and hearing but seldom the language of Canaan, (Bro. Langarle occasionally,) I love the very name of Adventists, and my heart's warm sympathies are with those who "love the Lord Jesus," and are "Looking for that blessed hope" that maketh not ashamed.

Farewell, dear brother, and tell our eastern brothers and sisters, that in Cincinnati there are a few names, who have not defiled their garments, and whose prayer is still ascending, that "He, who abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light," may establish our hearts unblameable in holiness, before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Worcester, Mass., July 31st, Phebe Ann, wife of Robert Haskins, in the fifty-sixth year of her age.

Early in life Sister H. became a follower of Jesus. At the age of fourteen years she united with the Baptists. In 1842 she heard and embraced the doctrine of the second advent of Jesus Christ, and subsequently became a firm believer in immortality only through Christ, to which faith she adhered through life.

Her voice has often been heard, for a few years past, at our campmeetings in this region, and also at our prayer meetings here; her warm-hearted exhortations will long be remembered by the church, whose confidence and fellowship she has ever enjoyed.

She was partially deprived of her reason during her last sickness, which was of seven weeks duration, but at times expressed full confidence and faith in God. The night before her death she spent mostly in fervent prayer to Him who is able to save.

Her funeral was attended at the Thomas St. chapel, by Eld. O. R. Fassett.

She rests in the silent grave; we trust she sleeps in Jesus, but soon to awake and sing the triumphant song of victory over death and the grave, and to unite with the redeemed company, in swelling the song of everlasting emancipation from all the ills of earth, on the blissful shores of immortality, in paradise restored.

In quietude she sleeps, no more to awake
Until the loud clarion of heaven is heard,
And the voice of God's Son death's slumbers shall break,
And all the saints shall come forth at His word.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

THE ROMAN STATES.

In the Romagnas a new and unexpected phenomenon is daily exhibited; for whereas not a day passes under the immediate sway of His Holiness without the perpetration of acts of vengeance and homicide, or the flagrant violation of some law—in the Legations, on the contrary, under their own government, the people have not so much as hurt the hair of a single man's head, and while yielding implicit obedience to the laws, have forgotten all their hatreds and resentments.

The popular voting previously spoken of has commenced, and out of 25,000 votes 19,000 are "noes"—in other words, are against the government of the Pope. A great part of the "ayes" are from persons who cannot separate in [illegible] the priest from the pontiff, and who think they would be denying their faith by denying him a temporal kingdom.

ITALY.

The Opinione, of Turin, one of the best informed of the Piedmontese journals, states that about 50,000 French troops will provisionally remain in Italy, "owing to the precarious state of some of the provinces;" and that the troops are to be stationed at Pavia, Milan, Casal Maggiore and Piacenza. The three first named places are in Lombardy, and Piacenza, which, though in Parma, belonged to Austria, was believed to have been also transferred to Piedmont; but as none of the newly acquired provinces of Piedmont are in "a precarious state," this French occupation of Lombardy and Parma must be intended to act as a check on Central Italy, and perhaps ultimately to co-erce it into accepting the decree of Zurich for the restoration of the ex-sovereigns.

A letter from Turin, in the Daily News, contains the inauspicious announcement that the Count de Reiset has been sent by the Emperor Napoleon to Italy for the express purpose of preparing Central Italy for the reception of French garrisons, that a communication to this effect was made to the Piedmontese government at the beginning of the present month. The ostensible object of this foreign intervention is the preservation of order; but the fact is that order is admirably maintained; and we may be pretty sure that, if Austria does not object to this French occupation, it is really intended to promote an object which is agreeable to Austria. In the event of the French troops making their appearance, the provisional government of Central Italy, are determined to make a firm but calm demonstration of opposition to the measure.

The government of Sardinia intends before the close of the year, to have an army of 100,000 men. This is to be the force in time of peace, and double the number, it is added, can easily be organized if war is resumed.

A telegram from Turin brings the news that the French troops have suspended their departure from Italy, but does not give the reason. It is probably to be found in the excited state of Central Italy, and not by any anticipation that the late belligerents will fail to conclude a definite peace.

So bad is the financial condition of Austria, that her troops in Italy are not regularly paid, and some acts of mutiny have already occurred among the Crotians on this account. Some of them, says a letter from Brescia, have been shot, and the great bulk of the force has been sent home, to avoid further inconvenience. The most alarming discontent has shown itself among the Hungarians, who are daily deserting from Verona and from Mantua. These poor fellows do not yet know what fate is in store for them, but they have decided to emigrate to America rather than trust to any amnesty that Austria can grant.

The Conference at Zurich has apparently been brought to a standstill. The telegraphic dispatches which have been received indicate that insurmountable difficulties presented themselves at the very beginning of the deliberations; that the Plenipotentiaries, finding they cannot possibly finish their labors before the 15th, the day on which the armistice expires, have prolonged it indefinitely; and that Baron Meysenberg, the second representative of Austria, has left Zurich for Vienna, no doubt to receive fresh instructions from his government.

A series of conflicts have taken place at Frankfort between the Austrian, Bavarian, and Prussian troops forming the garrison of that city. The diplomatic encounter between the Austrian and Prussian governments has evidently extended to the troops of the two nations; and the soldiers, being unable to settle the question by verbal discussion, at last betook themselves to their swords and bayonets. Two or three persons are said to have been killed and a good many wounded, and the casualties would have been more numerous if the combatants had had fire arms.

The Prince Regent of Prussia has signed an order for the re-organization of the Prussian army. The object is to proportion the means of national defense to the population and resources of the country.

The young Grand Duke of Tuscany is said to be preparing a manifesto, offering the Tuscans a representative constitution.

News from Florence of the 1st of August announces the demolition of the Belvedere citadel, from which the late Grand Duke meant to bombard the city. This act is decisive as to his chance of return. Garibaldi is daily expected, according to La Patrie. It is added by La Presse, that, though in ill health, the Italian general will appear in Tuscany at the head of 13,000 men, mostly the regiments of "Alpine hunters." He has got leave of absence from the service of King Victor Emmanuel.

From the Paris letter of the Star: "At home we are disquieted with the numberless arrestations which are taking place around us. Everybody seems suspected, and to come under the 'Loi des suspects,' those who are discontented, those who have cause for being so and those who would be so if they had cause, those who pity those who are arrested, and those who wonder at those who are not—in short, if things go on in this way much longer, there will be no great crowd on the boulevard, for half the population will be lodged in prison. A conspiracy of whistles is said to have caused the abandonment of the Emperor's intention of meeting the troops at the Bastile. The treason was discovered in time. A plot to hiss the Emperor as he rode past by means of penny whistles was organized by the Faubourg St. Antoine. The immense quantity of the horrible instruments sold during eight and forty hours excited suspicion—everything does so in these days of universal festivity and national rejoicing in Paris. This sudden love of harmonious strains was thought to look queer, and so on examination the cause was found, and many of the merry wags were sent to pay for their whistle in prison."

Revolutionary Attempts in Italy.

The following correspondence of the London News, from Garibaldi's headquarters, details some interesting events which were barely alluded to in our last foreign dispatches:

"In order that you may be on your guard against the usual exaggerations of the reactionary press of Europe, I hasten to inform you that two foolish revolutionary attempts have been on the point of breaking out in Tuscany. Although they were both intended to do much mischief to the national cause of Italy, the objects they aimed at were widely different. The first attempt to alter the actual state of affairs was organized at Florence by a few minions of the Grand Duke; the second was the work of a few madmen, who had taken it into their heads to proclaim the republic at Legborn. However, the good sense of the population on one hand, and the firmness of the Central Government on the other, soon put down these lawless manifestations, which, if successful, would have, no doubt, greatly increased the hopes of the Austrian party. It seems that the leadership of the Florence movement had devolved on the Countess Bocella, a natural daughter of the late Prince Esterhazy, a lady very well known for her Austrian prepossessions. This lady had organized a sort of secret society amongst the peasants of Prince Demidoff, and, supported by a few priests, she hoped to give to Florence the benefit of a second night of Saint Bartholomew. The Provisional government of Tuscany being on its guard, was easily able to baffle the mad attempt, and some of the ringleaders having been put into the prisons of the Palazzo Vecchio, all danger of Ducal restoration was over in less than two hours.

The second attempt was not less ridiculous than the first, although it boasted for its motto, 'God and the people.' It was directed by a few men of Leghorn, who calling themselves Republicans, had come to a determination to save Italy from Austria, France and Piedmont. You see that the enterprise was of some magnitude, and that it could only have been inspired by a certain great politician. People here—mind that I am at Garibaldi's headquarters, amongst the flower of the Italian youth, amidst those brave soldiers who in 1849, were the most gallant champions of Venice and Rome—are unanimous in believing that the authorship of the Legborn affair must be attributed to Mazzini, for they say it bears all the characteristics of his former revolutionary exploits. The same proclamations, the same arms, seem to have been seized, the same class of conspirators has been arrested. I am now stating what I have heard reported here, but, for the honor of Mazzini, I hope he is quite a stranger to this mad and guilty attempt at revolutionizing the provinces of Central Italy. Whilst these follies have proved unsuccessful, it appears that the provisional governments of Modena, Parma, Tuscany, and Bologna, have signed an offensive and defensive league to meet the emergencies of the future. The 13th article of this Convention gives the command of the confederate army to a general to be appointed by the different governments of the league. This is a wise decision, the result of which will be to unite the direction of the federative forces under one chief.

Were I to believe a rumor current here, Gen. Garibaldi will be intrusted with the command of the army. I think, however, the rumor is at least premature, for an officer of the general staff told me that no orders for departure had yet been given. What is certain is, that seventeen Roman battalions have been sent by the Provisional Governments of the Romagna toward the Cattolica. When arrived there, half of them will be directed on Urbino, the other half on Gubbin and Perugia. These battalions will soon be increased by two thousand volunteers dismissed from the Piedmontese service, and by others coming from the Romagna, Ferrara and Comacchio. The patriotic army has also at its disposal eight field guns and two squadrons of dragoons. With these forces it can both meet the Papal Swiss troops, and maintain order in the provinces. If the danger should come from Modena, Parma or Tuscany, they will be able to join the confederate troops there, and to repel any attempt that may be made by the pretenders to the thrones of those little States."

Entire Destruction of Erzroom.

The English papers received by the Etna announce the entire destruction of the ancient city of Erzroom, by repeated shocks of earthquake occurring June 1st, and a letter from one of the Missionaries of the American Board received in this city, gives a vivid description of the first great shock. He says:—

"The first shock, which was not very severe, was felt about 8 o,clock, A. M., June 1, and at 10 o'clock, A. M., the following day (June 2d) came the fearful earthquake, which laid in ruins 2000 houses, nearly destroying 1500 more, and injured some 1200 others; leaving, (according to the accounts of Turkish officials) over 1300 houses unharmed; but I do not believe that there are 100 houses in Erzroom as sound as they were before the earthquake. The shock was not only felt throughout the city, but in the villages on the plain, and even at Hassan-Kallah, twenty miles to the east.

According to official returns, 380 dead bodies have been taken out from the ruins, about 200 wounded, and sixty are missing. The heavy shock, which did the mischief, is said to have continued about eight seconds, and it was followed by three others, less severe, the same day. Shocks, more or less severe, were also felt at intervals during eight consecutive days, since which there has been perfect quiet, and the work of building and repairing is now going on as rapidly as possible.

It is a singular fact, that the destruction was almost entirely confined to the Moslem quarters of the city, and only twelve christians lost their lives. None of our Protestant friends were injured, though several barely escaped with life. One woman, sister of our native preacher B. Hohannes, feeling the waving to and fro of the house, seized her two little children and escaped in time to see roof and wall come down with a crash where she had been sitting. Part of another house, adjoining ours, was crushed, but no one was harmed. The two mission houses were injured, but not very seriously.

The Great Revival.—The extensive religious awakening in Ireland, greater than heretofore in the country, is extending to Scotland and Wales. It has reached the colliers of Staffordshire, and in one place it is estimated that there are five hundred converts. From among their own number a collier has been raised up who daily preaches the word with great power. In many of the coal pits daily prayer meetings and Bible readings are held. In South Wales, so extraordinary is the revival interest, that all the churches and chapels are crowded on week days as well as Sabbaths. Prayer meetings in churches, in school-rooms, in work shops, and even in fields, are held morning and evening. In one town, eight public houses have been closed since the work began. It is now spreading into North Wales. A clergyman of the Established Church writes:—"There is no enthusiasm, but a deep, profound, and awfully solemn impression." In some districts, notorious for blasphemy, an oath is now never heard, and drunkards in thousands have become total abstainers. It is estimated that in two counties only, nine thousand persons, within the last five months, have been turned to God.

Notices, &c.

Providence permitting, we will hold meetings in the State of Maine as follows:

In North Searsport, Sept. 20th and 21st.

J. Hemenway.

P. S.—We shall look for letters at Frankfort, North Hermon, Bangor, [illegible] and Augusta.

Editorial Notice.

The New Tracts on Soul and Spirit will be ready at the Wilbraham campmeeting. They are very neatly executed, with covers, containing thirty-two closely printed pages. Price 5 cts. single. These will be found valuable in examining the Scriptures on these subjects. Every Bible student should have a copy of each.

Come to Yarmouth.—What For?

1. Because the Maine Annual (adjourned) Conference is to be here.

2. Because this is to be an important meeting, and we want the co-operation of all lovers of the "Advent cause."

3. Because much is to be done, and what is done must be done now.

4. Because it is very desirable that all should agree upon the best plan to carry on the cause we so much love.

5. Because this may be the last annual meeting we may ever have, and we want to see as many as possible together once more.

6. Because the church here need your labors and words of encouragement.

Come, then, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord, one and all. Come praying. Come to labor for Jesus; and may the Lord of Israel meet with us. Amen.

In behalf of the cause,
R. R. York.

Fare Reduced.

Tickets from Boston to Westford camp ground and return, half price, ($1,00) to be had of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover St., Boston. L. Boutell, for Committee.

☞ Bro. Edwin Burnham will commence a protracted meeting in Woodstock, New Brunswick, on Friday evening, after the second Sunday in September, and from that time will labor one month in the Provinces, as the friends may arrange.

New Hampshire State Conference.

As the time draws near for the next session of our State conference, it becomes my duty to make the inquiry, Where shall our next conference be holden? Will brethen who may desire the meeting convened with them, please inform me at their earliest convenience, that I may be able to fix on the time and place, and give seasonable notice.

Should there be a choice in regard to the time of the meeting, please name it; but the usual time is the early part of October.

T. M. Preble,
Clerk of Conference.

East Weare, Aug. 20, 1859.

Notice.

D. R. and M. S. Mansfield will preach in Reading, Mich., on Friday, Sept 9th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Bro. A. N. Seymour will make arrangements as will best suit the people.

The Maine (Adjourned) Conference

Will meet in Yarmouth, Sept. 15th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. with Bro. York's church, and continue over the Sabbath. Come, brethren, let us make one more rally, unitedly, and bring the forces into the field, and fight earnestly the battles of the Lord. Come; let party feelings, and sectional interests be merged in the one united, determined, active effort to go on in God's strength in this work.

Passengers coming on the Grand Trunk R. R., will stop at Yarmouth station. Those coming on the Kennebec and Portland R. R. will stop at Yarmouth Junction, half a mile from Bro. York's. Come the first day if you can, but come! I. C. Wellcome, Sec.

Richmond, Me., Aug. 17, 1859.

Campmeeting.

There will be a Second Advent Campmeeting in Harmony Grove, Westford, Mass., upon the old spot, to commence on Tuesday, Sept. 6, '59, and continue over the Sabbath. This is a delightful location, convenient, and within five minutes' walk from Centre Depot. The object of this meeting is the saving of men by the preaching of the gospel in its adaptation to the present state of the world. We hope to see a rally of the scattered flock that shall come to this meeting full of love, faith and zeal, to work in the Lord's vineyard. Let them that are able, help the poor to this feast. Those who wish, can provide their own board, and bring their whole family with little expense. Bring tents and bedding. Tents and board will be provided on the ground, for all who wish, on reasonable terms.

The Rail Road Company have promised to transport from Boston to this meeting and back, for half price, providing fifty persons come from that vicinity.

Let all be awake and prepare for the meeting.

L. Boutell, Groton,
M. W. Corliss, Lowell,
J. D. Brown, Providence,
Josiah Vose, Westford,
Committee.

Savoy Campmeeting.

This meeting will be holden on land owned by Noah Mirick, about three miles north of Savoy Hollow, commencing Sept. 5th, and continuing over the following Lord's day. We invite all to come and labor for the salvation of souls. Board and horse keeping will be furnished on reasonable terms.

Committee, E. Healy, R. Starks, E. M'Cullock.

☞ The Lord willing there will be a public union prayer meeting held in Holden, Me., Saturday, Sept. 17th, at half-past nine, A. M. Preaching on the day following.

Israel Damman.

Ohio Conference.

The Third Annual Conference of the churches in Ohio will be held at Marysville, Union Co., commencing at one o'clock P. M. on Thursday the 8th Sept., and continue over the Sabbath. Ministers and lay brethren of this and adjoining states are affectionately invited to attend. It is hoped that all the churches of Ohio will be represented. The brethren of Marysville and vicinity will see that adequate provisions are made for the accommodation of all who can make it convenient to attend; and as the committee think they ought not to be further burdened, take the liberty of recommending the several churches to provide their delegates with traveling expenses. The place is accessible in different directions by Rail Road.

G. W. Cherry, E. R. Southwick, P. Allois, Committee.

Norwalk, O., July 20, 1859.

P. S. Brethren from abroad coming to this Conference either by Railroad or otherwise, will call on Brother Pakridge, where further [illegible]

☞ Many persons give us the dying words of great men, but none of them are so touching and beautiful as the last words of the old schoolmaster: "It is growing dark—school may be dismissed." Down to the gates of an unseen world he carried the love and regard of the children he had trained. It was his last kind dismissal in this world of schooling.

The Kingdom is at Hand!

Oh, take your harps from off the willows,
[illegible]
[illegible] "weeping shall be ended,"
And "redemption draweth nigh."
Ye warriors, while with armor girded
At the battle's front ye stand,
Remember that your Leader cometh,
And the Kingdom is at hand!

[illegible] is the rest hereafter,
On the kingdom's peaceful shore,
And in the glory of His presence,
When the sun shall set no more.
Then christians, while the night is passing,
Let us form our pilgrim band,
Shall we not love each other better,
For the Kingdom is at hand!

Ye wand'ring sinner, turn you homeward
Ere the day of grace is o'er,
For soon shall mercy cease to call you,
And the Spirit strive no more.
Why will ye die? awake from slumber!
For on ruin's brink ye stand;
Repent, for lo, the Judge is coming,
And the Kingdom is at hand!

Remember that the Lord has waited,
Loving kindness suffered long,
Oh, when the ransomed sing "Hosannah,"
Will you join their triumph song?
And lest your bark 'mid all the surgings
Fails to reach the promised land,
We charge you, flee to Christ the Savior,
For the Kingdom is at hand!

Behold, the clouds above the mountains
Form no more their gloomy crest,
For lo, the morning dawneth brighter,
And the weary find their rest.
Then raise we now the song of triumph,
As our barks are near the strand,
For now the everlasting glory
Of the Kingdom is at hand!

Relationship to God.

In former dispensations, no one could inherit a throne but by kingship. So with heirs of the "throne of glory." In order to inherit the joys of God's kingdom, we must become connected with him. How was this to be effected? By Christ blending our nature with his. He stoops down to us, and links in with human nature, while yet his blended divinity unites him to God. Thus we are made kinsmen, or heirs of immortality. We are nearer to, and have higher claims on, God than even the angels.

All who are in Christ are considered as belonging to the Royal family, and God, the everlasting Father, cannot love Christ the Son without manifesting love for the adopted sons and daughters.

In this life how our hearts beat in happy anticipations whenever there are fair prospects before us. Even take a rich man and promise him an Earldom or Dukedom, and how transported will he appear. But how inexpressibly joyful would the poor beggar be to be thus exalted! Well, God has in store higher titles than these; the saints will not only claim Dukedom, etc., but theirs is a KINGDOM!

O, the love of God! O, the tie so strong which unites vile mortals to Christ, and Christ to God! Let us have faith in our God, for he is truly and legally our Father.

Again, the titles applied to us in this life are but empty names, for they come only by option of others. Our possessions, too, are vanity, for, be we rulers or not, the floods and flames may lay our lands in ashes. We may be kings to-day and beggars to-morrow. Our crown may be claimed by others, and our heads laid on the fatal block.

But in the kingdom of God there is nothing of the kind. It is an everlasting kingdom. There is no sorrow. All is peace. And it is so plainly registered, that the way-faring man can plainly "read his title clear" to those ever green fields, widening out into the expanse of eternity.

This life is a continual change. We may have friends to-day; to-morrow they are our bitterest enemies. Even if they continue faithful, death soon separates us. I can but weep over friends who have thus been called away; still there is comfort in anticipating a re-union in the realms of the blessed.

Dear readers, how is it with you? Are you closely connected with God, so that you can look up and say "my Father?" If not, I beg of you to become an heir of glory soon, or the chance will be lost. Do not mock God. Let me relate something to you that may show your danger.

Last year, a number of young converts met in the presence of old schoolmates. One after another spoke of their hope in God. At last one closed by saying, "I would recommend religion to you all, with whom I have so often met. It is not only good to live by, but to die by." There was a graveyard close by. Two young females sat carelessly mocking. O! how disdainfully they laughed. But hark! This spring I called upon one of these, not having seen her for a year. O, that meeting I'll never forget! She lay like one with the dead. Her cheek had faded and consumed. Last week she was taken into that same old school-house a corpse, and from thence borne to a newly-dug grave. O, I beseech you, make peace with God while it is today. [illegible]

Louis Napoleon.

CAN HE BECOME A LIBERATOR?

The identity of the Napoleonic Dynasty is now universally conceded. Not only is the government of Napoleon III. claimed to be one with the authority of Bonaparte, by himself and his court, but by the common consent of the world; moreover, it is granted to have arisen from the revolutionary kingdom of France, which placed Bonaparte at the head of the French nation. The Directory was the ruin of the government; and the ascendency of that gigantic military influence in the hands of Napoleon I. was the ruin of the republic. It ascended from the anarchical abyss of political darkness—and when did it ever liberate? Where is the civil and religious liberty of any land that was secured by the towering political might of the empire of France? Even the revolution of 1789, much as it seemed to be demanded, did not liberate! It was the resistance of the encroachments of the throne upon the liberties of the people; but did the people obtain the deliverance which they sought? Not at all! The great causes were, the oppressions of the different classes by the most dissolute court, especially, in excessive taxation, (the nobility and clergy being exempt from taxes); the presence of that awful fortress in the city of Paris—the Bastile—a means of subduing Paris by Paris itself; and mandates issued from the throne for the arrest of suspected persons; with an immense standing army in time of peace.

A constitutional monarchy was attempted, but in vain! Civil war followed. War was proclaimed against other states. Europe began to declare war against revolutionary France! Was that liberty? The reign of terror followed! France beheaded her king and queen; but the fearful, blood-covered, butchering Robespierre and his confrers,—tyrants, than whom none more diabolical ever rioted on the blood of innocent victims,—beheaded the nobility by wholesale; and, not content with this, ordered multitudes shot down, and multitudes more sunk in the Seine. This was the liberty of the Revolution. This was the inception of Bonapartean domination in Europe. To a degree, a more rational condition of politics for a short time appeared, when the young Bonaparte was called to lead the army in Italy in 1796; who, being successful, and returning with glory, was made First Consul in 1800. A Constitution was given in 1802, but it gave no satisfactory liberty. What was the government then? A dictatorship, sustained by the army; nominally, it was in the hands of three; but, really, it was the power of one. Bonaparte managed to get himself elected; as to the others, one was a distinguished legal gentleman, the other a financier, neither of them disposed to interfere with his plans.

All this did not free France, did not free the countries which were conquered by her. At last all reserve is left, and, the moment having arrived, the name of Empire is blazoned to the world—Napoleon at the head—and an absolutism, equal in character to any which had been complained of, or could exist,—boldly offered to the world—offered for endorsement. This is all perfectly manifest by the history of the administration. But suppose we look at the policy adopted by the conquering Emperor. Was it even equal to the liberating policy of ancient Rome? which, by a peculiar tact in appointing kings, made the conquering provinces (all conquered lands were provinces, in fact,) willing subjects to her authority. To reach the highest eminence of human power,—to found a dynasty,—to inaugurate a family of kings,—these were his objects! A Murat, a Louis, a Jerome, a Lucien, a Joseph, a Eugene, must all be kings. Where? Not in France; for that is the government proper, and directed by the grand monarch of all; but in Italy, Lombardy, Holland, Germany, Naples, Spain, protected by France; i. e., in the grand relations of European nations controlled by her.

So Louis Napoleon cannot be a liberator. The very policy on which he acts forbids it. Can he act on any other policy and not lose his throne? His haste in the conquest of the territory of Piedmont and Lombardy, is no doubt directed to his ascendency in Europe. Three kingdoms under the direction of three branches of the illegitimate succession might be carved out of Italy. Then the army of the Rhine is now spoken of as being an essential part of the programme; just as fully as if sixty years had not gone by since the first Napoleon was fighting to consolidate his empire. What must be the object of 100,000 men for the army of the Rhine, but the acquisition of territory?

It was the doctrine of Napoleon I. that France should be restored to her ancient dominions. What was that? They claimed the left bank of the Rhine; which means that a part of Germany, part of Prussia, all of the Netherlands, shall be included. This carried the war to Germany, Holland, and Prussia; and were the countries delivered by the proclamation of the Empire, the wars of Bonaparte, or the wars of the convention? They were devastated by war; they were subjugated by it,—levied upon for conscripts, and money to support wars in which they could have [illegible] went by the board before the swelling tide of Bonapartean usurpation. Members of the Bonaparte family were made kings, whose government, if it succeeded, advanced the splendor of the Empire. In the nature of the case, a government imposed upon a people by the enthronement of a king, under the protection of an empire (of which it forms a part), who is not one of the nation, and whose policy must be foreign to the state over which he presides, because he is a foreigner, or at least sustained by a foreign power, can not be a liberation. That is not the liberation which the nationalities seek. That makes the state a province of an empire. That is not liberty! That the literal fact proves to a demonstration; and beyond all dispute the purpose of Napoleon Bonaparte was nothing else than a splendid Empire of provinces—himself the great genius and tyrant. What is the purpose of Louis Napoleon more? If indeed he vainly supposes that he could succeed in the practical, he could not; for a people cannot be free and be controlled by one who is not of themselves, however lenient. A free government must arise from the people who are governed, whether it have the name of Monarchy or Republicanism. The people whom it is proposed to deliver are now oppressed by a foreign yoke. Will Louis Napoleon give them freedom—allow them to govern themselves without his dictation? Or will it be a choice of masters merely? It may be an easier yoke, but a yoke still: it must be a control.

What has he assumed to do? In 1848 the French threw off the yoke of the Bourbons again, and a Provisional government was proclaimed. The grand reason of the uprising was the oppression of the Crown; the tyranny, real or supposed, of the Orleanist house; but especially were the French people awake to retrieve from the prospect of complete despotism their government, which they had supposed a constitutional monarchy, surrounded by "Republican Institutions"—the position of Louis Phillippe and Lafayette in 1830—to redeem the country from the impending slavery of absolutism, secured by the perversion of power in the hands of the "Citizen King." What had they suffered at his hands? Comparatively nothing. They relieved themselves from fear by dethroning him; and thus exposed to the shrewd and far-seeing aspirant to power their weakness and his most imminent danger.

He who speculates in Empire, knows full well where most to guard himself and where most fully to crush them. France has most to fear from France. The French deprecate most fully a French army. The universal cry was—"Liberty, equality, fraternity!" To secure that liberty and equality which the nation claims, it was attempted to consolidate a Republicanism. To secure this, they claimed the elective franchise, and Louis Napoleon was called to preside; first, for three years, and then by the election, which was a deception, before the expiration of his term, for life, which at one stroke made him dictator. The subjects were not free to vote for whom they pleased, through fear of the guillotine, if they voted against Napoleon. Was France liberated by him? Nay! she freed herself. Was she kept free by him? Nay! He bound her in servitude! At one stroke he annihilated the young Roman Republic while President of the French Republic. Political liberty could not thrive under his administration.

It is a notorious fact in the history of his government, under whatever name it may have existed, that the liberties of France have been growing less. As soon as the army and a sufficient amount of the people of Paris could be depended upon to support him under the name of Imperial government,—which must have a charm for a Frenchman, especially since the grandeur of the first blaze of Bonapartean domination, and with the same name to plant it anew,—he takes the entire control of affairs of state; he controls the elections, the army, the finances, the Cabinet and Chambers, the press,—what, in France, does he not control? and what does he not blast? All whom he could trust that were not opposed to him, in 1852, when that most notorious and abominable coup d'etat placed the Empire in his hands, were allowed to do as he dictated, all others; and especially men of note, being guilty of political offences, suffered death by the guillotine, or pined away in dungeons, or were transported to Cayenne or Algeria, where they were sure to die. This has been continued to the present time.

The disposal of political offenders and opponents, in our own time, reminds us of the same great facts five years ago. The Duc d'Enghin was shot at midnight like a dog in the ditch, after a mock trial, upon suspicion of an insurrectionary movement against the Empire,—(Bonaparte said he was the Empire.) Whether Gen. Espinasse, who was shot in the back of the neck at the battle of Magenta,—almost at the same instant his aid fell dead by a shot from behind also,—was taken off or not, it is said he was opposed to some of the Emperor's policy, and unpopular with the army.

The whole power of Bonaparte was gone by 1815, and the nation was back once more under the dominion of the Bourbons [illegible] by the government of Louis [illegible] Tenth. The French people again applied the previously-tried remedy—revolution. Liberty had not arisen out of the "terrific era of anarchy and blood—designated the French revolution—the most stupendous military despotism which threatened to bind the world under its iron sceptre." Was the Revolution of 1830 more effectual in securing the result? The complaints against the government were nearly the same as in 1787. The Bastile was again reduced. Did liberty follow? Were the people more content? After seventeen years we find the work to be done over again, even when they had been living peaceably under a constitutional monarchy.

The consideration of the administration of the government of France under Louis Napoleon will inform us at once whether he will attempt the real liberty of the nations. Does he give the people freely the elective franchise? Does he allow representative Chambers? Does he allow an untrammeled national legislature? Does he even admit a ministry who shall resolve upon measures which wait his signature? Nay! he dictates to them what they must sanction or lose his favor. Have they, in the middle of this enlightened nineteenth century, the liberty of the press in France? Not at all! A government censorship is established, and nothing must be read (in the nature of the reading, or but what he permits.) Witness the forbidding of all reports of battles in Italy, in French newspapers. Reporters were not permitted to send accounts. The meagre bulletins of the Emperor were all that the French people could have.

The world has seen, with wonder, the consummation of the death of liberty in Rome, by the presence of a French army, and the consequent practical subjugation of the papal states, by their subjection to the Pope, through French intervention; the suicidal conversion of republican France to Imperialism, by the overmastering force of a once fallen dynasty, whose Prince, with a name counting undying honors, whose power gathered itself upon the abolished constitutional rights of a nation of thirty-three millions,—upon violated treaties, broken pledges and oaths;—does this look like the emancipation of the smaller and long-crushed nationalities of Europe? Do these things commend Napoleon as the deliverer of Italy? or are they to be taken as they are understood by the Italian Chieftain, and the terrible Carbonari? Are they to be taken as the evidence of a redemption of nations—the elevation of the king-ridden masses of the continent to political blessings, and freedom to govern themselves?—or the final apostasy of this political Abaddon—the damnation of this new Imperial Dragon?

And now that peace is signed by the Emperors of Austria and France, what will France have gained? Territory is yet refused; for the French would not take Savoy. Fifty millions sterling have been expended by France! Seventy thousand lives have been sacrificed! And will France be more free? Will her condition be improved? Napoleon III. has strengthened his own position by the Italian confederation, on the south-east. He has defeated all the hopes of the Italians. He has manifestly been at all these efforts with false objects.

Of what avail were all the brilliant achievements of Bonaparte in securing the liberty and prosperity of the countries of Europe, at Austerlitz, Wagram, Lodi, Borodino, Marengo, Berlin, Vienna? and how much more will Montabello, Melagnano, Magenta, Solferino, effect for the liberty of Europe, with the Emperor of Austria King of Venice, the Pope Honorary President of the Italian Confederation, and all made dependent on the French—where is liberty for those nations? With Italy to sustain him, and Austria neutral, he may hope to succeed against Germany, or meditate a menace of the British. Garibaldi had obtained possession of the pass of the Stelvio, the greatest in Europe, and so Austria was cut off from retreat. Louis Napoleon could then treat with Francis Joseph; but the Italians will still HATE the power that enslaves them.

W. S. C.

NOTE.—The Italians are generally disaffected. All agree that the prospect of revolution is imminent. The Pope himself complains; Tuscany complains; and, with Parma and Modena, is opposed to the return of the previously reigning sovereigns. The Sardinians will hate France as well as Austria now; and Austria, by right of treaty, have a voice in the Diet of the confederation. All Italy, in hatred of the temporal power of the Pope, is prepared to resist his position as President. ☞ Will the French Emperor separate the Gallican Church from Rome? M. About's book, published under the sanction of Louis Napoleon, advocates it. The examples taken being—The Anglican church, of which the throne of England is the head; the Russian, Evangelical church, and the Greek church, of which the Czar of Russia is head. If France should separate the national church from Rome, Rev. 17 would be in course of fulfillment as rapidly as by the uprising of the Italians.

Be with Us.

O, holy Father, grant us grace
To brave the coming tide,
When clouds of sorrow o'er us rise,
And graves are opening wide.

When Satan rages in the world,
And heavy thunders roll,
Thou canst impart a calmness, Lord,
Unto each trusting soul.

Though wealth and dearest friends forsake,
Be thou our constant Friend;
On thee alone our hopes are built,
Till life and time shall end.

Unite thy church by love's pure ties,
Let all for others pray;
Each love to bow before thy throne,
And cast all pride away.

Grant wisdom, Lord, in this our day,
When deadly fiends unite;
May we escape their every snare,
And keep our armor bright.

THE OVERTHROW OF SODOM.

Morning had dawned for the last time on the cities of the plain. The sun had gilded the distant mountain peaks, while the dissolving shades of night lingered on the verdant shores of the lovely Jordan. But the devoted city of Sodom was still sunk in quiet repose; its streets were silent, save when a giddy band of gay revelers returned from their bacchanalian feast, or when some citizen rose early to engage in his continued round of dissipation. No fear of dreaded calamity disturbed the dreams of the guilty slumberers, for the warning voice of Lot seemed to them like the wild vagary of a deluded man. Thus they calmly slumbered on, unconscious of the fiery tempest that was gathering in the distance, while the angel messengers, with hurrying footsteps, were directing the family of righteous Lot in their flight from the city devoted to destruction.

The "ten righteous," for whose sakes the city was to be spared, had been sought for in vain. Not even that limited number could be found, so corrupt had become those cities. The family of Lot alone found favor in the sight of heaven. This just man preserved his integrity, even amid all the contaminating influences by which he was surrounded. And now, when the hour of retribution had come, God did not forsake him, but provided for him a place of refuge, to which he might flee for safety when the vials of wrath should be poured out on those who had despised his upright example.

When this little company had passed through the gates, they were commanded to escape for their lives,—to look not behind them, neither to linger in the plain, but to escape to the mountain,—lest they should be consumed. A sudden fear possessed the mind of Lot. It seemed to him that he was being driven forth like an exile without a home to receive him. And he prayed that one little city, the city of Zoar, might be spared him. God graciously granted him his petition, and thither he bent his course, bestowing not a look on his worldly possessions left behind; for God's law was his, to willingly obey without murmuring.

The sun had arisen and clothed the sweet scene with enchanting beauty. So calm and lovely was it, giving forth no presage of approaching wrath, that the mind of Lot's wife began to be filled with doubts, notwithstanding the oft-repeated warning of the Divine messengers. Her mind was intent on the possessions which she had left behind; and, lingering in her flight, she cast a long and wishful gaze on the gilded domes and rare mansions of the proud city which glittered brightly in the morning sunbeams. From that alluring gaze she never turned aside, but there, cold and motionless, she stood,—a lasting monument of disbelief, a solemn warning to all who distrust the truth of God, or turn back with unhallowed desires after earth, having once walked in the path of duty.

But Lot, trusting in the mercy of God, paused not till he arrived at the walls of Zoar. Then, turning with bewildered gaze toward the place of his late sojourn, he beheld the threatening storm gathering over the guilty cities of the plain. A sickly tinge overspread the scene; while the dread simoon swept past like an earthquake, filling the stoutest heart with appalling fear. The hot, stifling air was rife with fearful sounds, as if the infernal regions had let loose their demons to mock the fears of man, and rend his soul with woe's wild agony. Anon the terrific clouds rolled along the sky, surcharged with fearful vengeance, sending forth from their dark chambers, reverberating peals of thunder, which shook the very hills to their base. Darker and more dense rolled the wrathful clouds; louder and more terrific howled the deafening thunder; while vengeful streams of lurid flame rolled down from heaven to earth. It was then that each guilty soul read its fearful doom.

O, mercy! what a heart-rending wail of anguish arose from the despairing multitudes doomed to destruction by their recklessness. Where are [illegible] the [illegible] gladness,—where flowed the rich, red [illegible] —now arose the cry of wildest [illegible] From [illegible] poured forth a motley mass of beings to read their certain destruction. What pen can picture the myriad forms of blank despair that looked forth on that last dread day of life's existence. Each mother there was a Niobe of grief, each father a Laocoon of mental agony; as round them gathered loved forms of childhood pleading for protection against a fate to which their parents by their own unholy deeds had doomed them. Ah! if ever the heart relents,—if ever the human bosom thrills to one emotion of goodness,—it is when helpless innocence pleads for succor. But ah! human agony was doubled now, for every avenue of escape was closed up, every hope had gone out in the black storm-cloud of heaven's wrath, all, all was lost forever!

The mad elements raved on till another shock rent the clouds asunder by its mighty concussion, and then the liquid fire, like an overwhelming cataract, came pouring down, scathing and dissolving the very rocks in its course. From a thousand fissures leaped sulphurous flames and scorching lava, which wrapped the monumental piles and gorgeous palaces of the proud cities of wickedness in one vast molten sea of ruin. Still the tempest of fire continued to spend its fury, while the earthquake's throe rent the earth asunder, till over all rolled a sea of pitchy blackness, enveloping in its oblivious shroud the guilty thousands which had long defied the just vengeance of an angry God.

Another morn, and the tempest was overpast. Then the lovely Jordan, for the first time checked in its flow, darkly rolled over the seething ruins, as if it sought to blot out forever the site of Sodom, so deeply stained with sin.

"Haste not!—rest not!" Calmly wait;
Meekly bear the storms of fate;
Duty be thy polar guide;
Do the right, whate'er betide!
Haste not!—rest not! Conflicts past,
God shall crown thy work at last!

Ministers losing Respect.

BRO. EDITOR:—Is it not so? Will it not always be so, where iniquity is winked at—and any part of the price is kept back? How can it be otherwise? No minister or editor can long be highly esteemed for his work's sake, unless faithful to God, faithful to himself and to the people; unless he stands firmly at his post, honors his high calling by declaring fearlessly, "all the words of this life."

It is truly painful, alarmingly so, to see how rapidly the pulpit and editorial chair are falling into disrepute! losing their hold on the consciences of sinners by this bowing and scraping to the popular voice! This falling off is notable in the mouths of saints and sinners; and the pulpit and press will continue to sink lower and lower in disrepute, until a new leaf is turned over. God honors them that honor him, and those that do not, are lightly esteemed. Why were the teachers and holy prophets of old so highly esteemed? Moses, Joshua, Nathan, Elijah, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, before whom kings trembled! Moreover, look at John the Baptist, Peter, Paul, James, and John; how greatly God honored them. The very heavens were made to shake at their approach! Why did kings and queens tremble at the presence of John Knox? They feared the prayers of this bold and holy servant of God more than bullets, or bayonets, the cannon's mouth, or red-hot bomb-shells. Beautiful, indeed, are the feet of the true and faithful servants of the most High, that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things.

Wherever the gospel is proclaimed in all its fulness and freeness, unadulterated, there God is honored, fear falls upon every soul, signs and wonders are done. But alas! how different where sound doctrine is not endured, but "After their own lusts" the people "heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." "A sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters."—Isa. 1: 4. To what a painful, shocking, awful state of degradation was the priest's office reduced by the Scribes and Pharisees, in consequence of their hypocrisy and time-serving! Christ poured in upon them the liquid flame of rebuke—"Ye hypocrites! well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me; but in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. 15: 7, 8. "Wo unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithes of mint and anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment and mercy." "Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel." Was there ever a truer or more graphic picture drawn, touching the present pulpit ministrations in very many churches?

A dearly beloved and devoted layman, alluding to this retrograde movement of the times, the sad delinquency of many in sacerdotal garb, writes thus:

"Reform here is greatly needed; and it seems that I have to contend single-handed and alone in this work. The clergy, editors, and doctors have been appealed to; but mum, mum! MUM!! not one word is said [illegible] novels, tobacco, [illegible] slavery, or strong drink! Why, these [illegible] brief quotation from our faithful correspondent, reveals [illegible] whole story. In the closing of Christ's sermon on the mount, "The people were astonished at his doctrine; for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes."

"'Tis when the cross is preached, and only then,
That from the pulpit a mysterious power
Goes forth to renovate the dead man."

A Mouse in the Pantry.

When I used to be out of temper, or naughty in any way, if grandfather was there, he would call to me, "Mary! Mary! take care, there's a mouse in the pantry." I often used to cease crying at this, and stand wondering to myself what he meant. I often ran to the pantry, too, to see if there really was a mouse in the trap, but I never found one.

One day I said, "Grandfather, I don't know what you mean. I haven't a pantry, and there are no mice in mother's, because I have looked ever so often." He smiled, and said, "Come, little woman, sit down here in the porch by me, and I'll tell you what I mean. Your heart, Mary, is the pantry; the little sins are the mice that get in and nibble away all the good, and that makes you sometimes cross, and peevish, and fretful, unwilling to do as your mother wishes; and if you do not strive against it, the mice will keep nibbling till the good is all eaten away. Now I want to show you, my little girl, how to prevent this. To keep the mice out, you must set a trap for them—the trap of watchfulness—and have for bait, good resolutions and firmness."

"But mother," said Mary, now quite interested in it, "wouldn't they nibble the resolutions away after a while?"

"No, Mary, not if the watch was kept strictly, and the bait is a good one. I did not exactly understand it when grandfather first told me, for I was such a very little girl; but I knew it was told for me in some way, and after a while I began to find out what he meant. He told me, too, that I might store my pantry with good things if I watched it well. Do you know what that means, Mary?"

"To be full of good always," said Mary, whose tears were dried now.

"Yes, to store it with good principles, good thoughts, and good feelings.—New Covenant.

Nothing Finished.

I once had the curiosity to look into a little girl's work-box. And what do you suppose I found? Well, in the first place, I found a "bead-purse," about half done; there was, however, no prospect of it ever being finished, for the needles were out, and the silk upon the spools all tangled and drawn into a complete wisp. Laying this aside, I took up a nice piece of perforated paper, upon which, was wrought one lid of a Bible, and beneath it the words, "I love;" but what she loved was left for me to conjecture. Beneath the Bible lid I found a sock, evidently commenced for some baby-foot; but it had come to a stand just upon the little heel, and there it seemed doomed to remain. Near to the sock was a needle-book, one cover of which was neatly made, and upon the other, partly finished, was marked, "To my dear." I need not, however, tell you all that I found there; but this much I can say, that during my travels through that work-box, I found not a single article complete; and mute as they were, these half-finished forsaken things told me a sad story about that little girl. They told me that, with a heart full of generous affection, with a head full of useful and pretty projects, all of which she had both the means and the skill to carry into effect, she was still a useless child—always doing, but never accomplishing her work. It was not a want of industry, but a want of perseverance. Remember, my dear little friends, that it matters but little what great thing we undertake. Our glory is not in that, but in what we accomplish. Nobody in the world cares for what we mean to do; but everybody will open their eyes by-and-by, to see what men and women and little children have done.

The Lambs of Jesus.

The Lambs of Jesus! who are they
But children who believe and pray—
That keep God's laws and ask his grace,
And seek a heavenly dwelling place?

The Lambs of Jesus! they are meek,
The words of peace and truth they speak,
To all God's creatures they are kind,
And like their Lord, of gentle mind.

The Lambs of Jesus! oh that we
Might of that blessed number be;
Lord, take us early to thy love,
And lead us to the fold above!

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year....$2.00
For a single copy 6 months....1.00
For a single copy 3 months....50
Five copies to one address for 6 months....[illegible]
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months....[illegible]
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months....[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Bro. they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, who sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we will acquit of that obligations to do.

The Kingdom is at Hand!

Oh, take your harps from off the willows,
Raise the song of triumph high,
For soon your "mourning shall be ended,"
And "redemption draweth nigh."
Ye warriors while with armor girded
At the battle's front ye stand,
Remember that your Leader cometh,
And the Kingdom is at hand!

For sweeter is the rest hereafter,
On the kingdom's peaceful shore,
And in the glory of His presence,
When the sun shall set no more.
Then christians, while the night is passing,
Let us form our pilgrim band,
And let us love each other better,
For the Kingdom is at hand!

Ye wand'ring sinners, turn you homeward
Ere the day of grace is o'er,
For soon shall mercy cease to call you,
And the Spirit strive no more.
Why will ye die? awake from slumber!
For on ruin's brink ye stand;
Repent, for lo, the Judge is coming,
And the Kingdom is at hand!

Remember that the Lord has waited,
Loving kindness suffered long,
Oh, when the ransomed sing "Hosannah,"
Will you join their triumph song?
And lest your bark 'mid all the surgings
Fails to reach the promised land,
We charge you, flee to Christ the Savior,
For the Kingdom is at hand!

Behold, the clouds above the mountains
Form no more their gloomy crest,
For lo, the morning dawneth brighter,
And the weary find their rest.
Then raise we now the song of triumph,
As our barks are near the strand,
For now the everlasting glory
Of the Kingdom is at hand!

Relationship to God.

In former dispensations, no one could inherit a throne but by kingship. So with heirs of the "throne of glory." In order to inherit the joys of God's kingdom, we must become connected with him. How was this to be effected? By Christ blending our nature with his. He stoops down to us, and links in with human nature, while yet his blended divinity unites him to God. Thus we are made kinsmen, or heirs of immortality. We are nearer to, and have higher claims on, God than even the angels.

All who are in Christ are considered as belonging to the Royal family, and God, the everlasting Father, cannot love Christ the Son without manifesting love for the adopted sons and daughters.

In this life how our hearts beat in happy anticipations whenever there are fair prospects before us. Even take a rich man and promise him an Earldom or Dukedom, and how transported will he appear. But how inexpressibly joyful would the poor beggar be to be thus exalted! Well, God has in store higher titles than these; the saints will not only claim Dukedom, etc., but theirs is a KINGDOM!

O, the love of God! O, the tie so strong which unites vile mortals to Christ, and Christ to God! Let us have faith in our God, for he is truly and legally our Father.

Again, the titles applied to us in this life are but empty names, for they come only by option of others. Our possessions, too, are vanity, for, be we rulers or not, the floods and flames may lay our lands in ashes. We may be kings to-day and beggars to-morrow. Our crown may be claimed by others, and our heads laid on the fatal block.

But in the kingdom of God there is nothing of the kind. It is an everlasting kingdom. There is no sorrow. All is peace. And it is so plainly registered, that the way-faring man can plainly "read his title clear" to those ever green fields, widening out into the expanse of eternity.

This life is a continual change. We may have friends to-day; to-morrow they are our bitterest enemies. Even if they continue faithful, death soon separates us. I can but weep over friends who have thus been called away; still there is comfort in anticipating a re-union in the realms of the blessed.

Dear readers, how is it with you? Are you closely connected with God, so that you can look up and say "my Father?" If not, I beg of you to become an heir of glory now, or the chance will be lost. Do not mock God. Let me relate something to you that may show your danger.

Last year, a number of young converts met in the presence of old schoolmates. One after another spoke of their hope in God. At last one closed by saying, "I would recommend religion to you all, with whom I have so often met. It is not only good to live by, but to die by." There was a graveyard close by. Two young females [illegible] carelessly mocking. O! how disdainfully they laughed. But hark! This spring I [illegible] of these, not having seen [illegible] a year. O, that meeting I'll never [illegible] the last time with the dead [illegible] faded and consumed. Louis Napoleon.

CAN HE BECOME A LIBERATOR?

The identity of the Napoleonic Dynasty is now universally conceded. Not only is the government of Napoleon III. claimed to be one with the authority of Bonaparte, by himself and his court, but by the common consent of the world; moreover, it is granted to have arisen from the revolutionary kingdom of France, which placed Bonaparte at the head of the French nation. The Directory was the ruin of the government; and the ascendency of that gigantic military influence in the hands of Napoleon I. was the ruin of the republic. It ascended from the anarchical abyss of political darkness—and when did it ever liberate? Where is the civil and religious liberty of any land that was secured by the towering political might of the empire of France? Even the revolution of 1789, much as it seemed to be demanded, did not liberate! It was the resistance of the encroachments of the throne upon the liberties of the people; but did the people obtain the deliverance which they sought? Not at all! The great causes were, the oppressions of the different classes by the most dissolute court, especially, in excessive taxation, (the nobility and clergy being exempt from taxes); the presence of that awful fortress in the city of Paris—the Bastile—a means of subduing Paris by Paris itself; and mandates issued from the throne for the arrest of suspected persons; with an immense standing army in time of peace.

A constitutional monarchy was attempted, but in vain! Civil war followed. War was proclaimed against other states. Europe began to declare war against revolutionary France! Was that liberty? The reign of terror followed! France beheaded her king and queen; but the fearful, blood-covered, butchering Robespierre and his confrers,—tyrants, than whom none more diabolical ever rioted on the blood of innocent victims,—beheaded the nobility by wholesale; and, not content with this, ordered multitudes shot down, and multitudes more sunk in the Seine. This was the liberty of the Revolution. This was the inception of Bonapartean domination in Europe. To a degree, a more rational condition of politics for a short time appeared, when the young Bonaparte was called to lead the army in Italy in 1796; who, being successful, and returning with glory, was made First Consul in 1800. A Constitution was given in 1802, but it gave no satisfactory liberty. What was the government then? A dictatorship, sustained by the army; nominally, it was in the hands of three; but, really, it was the power of one. Bonaparte managed to get himself elected; as to the others, one was a distinguished legal gentleman, the other a financier, neither of them disposed to interfere with his plans.

All this did not free France, did not free the countries which were conquered by her. At last all reserve is left, and, the moment having arrived, the name of Empire is blazoned to the world—Napoleon at the head—and an absolutism, equal in character to any which had been complained of, or could exist,—boldly offered to the world—offered for endorsement. This is all perfectly manifest by the history of the administration. But suppose we look at the policy adopted by the conquering Emperor. Was it even equal to the liberating policy of ancient Rome? which, by a peculiar tact in appointing kings, made the conquering provinces (all conquered lands were provinces, in fact,) willing subjects to her authority. To reach the highest eminence of human power,—to found a dynasty,—to inaugurate a family of kings,—these were his objects! A Murat, a Louis, a Jerome, a Lucien, a Joseph, a Eugene, must all be kings. Where? Not in France; for that is the government proper, and directed by the grand monarch of all; but in Italy, Lombardy, Holland, Germany, Naples, Spain, protected by France; i. e., in the grand relations of European nations controlled by her.

So Louis Napoleon cannot be a liberator. The very policy on which he acts forbids it. Can he act on any other policy and not lose his throne? His haste in the conquest of the territory of Piedmont and Lombardy, is no doubt directed to his ascendency in Europe. Three kingdoms under the direction of three branches of the illegitimate succession might be carved out of Italy. Then the army of the Rhine is now spoken of as being an essential part of the programme; just as fully as if sixty years had not gone by since the first Napoleon was fighting to consolidate his empire. What must be the object of 100,000 men for the army of the Rhine, but the acquisition of territory?

It was the doctrine of Napoleon I. that France should be restored to her ancient dominions. What was that? They claimed the left bank of the Rhine; which means that a part of Germany, part of Prussia, all of the Netherlands, shall be included. This carried the war to Germany, Holland, and Prussia; and were the countries delivered by the proclamation of the Empire, the wars of Bonaparte, or the wars of the convention? They were devastated by war; they were subjugated by it,—levied [illegible] conscripts, and [illegible] to support wars in which they could have [illegible] went by the board before the swelling tide of Bonapartean usurpation. Members of the Bonaparte family were made kings, whose government, if it succeeded, advanced the splendor of the Empire. In the nature of the case, a government imposed upon a people by the enthronement of a king, under the protection of an empire (of which it forms a part), who is not one of the nation, and whose policy must be foreign to the state over which he presides, because he is a foreigner, or at least sustained by a foreign power, can not be a liberation. That is not the liberation which the nationalities seek. That makes the state a province of an empire. That is not liberty! That the literal fact proves to a demonstration; and beyond all dispute the purpose of Napoleon Bonaparte was nothing else than a splendid Empire of provinces—himself the great genius and tyrant. What is the purpose of Louis Napoleon more? If indeed he vainly supposes that he could succeed in the practical, he could not; for a people cannot be free and be controlled by one who is not of themselves, however lenient. A free government must arise from the people who are governed, whether it have the name of Monarchy or Republicanism. The people whom it is proposed to deliver are now oppressed by a foreign yoke. Will Louis Napoleon give them freedom—allow them to govern themselves without his dictation? Or will it be a choice of masters merely? It may be an easier yoke, but a yoke still: it must be a control.

What has he assumed to do? In 1848 the French threw off the yoke of the Bourbons again, and a Provisional government was proclaimed. The grand reason of the uprising was the oppression of the Crown; the tyranny, real or supposed, of the Orleanist house; but especially were the French people awake to retrieve from the prospect of complete despotism their government, which they had supposed a constitutional monarchy, surrounded by "Republican Institutions"—the position of Louis Phillippe and Lafayette in 1830—to redeem the country from the impending slavery of absolutism, secured by the perversion of power in the hands of the "Citizen King." What had they suffered at his hands? Comparatively nothing. They relieved themselves from fear by dethroning him; and thus exposed to the shrewd and far-seeing aspirant to power their weakness and his most imminent danger.

He who speculates in Empire, knows full well where most to guard himself and where most fully to crush them. France has most to fear from France. The French deprecate most fully a French army. The universal cry was—"Liberty, equality, fraternity!" To secure that liberty and equality which the nation claims, it was attempted to consolidate a Republicanism. To secure this, they claimed the elective franchise, and Louis Napoleon was called to preside; first, for three years, and then by the election, which was a deception, before the expiration of his term, for life, which at one stroke made him dictator. The subjects were not free to vote for whom they pleased, through fear of the guillotine, if they voted against Napoleon. Was France liberated by him? Nay! she freed herself. Was she kept free by him? Nay! He bound her in servitude! At one stroke he annihilated the young Roman Republic while President of the French Republic. Political liberty could not thrive under his administration.

It is a notorious fact in the history of his government, under whatever name it may have existed, that the liberties of France have been growing less. As soon as the army and a sufficient amount of the people of Paris could be depended upon to support him under the name of Imperial government,—which must have a charm for a Frenchman, especially since the grandeur of the first blaze of Bonapartean domination, and with the same name to plant it anew,—he takes the entire control of affairs of state; he controls the elections, the army, the finances, the Cabinet and Chambers, the press,—what, in France, does he not control? and what does he not blast? All whom he could trust that were not opposed to him, in 1852, when that most notorious and abominable coup d'etat placed the Empire in his hands, were allowed to do as he dictated, all others; and especially men of note, being guilty of political offences, suffered death by the guillotine, or pined away in dungeons, or were transported to Cayenne or Algeria, where they were sure to die. This has been continued to the present time.

The disposal of political offenders and opponents, in our own time, reminds us of the same great facts five years ago. The Duc d'Enghin was shot at midnight like a dog in the ditch, after a mock trial, upon suspicion of an insurrectionary movement against the Empire,—(Bonaparte said he was the Empire.) Whether Gen. Espinasse, who was shot in the back of the neck at the battle of Magenta,—almost at the same instant his aid fell dead by a shot from behind also,—was taken off or not, it is said he was opposed to some of the Emperor's policy, and unpopular with the army.

The whole power of Bonaparte was gone by 1815, and the nation was back once [illegible] the dominion of the Bourbons [illegible] by the government of Louis [illegible] and [illegible] of Charles [illegible] Tenth. The French people again applied the previously tried remedy—revolution. Liberty had not arisen out of the "terrific era of anarchy and blood—designated the French revolution—the most stupendous military despotism which threatened to bind the world under its iron sceptre." Was the Revolution of 1830 more effectual in securing the result? The complaints against the government were nearly the same as in 1787. The Bastile was again reduced. Did liberty follow? Were the people more content? After seventeen years we find the work to be done over again, even when they had been living peaceably under a constitutional monarchy.

The consideration of the administration of the government of France under Louis Napoleon will inform us at once whether he will attempt the real liberty of the nations. Does he give the people freely the elective franchise? Does he allow representative Chambers? Does he allow an untrammeled national legislature? Does he even admit a ministry who shall resolve upon measures which wait his signature? Nay! he dictates to them what they must sanction or lose his favor. Have they, in the middle of this enlightened nineteenth century, the liberty of the press in France? Not at all! A government censorship is established, and nothing must be read (in the nature of the reading, or but what he permits.) Witness the forbidding of all reports of battles in Italy, in French newspapers. Reporters were not permitted to send accounts. The meagre bulletins of the Emperor were all that the French people could have.

The world has seen, with wonder, the consummation of the death of liberty in Rome, by the presence of a French army, and the consequent practical subjugation of the papal states, by their subjection to the Pope, through French intervention; the suicidal conversion of republican France to Imperialism, by the overmastering force of a once fallen dynasty, whose Prince, with a name counting undying honors, whose power gathered itself upon the abolished constitutional rights of a nation of thirty-three millions,—upon violated treaties, broken pledges and oaths;—does this look like the emancipation of the smaller and long-crushed nationalities of Europe? Do these things commend Napoleon as the deliverer of Italy? or are they to be taken as they are understood by the Italian Chieftain, and the terrible Carbonari? Are they to be taken as the evidence of a redemption of nations—the elevation of the king-ridden masses of the continent to political blessings, and freedom to govern themselves?—or the final apostasy of this political Abaddon—the damnation of this new Imperial Dragon?

And now that peace is signed by the Emperors of Austria and France, what will France have gained? Territory is yet refused; for the French would not take Savoy. Fifty millions sterling have been expended by France! Seventy thousand lives have been sacrificed! And will France be more free? Will her condition be improved? Napoleon III. has strengthened his own position by the Italian confederation, on the south-east. He has defeated all the hopes of the Italians. He has manifestly been at all these efforts with false objects.

Of what avail were all the brilliant achievements of Bonaparte in securing the liberty and prosperity of the countries of Europe, at Austerlitz, Wagram, Lodi, Borodino, Marengo, Berlin, Vienna? and how much more will Montabello, Melagnano, Magenta, Solferino, effect for the liberty of Europe, with the Emperor of Austria King of Venice, the Pope Honorary President of the Italian Confederation, and all made dependent on the French—where is liberty for those nations? With Italy to sustain him, and Austria neutral, he may hope to succeed against Germany, or meditate a menace of the British. Garibaldi had obtained possession of the pass of the Stelvio, the greatest in Europe, and so Austria was cut off from retreat. Louis Napoleon could then treat with Francis Joseph; but the Italians will still HATE the power that enslaves them.

W. S. C.

NOTE.—The Italians are generally disaffected. All agree that the prospect of revolution is imminent. The Pope himself complains; Tuscany complains; and, with Parma and Modena, is opposed to the return of the previously reigning sovereigns. The Sardinians will hate France as well as Austria now; and Austria, by right of treaty, have a voice in the Diet of the confederation. All Italy, in hatred of the temporal power of the Pope, is prepared to resist his position as President. ☞ Will the French Emperor separate the Gallican Church from Rome? M. About's book, published under the sanction of Louis Napoleon, advocates it. The examples taken being—The Anglican church, of which the throne of England is the head; the Russian, Evangelical church, and the Greek church, of which the Czar of Russia is head. If France should separate the national church from Rome, Rev. 17 would be in course of fulfillment as rapidly as by the uprising of the Italians.

Be with Us.

O, holy Father, grant us grace
To brave the coming tide,
When clouds of sorrow o'er us rise,
And graves are opening wide.

When Satan rages in the world,
And heavy thunders roll,
Thou canst impart a calmness, Lord,
Unto each trusting soul.

Though wealth and dearest friends forsake,
Be thou our constant Friend;
On thee alone our hopes are built,
Till life and time shall end.

Unite thy church by love's pure tie,
Let all for others pray;
Each love to bow before thy throne,
And cast all pride away.

Grant wisdom, Lord, in this our day,
When deadly fiends unite;
May we escape their every snare,
And keep our armor bright.

THE OVERTHROW OF SODOM.

Morning had dawned for the last time on the cities of the plain. The sun had gilded the distant mountain peaks, while the dissolving shades of night lingered on the verdant shores of the lovely Jordan. But the devoted city of Sodom was still sunk in quiet repose; its streets were silent, save when a giddy band of gay revelers returned from their bacchanalian feast, or when some citizen rose early to engage in his continued round of dissipation. No fear of dreaded calamity disturbed the dreams of the guilty slumberers, for the warning voice of Lot seemed to them like the wild vagary of a deluded man. Thus they calmly slumbered on, unconscious of the fiery tempest that was gathering in the distance, while the angel messengers, with hurrying footsteps, were directing the family of righteous Lot in their flight from the city devoted to destruction.

The "ten righteous," for whose sakes the city was to be spared, had been sought for in vain. Not even that limited number could be found, so corrupt had become those cities. The family of Lot alone found favor in the sight of heaven. This just man preserved his integrity, even amid all the contaminating influences by which he was surrounded. And now, when the hour of retribution had come, God did not forsake him, but provided for him a place of refuge, to which he might flee for safety when the vials of wrath should be poured out on those who had despised his upright example.

When this little company had passed through the gates, they were commanded to escape for their lives,—to look not behind them, neither to linger in the plain, but to escape to the mountain,—lest they should be consumed. A sudden fear possessed the mind of Lot. It seemed to him that he was being driven forth like an exile without a home to receive him. And he prayed that one little city, the city of Zoar, might be spared him. God graciously granted him his petition, and thither he bent his course, bestowing not a look on his worldly possessions left behind; for God's law was his, to willingly obey without murmuring.

The sun had arisen and clothed the sweet scene with enchanting beauty. So calm and lovely was it, giving forth no presage of approaching wrath, that the mind of Lot's wife began to be filled with doubts, notwithstanding the oft-repeated warning of the Divine messengers. Her mind was intent on the possessions which she had left behind; and, lingering in her flight, she cast a long and wishful gaze on the gilded domes and rare mansions of the proud city which glittered brightly in the morning sunbeams. From that alluring gaze she never turned aside, but there, cold and motionless, she stood,—a lasting monument of disbelief, a solemn warning to all who distrust the truth of God, or turn back with unhallowed desires after earth, having once walked in the path of duty.

But Lot, trusting in the mercy of God, paused not till he arrived at the walls of Zoar. Then, turning with bewildered gaze toward the place of his late sojourn, he beheld the threatening storm gathering over the guilty cities of the plain. A sickly tinge overspread the scene; while the dread simoon swept past like an earthquake, filling the stoutest heart with appalling fear. The hot, stifling air was rife with fearful sounds, as if the infernal regions had let loose their demons to mock the fears of man, and rend his soul with woe's wild agony. Anon the terrific clouds rolled along the sky, surcharged with fearful vengeance, sending forth from their dark chambers, reverberating peals of thunder, which shook the very hills to their base. Darker and more dense rolled the wrathful clouds; louder and more terrific howled the deafening thunder; while vengeful streams of lurid flame rolled down from heaven to earth. It was then that each guilty soul read its fearful doom.

O, mercy! what a heart-rending wail of anguish arose from the despairing multitudes doomed to destruction by their recklessness. Whose [illegible] the festal [illegible] gladness,—[illegible] the rich; and [illegible] —now arose [illegible] From [illegible] poured forth a motley mass of beings to read their certain destruction. What pen can picture the myriad forms of blank despair that looked forth on that last dread day of life's existence. Each mother there was a Niobe of grief, each father a Laocoon of mental agony; as round them gathered loved forms of childhood pleading for protection against a fate to which their parents by their own unholy deeds had doomed them. Ah! if ever the heart relents,—if ever the human bosom thrills to one emotion of goodness,—it is when helpless innocence pleads for succor. But ah! human agony was doubled now, for every avenue of escape was closed up, every hope had gone out in the black storm-cloud of heaven's wrath, all, all was lost forever!

The mad elements raved on till another shock rent the clouds asunder by its mighty concussion, and then the liquid fire, like an overwhelming cataract, came pouring down, scathing and dissolving the very rocks in its course. From a thousand fissures leaped sulphurous flames and scorching lava, which wrapped the monumental piles and gorgeous palaces of the proud cities of wickedness in one vast molten sea of ruin. Still the tempest of fire continued to spend its fury, while the earthquake's throe rent the earth asunder, till over all rolled a sea of pitchy blackness, enveloping in its oblivious shroud the guilty thousands which had long defied the just vengeance of an angry God.

Another morn, and the tempest was overpast. Then the lovely Jordan, for the first time checked in its flow, darkly rolled over the seething ruins, as if it sought to blot out forever the site of Sodom, so deeply stained with sin.

"Haste not!—rest not!" Calmly wait;
Meekly bear the storms of fate;
Duty be thy polar guide;
Do the right, whate'er betide!
Haste not!—rest not! Conflicts past,
God shall crown thy work at last!

Ministers losing Respect.

BRO. EDITOR:—Is it not so? Will it not always be so, where iniquity is winked at—and any part of the price is kept back? How can it be otherwise? No minister or editor can long be highly esteemed for his work's sake, unless faithful to God, faithful to himself and to the people; unless he stands firmly at his post, honors his high calling by declaring fearlessly, "all the words of this life."

It is truly painful, alarmingly so, to see how rapidly the pulpit and editorial chair are falling into disrepute! losing their hold on the consciences of sinners by this bowing and scraping to the popular voice! This falling off is notable in the mouths of saints and sinners; and the pulpit and press will continue to sink lower and lower in dispute, until a new leaf is turned over. God honors them that honor him, and those that do not, are lightly esteemed. Why were the teachers and holy prophets of old so highly esteemed? Moses, Joshua, Nathan, Elijah, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, before whom kings trembled? Moreover, look at John the Baptist, Peter, Paul, James, and John; how greatly God honored them. The very heavens were made to shake at their approach! Why did kings and queens tremble at the presence of John Knox? They feared the prayers of this bold and holy servant of God more than bullets, or bayonets, the cannon's mouth, or red-hot bomb-shells. Beautiful, indeed, are the feet of the true and faithful servants of the most High, that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things.

Wherever the gospel is proclaimed in all its fulness and freeness, unadulterated, there God is honored, fear falls upon every soul, signs and wonders are done. But alas! how different where sound doctrine is not endured, but "After their own lusts" the people "heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." "A sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters."—Isa. 1: 4. To what a painful, shocking, awful state of degradation was the priest's office reduced by the Scribes and Pharisees, in consequence of their hypocrisy and time-serving! Christ poured in upon them the liquid flame of rebuke—"Ye hypocrites! well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me; but in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. 15: 7, 8. "Wo unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithes of mint and anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment and mercy." "Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel." Was there ever a truer or more graphic picture drawn, touching the present pulpit ministrations in very many churches?

A dearly beloved and devoted layman, alluding to this retrograde movement of the times, the sad delinquency of many in sacerdotal garb, writes thus:

"Reform here is greatly needed; and it seems that I have to contend single-handed and alone in this work. The clergy, editors, and doctors have been appealed to; but mum, mum! MUM!! not one word is said [illegible] other novels, tobacco [illegible] drink! Why, [illegible] brief quotation from our faithful correspondent, reveals [illegible] the whole story. In the closing of Christ's sermon on the mount, "The people were astonished at his doctrine; for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes."

"'Tis when the cross is preached, and only then,
That from the pulpit a mysterious power
Goes forth to renovate the moral man."

Reading for Youth.

A Mouse in the Pantry.

When I used to be out of temper, or naughty in any way, if grandfather was there, he would call to me, "Mary! Mary! take care, there's a mouse in the pantry." I often used to cease crying at this, and stand wondering to myself what he meant. I often ran to the pantry, too, to see if there really was a mouse in the trap, but I never found one.

One day I said, "Grandfather, I don't know what you mean. I haven't a pantry, and there are no mice in mother's, because I have looked ever so often." He smiled, and said, "Come, little woman, sit down here in the porch by me, and I'll tell you what I mean. Your heart, Mary, is the pantry; the little sins are the mice that get in and nibble away all the good, and that makes you sometimes cross, and peevish, and fretful, unwilling to do as your mother wishes; and if you do not strive against it, the mice will keep nibbling till the good is all eaten away. Now I want to show you, my little girl, how to prevent this. To keep the mice out, you must set a trap for them—the trap of watchfulness—and have for bait, good resolutions and firmness."

"But mother," said Mary, now quite interested in it, "wouldn't they nibble the resolutions away after a while?"

"No, Mary, not if the watch was kept strictly, and the bait is a good one. I did not exactly understand it when grandfather first told me, for I was such a very little girl; but I knew it was told for me in some way, and after a while I began to find out what he meant. He told me, too, that I might store my pantry with good things if I watched it well. Do you know what that means, Mary?"

"To be full of good always," said Mary, whose tears were dried now.

"Yes, to store it with good principles, good thoughts, and good feelings.—New Covenant.

Nothing Finished.

I once had the curiosity to look into a little girl's work-box. And what do you suppose I found? Well, in the first place, I found a "bead-purse," about half done; there was, however, no prospect of it ever being finished, for the needles were out, and the silk upon the spools all tangled and drawn into a complete wisp. Laying this aside, I took up a nice piece of perforated paper, upon which, was wrought one lid of a Bible, and beneath it the words, "I love;" but what she loved was left for me to conjecture. Beneath the Bible lid I found a sock, evidently commenced for some baby-foot; but it had come to a stand just upon the little heel, and there it seemed doomed to remain. Near to the sock was a needle-book, one cover of which was neatly made, and upon the other, partly finished, was marked, "To my dear." I need not, however, tell you all that I found there; but this much I can say, that during my travels through that work-box, I found not a single article complete; and mute as they were, these half-finished forsaken things told me a sad story about that little girl. They told me that, with a heart full of generous affection, with a head full of useful and pretty projects, all of which she had both the means and the skill to carry into effect, she was still a useless child—always doing, but never accomplishing her work. It was not a want of industry, but a want of perseverance. Remember, my dear little friends, that it matters but little what great thing we undertake. Our glory is not in that, but in what we accomplish. Nobody in the world cares for what we mean to do; but everybody will open their eyes by-and-by, to see what men and women and little children have done.

The Lambs of Jesus.

The Lambs of Jesus! who are they
But children who believe and pray—
That keep God's laws and ask his grace,
And seek a heavenly dwelling place?

The Lambs of Jesus! they are meek,
The words of peace and truth they speak,
To all God's creatures they are kind,
And like their Lord, of gentle mind.

The Lambs of Jesus! oh that we
Might of that blessed number be;
Lord, take us early to thy love,
And lead us to the fold above!

"My Heart is Fixed."

Earthly voices linger round me
As I tread the narrow way,
Ever seeking to allure me
In the paths of sin to stray.
Oft they whisper of the pleasure
Worldly honor can impart,
And they flatter and deceive me,
Hoping thus to gain my heart.

When my eyes are dim with weeping
Over sins and follies past,
Demons come with dark'ning shadows,
Saying, "You will fall at last."
But I'm trusting in my Savior,
Christ the mighty One to save;
He has promised to redeem me
From all sin and from the grave.

Powers of darkness, can ye move me,
While the everlasting arms
Ever hold my trusting footsteps
From your sinful, luring charms?
While my feet are planted firmly
On the Rock of ages strong,
With the lamp of truth to cheer me,
And Jehovah for my song?

Ah! I scorn your bold endeavor
To regain me by your wiles,
Loving, far above your favor,
To secure my Savior's smiles.
Yes, I'd choose to suffer alway,
Scorn and sorrow, grief and pain,
That with Jesus, on Mount Zion,
I at last may live and reign.

A Sermon.

BY R. V. LYON.

"Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light."—2 Tim. 1: 10.

The prevailing opinion of the religious world is, that all men are in possession of an immortal soul, which is to exist subsequently to the death of the body, either in happiness or misery, and its existence is to run parallel with the existence of God!

This opinion has been derived from the heathen world. The first among the heathen philosophers who taught this heathen dogma with any degree of success, was Zoroaster, who lived during the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, one of the kings of Persia. Being one of the most learned men of his age, he exerted a powerful influence among the nobility of the empire; consequently the bulk of the people embraced the dogma. Pythagoras, a disciple of his, embraced the doctrine and carried it over into Greece with a little alteration. Among the Grecian philosophers who taught the doctrine with a success that might have astonished the angelic host which encircle the throne of the eternal, are to be found a Socrates and a Plato; men whose intellectual capacities have been equalled only by a few of Adam's race. When the Jewish church began to apostatize from the faith once delivered to the saints, a portion of them embraced this heathen dogma. But at last Jesus came, waging war with this doctrine, by bringing heaven's artillery to bear against it. Reader, please listen to him. "Search the Scriptures (the prophets,) for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."—"I am the way, the truth, and the life."—"I am the resurrection and the life."—"Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you."—"Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, (in prospect, or in Christ,) and I will raise him up at the last day."—"As the living Father sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me;" (at the resurrection of the last day.)—"And as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and power to give it to as many as thou hast given him."

Subsequent to his death, burial, resurrection and ascension to his Father's right hand, the apostles, in obedience to the broad commission, continued the war which he had commenced. But the apostasy came, and many [illegible] embraced the [illegible] of [illegible] beast, full of names of blasphemy, beautifully arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornications; and among the ingredients which are to be found in this cup, is the doctrine of the soul's immortality. And as her daughters have never been weaned from the breast, they have incorporated it into their creeds; consequently their teachers are handing it out to their hearers as a part and parcel of the word of the living Father; nevertheless it is at war with every page of the book of nature and revelation. Listen to my text, "Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." According to the laws of language, my text amounts to positive declaration that life and the right to immortality were lost, but brought to light through the gospel. How lost? How brought to light?—are the questions growing out of the text, and to which your attention is invited.

1. How was life and the right to immortality lost? In order to answer this question correctly, it will be necessary for me to call your attention to the creation of the first man. Gen. 1: 26.—"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." In Gen. 2: 7, we are informed of what kind of material man was made.—"And the Lord God formed (made) man of the dust of the ground." Here we have the Divine testimony that man was made of dust, therefore material. But Adam, though he was in possession of all the faculties that the human mind can ever possess, was destitute of thought, because the brain had not been put in an active state. Now comes the question, What did the Lord do to Adam, that he might think, reason, hope, fear, love, adore, imagine, comprehend, and aspire after unending existence?—Heathenism. Romanism, and Protestantism combined, are united in answering that God put into man an immortal soul, which was a part of himself; and this constitutes the thinking, the knowing part of man. All this, on the part of these three great powers, is assumption. What saith the Word? Please listen to it. "And the Lord God formed (made) man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," (margin, lives.) The same breath that he had put into the beast, for they have all one breath.—Eccl. 3: 19, 20. "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that man hath no preeminence above a beast; (in the article of death,) for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Gen. 7: 21, 22.—"And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, of beast, and of every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died."

Here we have the testimony of God that man and beast have one breath; and that they alike die, and go to one place; and that man in the article of death has no superiority over the beast. But to the question: "The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life: and man became a living soul" (or a living creature); and when his breath departs from him, he is thrown into the same lifeless condition that he was in prior to the breath being put into him. Ps. 146: 4.—"His (man's) breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Eccl. 12: 7.—"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit (breath) shall return unto God who gave it." When did God give it? Gen. 2: 7.—"He breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Thought was the result. And having planted a garden eastward in Eden, there he put the man whom he had made, in connection with his wife, on trial for immortality; and, as a test of his obedience, the Lord gave him full liberty to eat of all the trees of Eden freely, "except of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." (Hebrew, "Dying, thou shalt die.")

Behold Adam as he now walks amid Eden's beautiful groves, in unison with his Maker; the beasts are all tame, and as they passed before him he gave names to them all. But how soon this blissful scene is changed! The serpent being more subtle than any beast of the field, influenced Eve [illegible] "Ye shall not [illegible] know that in [illegible]

knowing good and evil." Eve listened to the seducer, and reached forth her hand and gathered fruit from the tree, eat thereof, gave her husband, and he did eat. And upon that very day in which he partook of the forbidden fruit, he became a dying creature, by the sentence of death being passed upon him; for the law knows no mercy. In the language of London's pulpit orator, (John Bunyan) upon every sentence is written death!

In Gen. 3: 17–19 we have the penalty of that law which Adam broke; the death that he was to die, and the only death that he or any of his posterity have ever died, and its nature as given and defined by the Lawgiver himself. Please listen to it.—"Because thou hast done this, (eaten of the tree which I commanded thee not to eat,) . . . in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This penalty, when fully executed upon man, deprived him of life, and reduced him to dust, placing him in a condition where he would be just as though he had never existed as a conscious being; and to make his punishment sure, man was driven from the garden of Eden to till the ground from which he was taken. And God placed "on the east of the garden of Eden cherubims and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life, lest he put forth his hand, and eat and live forever." Here we have the reason assigned why the tree of life is guarded, "lest man put forth his hand, and eat and live forever." Also the second act of mercy on the part of God towards man, after he had sinned, in shutting him away from the tree of life, "lest he should eat and live forever" in a state of rebellion against his moral government; and thus the doctrine of endless torture or misery would have been true.

If Adam had stood the trial, he would have had a right to the tree of life, and eat and lived forever. He would have come into possession of power to have placed his posterity where they could eat and live forever. But, upon his failing to stand the trial, he lost life and the right to immortality; and thereby placed himself and his posterity in the grave, where they must have remained eternally, if the Father had not been heard to say, "I have found a ransom." Rom. 5: 12, 14.—"Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men. . . Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come."

In Isa. 25: 7, we are taught that in that day when the Lord shall create a feast of fat things (the marriage supper of the Lamb,) that he will destroy in this mountain (Mount Zion) the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations, and he will swallow up death in victory. Here we have a beautiful figure, borrowed from the practice of ancient kings, who ordered a vail or covering to be cast over the face of one whom they had condemned to be put to death; and by it we are taught that all nations are under the sentence of death; therefore mortals, and tending to the grave: and all this by the transgression of the first pair. "For since by man (Adam) came death, by man (Jesus) came also the resurrection of the dead." Hence all can see, who do their own thinking and reading, how life and the right to immortality were lost.

This brings us to the second part of our subject, namely, How have life and immortality been brought to light through the gospel?

1. The gospel reveals to us the fact that the Father promised to send Jesus, the second Adam, into the world, (Gen. 3: 15.) Also the fact that "when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4: 4, 5. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." That is, as Adam, by his transgression, hath placed his race in the grave, even so by Christ shall all the race come up out of their graves. "But every man in his own order." And that order is given unto us by Jesus. John 5: 28, 29.—"Marvel not at this; (i. e. when ye shall see Lazarus, etc.,) for the hour (time) is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of [illegible]

2. The gospel reveals to us the fact that Jesus was placed here on trial for immortality—that he stood the trial—that he died, was buried, and was raised from the dead immortal; and is now in possession of the power over death and the grave. Heb. 2: 9–18.—"But we see Jesus who was made a little lower than the angels, (angels are immortal, Jesus was mortal) for the suffering of death. . . For it became him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. . . . Forasmuch, then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he (Jesus) also himself likewise took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil. . . Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." Here we have the testimony of the great Apostle to the Gentiles, that Jesus was made in all things like unto his brethren; therefore he must have been mortal, and on trial for immortality. Heb. 5: 8–10.—"Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; called of God, a High Priest after the order of Melchizedec." Heb. 4: 15.—"For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Jesus himself once said, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me." Because he had stood the trial, kept the law which Adam had broken, and in keeping it, he magnified it, and made it honorable. Therefore, he became the "Israelite in whom there is no guile."

3. The gospel reveals to us the fact that Jesus died. Being made of a woman, and made under the law, therefore he fell under the sentence of death, though no guile was found in him. And in due time he literally died, that we might have life. Peter's testimony is in point. Acts 2: 23.—"Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." Acts 3: 14, 15.—"But ye denied the holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you, and killed the Prince (author) of life." Paul's testimony is in point, 1 Cor. 15: 3.—"For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." 1 Pet. 3: 18. Jesus was "put to death in the flesh." Jesus himself testifies positively that he was once dead. Rev. 1: 18.—"I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forever more, amen; and have the keys of the grave and of death."

Again, when he was demanded by the Pharisees to give them a sign, he answered them, "There shall be no sign given to this generation, except the sign of the prophet Jonah: as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, even so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." This sign was given as a proof of his being the Messiah. Therefore, it furnishes us with immutable testimony that Jesus, soul and body, for three days and three nights, lay in the heart of the earth. Consequently he did not go to hell, (as some suppose, nor to heaven,) but into the tomb of Joseph, there to rest until he was made alive by his Father raising him up from the dead. Again he said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Reader, was Christ with the truth when he said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death?" You answer "yes." Truly, then, the doctrine of the soul's immortality has no place in the great plan of redemption; consequently it is of heathen origin.

In Isa. 53: 10, we are taught that the Father would make his soul an offering for sin. "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin." Now the law demanded the death of the victim that was to be offered in sacrifice on the altar: and as Christ was the antitype of those sacrifices, consequently his soul must be slain in order that the antitype fill the type. The paschal lamb, that was slain at the command of God by Moses, is proof that Jesus died. "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed (margin, slain) for us." Prove to me that a portion of that lamb was alive after it had been slain, and the blood sprinkled upon the post of the doors, then I will believe that Jesus was dead and alive at the same time.

Again Peter, on the day of pentecost, taught that Jesus went into the state of death—the grave, soul and body. Acts 2: 31.—"He seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, (the grave,) neither did his flesh see corruption." Here we have the testimony of the inspired Peter, and of David, a prophet of the Most High God, that Jesus himself literally died, and ceased to exist as a conscious being.

The highest eulogy that has ever been given upon his character by uninspired men, has been given by infidels. They say his character was a model of perfection. His death, as described by the evangelists, they admit; but his resurrection they deny. Unless you can prove to them that the Father raised him up out of the grave immortal, three days subsequent to his death, according to the Scriptures, infidels are right in taking the position that death is an eternal sleep; from the fact that there would be no testimony in the wide universe of God to prove that any of Adam's posterity would ever have a future state of being. Glory be to God! in this state of despair, the gospel stands out in bold relief, because it reveals to us the fact that his Father did raise him from the dead immortal; that as he came forth out of the grave, he took possession of the "keys of death and the grave." Therefore he is in possession of the power to be death's plague and the grave's destruction. It furnishes us with some five hundred and fifteen witnesses, whose character for truth and veracity has never been impeached, to sustain the doctrine of his resurrection. Among them was a Thomas, who handled him by putting his fingers into the prints of his nails, and his hands into his side, which had been pierced by the Roman soldier; therefore no deception.

Thus the glorious doctrine of life and immortality has been demonstrated unto us by the Father, in the resurrection of his Son to unending existence. Consequently he now stands before us in the great plan of redemption, not as a suffering Savior, not as a dead Savior, but as one "whom God hath raised from the dead," to be the medium, appointed by Himself, through which pardon and immortality can come to the children of the first Adam. "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore, amen, and have the keys of the grave and of death." John 11: 25.—"I am the resurrection and the life."

Again. "As the Father hath life in himself, so (in like manner) hath he given to the Son to have life in himself: and power to give it to as many as thou hast given him." To the Jews he said, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." Rom. 6: 23.—The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." That is, eternal life (immortality) is the gift of God, and comes to us through Jesus Christ. 1 Tim. 6: 13–16.—"I give thee charge, in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession, that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, which in his times (times of restitution) he shall show" that he is "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords,—who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto." Here the Apostle has taught us that Jesus is destined, at some future day, to become an earthly potentate, (king over all the earth.) That in the times of restitution he will show that he only of all the potentates of earth hath immortality! Therefore, he only hath a right to earth's dominion, and power to give immortality unto us; consequently, if we turn our backs upon him, we never can come into possession of immortality; therefore the time will come when we shall cease to exist as conscious beings. Solemn thought!

4. The gospel reveals to us the truth that immortality is a conditional blessing. Heb. 5: 9.—"And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." Rom. 2: 6, 7.—"Who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." That is, by believing the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of his Anointed, and yielding implicit obedience to all his requirements: unto such, the Lord will render eternal life when he comes.

But if it be true, as Plato taught, that man has an immortal soul, which is a divine essence that emanated directly from God, and existed previous to man's being made, then the testimony of Paul is to be rejected, and the doctrine of eternal life through Jesus Christ is the height of folly.

5. The gospel reveals to us the time when those who seek for immortality shall come into possession of it. 1 Cor. 15: 50.—"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, (that is, the kingdom of God is not to be possessed by mortal men, but by immortal,) neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." That is, corruption and incorruption do not dwell together in man at the same time, consequently he who teaches the heathen dogma of the immortality of the soul, is guilty of laying Paul in a lie!

Again, says Paul, "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, (that is, those saints which are alive when Jesus comes will not die,) but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, (the righteous dead,) and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." And the Apostle, in his first letter to the Thessalonian brethren, (4: 16) has made the sounding of this trumpet to depend upon the Lord's second coming. "Then this mortal will put on immortality, so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Thus we have shown you how life and the right to immortality were lost; also how they are brought to light through the gospel; consequently, man is a mortal, fleshly, animal being; therefore his entire being is subject to decay, and liable any hour to fall down under the power of death. Paul testifies, that "the first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." Jesus taught Nicodemus that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Man may rise high in the scale of morals, and as a literary being he may ascend pyramids upon the back of pyramids, until he shall become master of every science that was ever taught under the broad heavens; still he is mortal, and before he can have a spiritual nature, he must be born of the Spirit. And as there must be a begetting in nature in order that a child be born, so in grace man must be "begotten by the incorruptible word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

Reader, would you come into possession of unending existence? Come to Christ! Would you bear the victor's palm, wear the white robe, sing the conqueror's song, and with the shining host of God's elect plant your feet upon fair Beulah's blissful plains? Come to Christ! Would you be immortal, and stand secure amid the scenes of that tremendous day, when Christ shall vacate the Father's throne, and in robes of royalty descend the burning pathway of the heavens? Come to Christ! Amen.

Musings with Self.

O cruel self! why dost thou linger still, and cause my wounded heart so oft to bleed, and every hour with grief annoy because thou canst not altogether rule? Or, if in part thou hast been overcome, why gather all thy strength again, and just at the hour when I would bid all selfish thoughts be gone, why art thou lurking still around my foolish heart, to cripple all my usefulness, and spoil my good designs? If in one point I foil thy plans, I quick perceive thee in another gaining ground, and rising up just in time to steal away my strength, when other foes are on the alert which claim my constant care. When thou art half subdued, thou dost complain of sad neglect, of treatment so unjust, of shame, and oft pretended grief;

And yet, 'tis only selfish pride,
Which in thee I've mortified.

And now I will not banish thee, lest thou return with double force and overcome me ever unawares; and as thou art not content with ruling half, I'll take away thy rule entire, and give God's faithful Spirit and his word the rule that thou hast borne, and it shall bind thee as my prisoner; then all thy ways I can control. For well I know thy musings savor not of motives pure, in ACTIONS even GOOD, or solid hopes; therefore I will not trust thy voice at home, nor heed thy pleas [illegible] wrought.

Baptism.

Baptism is the name of the act of baptizing. Through this action called baptism the disciples in primitive days were buried in the likeness of Christ's death, and raised in the likeness of his resurrection. The Greek word signifies to dip, plant, plunge, bury, immerse, but never to sprinkle. When our friends die, we signify it by burying them; even so when we become dead to sin, if consistent, we shall be buried; buried in less than ten years too.

Death to sin implies an entire cessation from a former course of transgression. If thus dead, better be buried. If dead and buried, we must be raised from the watery grave, or we can have no future life. "If we have been planted in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection." How impressive, significant and glorious these things appear when looked upon with a single eye; but when whittled down to a point to suit pride and to evade the cross of Christ and his example, how nonsensical and foolish! It appears to me that any man, unless completely bewildered in the fog of mysticism, must see the force of the language of the good old book on this point.

The question is frequently asked, "Is baptism essential to salvation?" The living God is not a non-essential God, neither does he deal in non-essentials in the Bible. He has commissioned his servants to go into all the world and disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and has promised that those that obey shall be saved; and declares that the balance shall be damned. If any body wishes to tamper with the Almighty, and try to get into the kingdom for less than the advertised fare, they can try it; but I think they will find at last that there are no second-class tickets to be had with Jesus' signature attached to them. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, for the remission of sins;" so says Peter. Amen. God has set before you life and death, and has given the price of both. Choose ye! J. FLETCHER BAKER.

A Few Thoughts on Luke 21: 25, 26.

Luke's record is,

1. Signs in the sun.
2. Signs in the moon.
3. Signs in the stars.
4. Distress of nations, (not of individuals,) with perplexity, and at the same time the sea and waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth, (not things that are happening among them.)

Why all this? What is the cause of all this distress, perplexity, this overwhelming fear? He says,—"For the powers of heaven shall be shaken! And then shall they see the Son of man coming!" Let us compare this with the testimony of the other witnesses.

Says Matthew (24: 29,) (1) "The sun shall be darkened." (2) "The moon shall not give her light." (3) "The stars shall fall." (4.) "The powers of heaven shall be shaken, and then shall the sign of the Son of man appear,—all the tribes (nations) of the earth mourn." Is not this coincident with Luke's distress, perplexity,—fear? Mark's testimony is the same like Matthew's to need repeating.

Is John silent on this [illegible] theme? No. What he, in connection with Peter, James and Andrew heard, he afterwards saw, [illegible]

"My Heart is Fixed."

Earthly voices linger round me
As I tread the narrow way,
Ever seeking to allure me
In the paths of sin to stray.
Oft they whisper of the pleasure
Worldly honor can impart,
And they flatter and deceive me,
Hoping thus to gain my heart.

When my eyes are dim with weeping
Over sins and follies past,
Demons come with dark'ning shadows,
Saying, "You will fall at last."
But I'm trusting in my Savior,
Christ the mighty One to save;
He has promised to redeem me
From all sin and from the grave.

Powers of darkness, can ye move me,
While the everlasting arms
Ever hold my trusting footsteps
From your sinful, luring charms?
While my feet are planted firmly
On the Rock of ages strong,
With the lamp of truth to cheer me,
And Jehovah for my song?

Ah! I scorn your bold endeavor
To regain me by your wiles,
Loving, far above your favor,
To secure my Savior's smiles.
Yes, I'd choose to suffer alway,
Scorn and sorrow, grief and pain,
That with Jesus, on Mount Zion,
I at last may live and reign.

A Sermon.

BY H. V. LYON.

"Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light."—2 Tim. 1: 10.

The prevailing opinion of the religious world is, that all men are in possession of an immortal soul, which is to exist subsequently to the death of the body, either in happiness or misery, and its existence is to run parallel with the existence of God!

This opinion has been derived from the heathen world. The first among the heathen philosophers who taught this heathen dogma with any degree of success, was Zoroaster, who lived during the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, one of the kings of Persia. Being one of the most learned men of his age, he exerted a powerful influence among the nobility of the empire; consequently the bulk of the people embraced the dogma. Pythagoras, a disciple of his, embraced the doctrine and carried it over into Greece with a little alteration. Among the Grecian philosophers who taught the doctrine with a success that might have astonished the angelic host which encircle the throne of the eternal, are to be found a Socrates and a Plato; men whose intellectual capacities have been equalled only by a few of Adam's race. When the Jewish church began to apostatize from the faith once delivered to the saints, a portion of them embraced this heathen dogma. But at last Jesus came, waging war with this doctrine, by bringing heaven's artillery to bear against it. Reader, please listen to him. "Search the Scriptures (the prophets,) for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."—"I am the way, the truth, and the life."—"I am the resurrection and the life."—"Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you."—"Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, (in prospect, or in Christ,) and I will raise him up at the last day."—"As the living Father sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me;" (at the resurrection of the last day.)—"And as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and power to give it to as many as thou hast given him."

beast, full of names of blasphemy, beautifully arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornications; and among the ingredients which are to be found in this cup, is the doctrine of the soul's immortality. And as her daughters have never been weaned from the breast, they have incorporated it into their creeds; consequently their teachers are handing it out to their hearers as a part and parcel of the word of the living Father; nevertheless it is at war with every page of the book of nature and revelation. Listen to my text, "Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." According to the laws of language, my text amounts to positive declaration that life and the right to immortality were lost, but brought to light through the gospel. How lost? How brought to light?—are the questions growing out of the text, and to which your attention is invited.

1. How was life and the right to immortality lost? In order to answer this question correctly, it will be necessary for me to call your attention to the creation of the first man. Gen. 1: 26.—"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." In Gen. 2: 7, we are informed of what kind of material man was made.—"And the Lord God formed (made) man of the dust of the ground." Here we have the Divine testimony that man was made of dust, therefore material. But Adam, though he was in possession of all the faculties that the human mind can ever possess, was destitute of thought, because the brain had not been put in an active state. Now comes the question, What did the Lord do to Adam, that he might think, reason, hope, fear, love, adore, imagine, comprehend, and aspire after unending existence?—Heathenism, Romanism, and Protestantism combined, are united in answering that God put into man an immortal soul, which was a part of himself; and this constitutes the thinking, the knowing part of man. All this, on the part of these three great powers, is assumption. What saith the Word? Please listen to it. "And the Lord God formed (made) man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," (margin, lives.) The same breath that he had put into the beast, for they have all one breath.—Eccl. 3: 19, 20. "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that man hath no preeminence above a beast; (in the article of death,) for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Gen. 7: 21, 22.—"And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, of beast, and of every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died."

Here we have the testimony of God that man and beast have one breath; and that they alike die, and go to one place; and that man in the article of death has no superiority over the beast. But to the question: "The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life: and man became a living soul" (or a living creature); and when his breath departs from him, he is thrown into the same lifeless condition that he was in prior to the breath being put into him. Ps. 146: 4.—"His (man's) breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Eccl. 12: 7.—"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit (breath) shall return unto God who gave it." When did God give it? Gen. 2: 7.—"He breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Thought was the result. And having planted a garden eastward in Eden, there he put the man whom he had made, in connection with his wife, on trial for immortality; and, as a test of his obedience, the Lord gave him full liberty to eat of all the trees of Eden freely, "except of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." (Hebrew, "Dying, thou shalt die.")

Behold Adam as he now walks amid Eden's beautiful groves, in unison with his Maker; the beasts are all tame, and as they passed before him he gave names to them all. But how soon this blissful scene is changed! The serpent being more subtle than any beast of the field, influenced Eve to disobey God by saying, "Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in [illegible]

knowing good and evil." Eve listened to the seducer, and reached forth her hand and gathered fruit from the tree, eat thereof, gave her husband, and he did eat. And upon that very day in which he partook of the forbidden fruit, he became a dying creature, by the sentence of death being passed upon him; for the law knows no mercy. In the language of London's pulpit orator, (John Bunyan) upon every sentence is written death!

In Gen. 3: 17–19 we have the penalty of that law which Adam broke; the death that he was to die, and the only death that he or any of his posterity have ever died, and its nature as given and defined by the Lawgiver himself. Please listen to it.—"Because thou hast done this, (eaten of the tree which I commanded thee not to eat,) . . . in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This penalty, when fully executed upon man, deprived him of life, and reduced him to dust, placing him in a condition where he would be just as though he had never existed as a conscious being; and to make his punishment sure, man was driven from the garden of Eden to till the ground from which he was taken. And God placed "on the east of the garden of Eden cherubims and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life, lest he put forth his hand, and eat and live forever." Here we have the reason assigned why the tree of life is guarded, "lest man put forth his hand, and eat and live forever." Also the second act of mercy on the part of God towards man, after he had sinned, in shutting him away from the tree of life, "lest he should eat and live forever" in a state of rebellion against his moral government; and thus the doctrine of endless torture or misery would have been true.

If Adam had stood the trial, he would have had a right to the tree of life, and eat and lived forever. He would have come into possession of power to have placed his posterity where they could eat and live forever. But, upon his failing to stand the trial, he lost life and the right to immortality; and thereby placed himself and his posterity in the grave, where they must have remained eternally, if the Father had not been heard to say, "I have found a ransom." Rom. 5: 12, 14.—"Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men. . . Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come."

In Isa. 25: 7, we are taught that in that day when the Lord shall create a feast of fat things (the marriage supper of the Lamb,) that he will destroy in this mountain (Mount Zion) the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations, and he will swallow up death in victory. Here we have a beautiful figure, borrowed from the practice of ancient kings, who ordered a vail or covering to be cast over the face of one whom they had condemned to be put to death; and by it we are taught that all nations are under the sentence of death; therefore mortals, and tending to the grave: and all this by the transgression of the first pair. "For since by man (Adam) came death, by man (Jesus) came also the resurrection of the dead." Hence all can see, who do their own thinking and reading, how life and the right to immortality were lost.

This brings us to the second part of our subject, namely, How have life and immortality been brought to light through the gospel?

1. The gospel reveals to us the fact that the Father promised to send Jesus, the second Adam, into the world, (Gen. 3: 15.) Also the fact that "when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4: 4, 5. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." That is, as Adam, by his transgression, hath placed his race in the grave, even so by Christ shall all the race come up out of their graves. "But every man in his own order." And that order is given unto us by Jesus, John 5: 28, 29.—"Marvel not at this; (i. e. when ye shall see Lazarus, etc.,) for the hour (time) is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; [illegible]

2. The gospel reveals to us the fact that Jesus was placed here on trial for immortality—that he stood the trial—that he died, was buried, and was raised from the dead immortal; and is now in possession of the power over death and the grave. Heb. 2: 9–18.—"But we see Jesus who was made a little lower than the angels, (angels are immortal, Jesus was mortal) for the suffering of death. . . For it became him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. . . . Forasmuch, then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he (Jesus) also himself likewise took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil. . . Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." Here we have the testimony of the great Apostle to the Gentiles, that Jesus was made in all things like unto his brethren; therefore he must have been mortal, and on trial for immortality. Heb. 5: 8–10.—"Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; called of God, a High Priest after the order of Melchizedec." Heb. 4: 15.—"For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Jesus himself once said, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me." Because he had stood the trial, kept the law which Adam had broken, and in keeping it, he magnified it, and made it honorable. Therefore, he became the "Israelite in whom there is no guile."

3. The gospel reveals to us the fact that Jesus died. Being made of a woman, and made under the law, therefore he fell under the sentence of death, though no guile was found in him. And in due time he literally died, that we might have life. Peter's testimony is in point. Acts 2: 23.—"Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." Acts 3: 14, 15.—"But ye denied the holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you, and killed the Prince (author) of life." Paul's testimony is in point, 1 Cor. 15: 3.—"For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." 1 Pet. 3: 18. Jesus was "put to death in the flesh." Jesus himself testifies positively that he was once dead. Rev. 1: 18.—"I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forever more, amen; and have the keys of the grave and of death."

Again, when he was demanded by the Pharisees to give them a sign, he answered them, "There shall be no sign given to this generation, except the sign of the prophet Jonah: as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, even so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." This sign was given as a proof of his being the Messiah. Therefore, it furnishes us with immutable testimony that Jesus, soul and body, for three days and three nights, lay in the heart of the earth. Consequently he did not go to hell, (as some suppose, nor to heaven,) but into the tomb of Joseph, there to rest until he was made alive by his Father raising him up from the dead. Again he said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Reader, was Christ with the truth when he said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death?" You answer "yes." Truly, then, the doctrine of the soul's immortality has no place in the great plan of redemption; consequently it is of heathen origin.

In Isa. 53: 10, we are taught that the Father would make his soul an offering for sin. "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin." Now the law demanded the death of the victim that was to be offered in sacrifice on the altar: and as Christ was the antitype of those sacrifices, consequently his soul must be slain in order that the antitype fill the type. The paschal lamb, that was slain at the command of God by Moses, is proof that Jesus died. "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed (margin, slain) for us." Prove to me that a portion of that lamb was alive after it had been slain, and [illegible]

Again Peter, on the day of pentecost, taught that Jesus went into the state of death—the grave, soul and body. Acts 2: 31.—"He seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, (the grave,) neither did his flesh see corruption." Here we have the testimony of the inspired Peter, and of David, a prophet of the Most High God, that Jesus himself literally died, and ceased to exist as a conscious being.

The highest eulogy that has ever been given upon his character by uninspired men, has been given by infidels. They say his character was a model of perfection. His death, as described by the evangelists, they admit; but his resurrection they deny. Unless you can prove to them that the Father raised him up out of the grave immortal, three days subsequent to his death, according to the Scriptures, infidels are right in taking the position that death is an eternal sleep; from the fact that there would be no testimony in the wide universe of God to prove that any of Adam's posterity would ever have a future state of being. Glory be to God! in this state of despair, the gospel stands out in bold relief, because it reveals to us the fact that his Father did raise him from the dead immortal; that as he came forth out of the grave, he took possession of the "keys of death and the grave." Therefore he is in possession of the power to be death's plague and the grave's destruction. It furnishes us with some five hundred and fifteen witnesses, whose character for truth and veracity has never been impeached, to sustain the doctrine of his resurrection. Among them was a Thomas, who handled him by putting his fingers into the prints of his nails, and his hands into his side, which had been pierced by the Roman soldier; therefore no deception.

Thus the glorious doctrine of life and immortality has been demonstrated unto us by the Father, in the resurrection of his Son to unending existence. Consequently he now stands before us in the great plan of redemption, not as a suffering Savior, not as a dead Savior, but as one "whom God hath raised from the dead," to be the medium, appointed by Himself, through which pardon and immortality can come to the children of the first Adam. "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore, amen, and have the keys of the grave and of death." John 11: 25.—"I am the resurrection and the life."

Again. "As the Father hath life in himself, so (in like manner) hath he given to the Son to have life in himself: and power to give it to as many as thou hast given him." To the Jews he said, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." Rom. 6: 23.—The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." That is, eternal life (immortality) is the gift of God, and comes to us through Jesus Christ. 1 Tim. 6: 13–16.—"I give thee charge, in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession, that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, which in his times (times of restitution) he shall show" that he is "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords,—who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto." Here the Apostle has taught us that Jesus is destined, at some future day, to become an earthly potentate, (king over all the earth.) That in the times of restitution he will show that he only of all the potentates of earth hath immortality! Therefore, he only hath a right to earth's dominion, and power to give immortality unto us; consequently, if we turn our backs upon him, we never can come into possession of immortality; therefore the time will come when we shall cease to exist as conscious beings. Solemn thought!

4. The gospel reveals to us the truth that immortality is a conditional blessing. Heb. 5: 9.—"And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." Rom. 2: 6, 7.—"Who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." That is, by believing the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of his Anointed, and yielding implicit obedience to all his requirements: unto such, the Lord will render eternal life when he comes. "But if it be true, as Plato taught, that man has an immortal soul, [illegible]

5. The gospel reveals to us the time when those who seek for immortality shall come into possession of it. 1 Cor. 15: 50.—"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, (that is, the kingdom of God is not to be possessed by mortal men, but by immortal,) neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." That is, corruption and incorruption do not dwell together in man at the same time, consequently he who teaches the heathen dogma of the immortality of the soul, is guilty of laying Paul in a lie!

Again, says Paul, "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, (that is, those saints which are alive when Jesus comes will not die,) but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, (the righteous dead;) and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." And the Apostle, in his first letter to the Thessalonian brethren, (4: 16) has made the sounding of this trumpet to depend upon the Lord's second coming. "Then this mortal will put on immortality, so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Thus we have shown you how life and the right to immortality were lost; also how they are brought to light through the gospel; consequently, man is a mortal, fleshly, animal being; therefore his entire being is subject to decay, and liable any hour to fall down under the power of death. Paul testifies, that "the first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." Jesus taught Nicodemus that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Man may rise high in the scale of morals, and as a literary being he may ascend pyramids upon the back of pyramids, until he shall become master of every science that was ever taught under the broad heavens; still he is mortal, and before he can have a spiritual nature, he must be born of the Spirit. And as there must be a begetting in nature in order that a child be born, so in grace man must be "begotten by the incorruptible word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

Reader, would you come into possession of unending existence? Come to Christ! Would you bear the victor's palm, wear the white robe, sing the conqueror's song, and with the shining host of God's elect plant your feet upon fair Beulah's blissful plains? Come to Christ! Would you be immortal, and stand secure amid the scenes of that tremendous day, when Christ shall vacate the Father's throne, and in robes of royalty descend the burning pathway of the heavens? Come to Christ! Amen.

Musings with Self.

O cruel self! why dost thou linger still, and cause my wounded heart so oft to bleed, and every hour with grief annoy because thou canst not altogether rule? Or, if in part thou hast been overcome, why gather all thy strength again, and just at the hour when I would bid all selfish thoughts be gone, why art thou lurking still around my foolish heart, to cripple all my usefulness, and spoil my good designs? If in one point I foil thy plans, I quick perceive thee in another gaining ground, and rising up just in time to steal away my strength, when other foes are on the alert which claim my constant care. When thou art half subdued, thou dost complain of sad neglect, of treatment so unjust, of shame, and oft pretended grief;

And yet, 'tis only selfish pride,
Which in thee I've mortified.

And now I will not banish thee, lest thou return with double force and overcome me ever unawares; and as thou art not content with ruling half, I'll take away thy rule entire, and give God's faithful Spirit and his word the rule that thou hast borne, and it shall bind thee as my prisoner; then all thy ways I can control. For well I know thy musings savor not of [illegible] pure, in ACTIONS even GOOD, or solid hopes; therefore I will not trust [illegible]

Baptism.

Baptism is the name of the act of baptizing. Through this action called baptism the disciples in primitive days were buried in the likeness of Christ's death, and raised in the likeness of his resurrection. The Greek word signifies to dip, plant, plunge, bury, immerse, but never to sprinkle. When our friends die, we signify it by burying them; even so when we become dead to sin, if consistent, we shall be buried; buried in less than ten years too.

Death to sin implies an entire cessation from a former course of transgression. If thus dead, better be buried. If dead and buried, we must be raised from the watery grave, or we can have no future life. "If we have been planted in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection." How impressive, significant and glorious these things appear when looked upon with a single eye; but when whittled down to a point to suit pride and to evade the cross of Christ and his example, how nonsensical and foolish! It appears to me that any man, unless completely bewildered in the fog of mysticism, must see the force of the language of the good old book on this point.

The question is frequently asked, "Is baptism essential to salvation?" The living God is not a non-essential God, neither does he deal in non-essentials in the Bible. He has commissioned his servants to go into all the world and disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and has promised that those that obey shall be saved; and declares that the balance shall be damned. If any body wishes to tamper with the Almighty, and try to get into the kingdom for less than the advertised fare, they can try it; but I think they will find at last that there are no second-class tickets to be had with Jesus' signature attached to them. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, for the remission of sins;" so says Peter. Amen. God has set before you life and death, and has given the price of both. Choose ye! J. FLETCHER BAKER.

2. Signs in the moon.
3. Signs in the stars.
4. Distress of nations, (not of individuals,) with perplexity, and at the same time the sea and waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth, (not things that are happening among them.)

Why all this? What is the cause of all this distress, perplexity, this overwhelming fear? He says,—"For the powers of heaven shall be shaken! And then shall they see the Son of man coming!" Let us compare this with the testimony of the other witnesses.

Says Matthew (24: 29,) (1) "The sun shall be darkened." (2) "The moon shall not give her light." (3) "The stars shall fall." (4.) "The powers of heaven shall be shaken, and then shall the sign of the Son of man appear,—all the tribes (nations) of the earth mourn." Is not this coincident with Luke's distress, perplexity,—fear? Mark's testimony is too much like Matthew's to need repeating.

Is John silent on this sublime and solemn theme? No. What he, in connection with Peter, James and Andrew heard, he afterwards saw, and he "bare record" of it "all." He says, after reverting to the testimony of the other witnesses,—"The heaven departed . . . and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. (Won't this cause the sea and waves to roar?) "And the kings of the earth, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman," (all "nations") "hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks . . . and said, . . . Fall on us and hide us (from what?) from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come!"

Ah! here is "distress of nations," [illegible]

What says Daniel? [illegible]

...say the sun will be darkened. 3. The same witnesses say the moon will be darkened. 4. They all say the stars fall. Their testimony is,—the powers of heaven shall be shaken,—the heavens depart,—Peter says, "with a great noise,"—rolled together as a scroll,—every mountain and island moved out of their places,—the sea and waves roar,—the sign of the Son of man appears,—the Son of man himself, on his throne, is seen,—the whole multitude of the wicked nations, tribes and individuals, are distressed, perplexed, their hearts failing for fear,—they quake,—they shriek,—they fly! It is all in vain; the great day of the Lamb's wrath is COME, and who, oh! who shall be able to stand? In this view, we have a fulfillment, so full, so perfect, that there is no chance for a mistake or a repetition.

That the American people should suffer as they have for months past been suffering, is to be expected. Their insatiable thirst for gain,—that utter repudiation, as a people, of the only means for gaining wealth that God will bless,—viz., honest industry,—can lead to but one result; and every few years their gilded schemes are all frustrated, and their splendid air-castles come tumbling down over their heads, involving the innocent with the guilty in one common ruin. And there is another thing for which they must suffer terribly yet, as a nation. There has been a groan, "deep, dolorous and immense," going up from the oppressed and down-trodden sons and daughters of Africa, for many long, long years; it has entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabbaoth, and retribution, swift and terrible, will come. Blood they must drink. They must feel the weight of the almighty arm of Him who has said,—"VENGEANCE is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord!"

All this must come, and soon too; for the last work of God's people is nearly done, and the last items of the prophetic word are being fast filled up; but the "distress," the "perplexity," the "fear," the "trouble such as never was" before, brought to view in the sacred word of prophecy, belong to the awful hour, when the shaking and departing heavens shall reveal to the gaze of a wicked world their enthroned and angry Judge, and when the shaking and moving mountains and islands shall cause the sea to roar, and their hearts shall fail them, and they shall sink in eternal ruin. That will be the day of JUDGMENT and PERDITION of ungodly men.

The Revival in Ireland.—Interesting Incidents.

The following extracts are taken from the correspondence of the New York Chronicle, dated Dublin, July 30th. Its origin is related as follows:—

"In one case a pious lady is on a visit to the North. She becomes deeply interested in the spiritual condition of a poor old man. She visits, reads, and prays with him. Again and again she does. The dark mind at last opens to the light, and the hard heart is touched by the Savior's love. He is converted. Within his own heart a deep anxiety springs for the conversion of his wife. He cannot repress it. Under the influence of the same truth she is brought, and her aged spirit rejoices in Christ. They tell their new-born joys to others. They invite their neighbors and friends to pray with them and share their happiness. The revival in that locality was begun. In another part four young men were converted. The condition of the Sunday-School and the prayer meeting soon fixed their attention. To pray for their success and improvement was their immediate resolve. Month after month, though anxiously they watched for signs of improvement, still they saw none. Delay did not quench their zeal. Faith in the Divine promise sustained them, and they prayed on till the Spirit came with power, and the revival began."

Some of the noticeable features of the work remind us of the late awakening in our own country. As—

"The union of all ministers and Christians in the work. Ministers of the Episcopal sect, who would not a few months ago unite with a Baptist, or recognize his ministerial claim—Presbyterians, Methodists of various sects—all mingle and cordially co-operate. 'We have no isms in this town at present,' says a correspondent, 'nothing but Jesus, the Savior of sinners.' Asperities, jealousies, unkindly feelings, are melting down. One of the Bishops has presided at a large united meeting, and uttered sentiments in his address worthy of the Christian, if not in harmony with the lofty pretensions of Episcopacy.

The action of the laity. Elders, deacons, leaders, and members, are very prominent. In prayer meetings, and visiting the awakened, they are very active. They originate and lead meetings, they address the assembled crowds on the great and absorbing verities of faith, they deal with the awakened, and in other ways are filling up various departments of christian labor from which many of them had been shut out.

The spirit of prayer. It is the most prominent. Never was there anything like it. In many places, every second house in the streets is a Bethel. In houses, shops, warerooms, squares, school-rooms, churches and chapels, they meet for prayer. They gather in thousands. Every place of worship is opened almost from morning till night. Only the other day the beautiful Botanic Gardens at Belfast were visited by about forty thousand people, who in different groups spent the day in various kinds of religious services. A week or two ago the new court-house at Coleraine was [illegible] the people. Arrangements [illegible] for celebrating the event in the [illegible] manner. As the day approached no [illegible] be found to open or attend the [illegible] Hall. Meetings for prayer were proposed. They were hailed by the community, and the place was crowded from morning till night by thousands of devout and interested persons. Over the whole population a deep and absorbing religious feeling is spread. Trade is interrupted. Mills sometimes cannot go on. Editors apologise now and then to their readers that their paper is delayed on this account, and markets are scarcely attended—while railway directors are putting on special trains, and allowing them to run till a late hour, for the convenience of parties attending religious services from a distance. All churches are sharing in this tide of blessing. None are exempt."

The following account is from the British Messenger, of Aug. 1st.

"It commenced in the District of Connor, a place, which, it is said, has been privileged to have an evangelical ministry for the last hundred years. Four men, comparatively young—met for prayer in the autumn of 1857. They continued to pray for the Holy Ghost and the revival of the work of God. Others joined them. They were instrumental in the conversion of numbers. The Rev. Mr. Moore of Connor must have been also very cordially and earnestly engaged in forwarding the work there; for one of his elders writes, that in his congregation 'there are believed to have been from 300 to 400 genuine conversions, and still the Spirit is being poured out in rich abundance.' Writing again, May 23, the same correspondent tells of the outpouring of the Spirit on Ballymena.

During the past week Ballymena has been visited in a remarkable manner. Hundreds have been struck down by the mighty power of God, and constrained to cry out, 'What must we do to be saved?' Many, very many have found peace, and are now rejoicing in the liberty wherewith Christ makes his people free. The first drops seem to have fallen on Sabbath evening, 15th inst., at a revival meeting held in a Sabbath-School room, by the Rev. J. S. Moore, and to have made rapid progress from that time.

But prayer preceded; for in another letter from a young man we are told that he and others had commenced a prayer-meeting with an attendance of about seventy the first night. On the second, he says, 'two young men from Connor came in to assist us; the school-room was crammed, and a deep impression was made on many of those present.' Toward the close he says, 'Ballymena is dry as yet. Surely we will not be passed by without enjoying this shower. Do, I entreat you, pray for us! Ask God to cause religion to flow down our streets as a mighty stream! 'Shine forth, O thou that dwellest between the cherubim!'"

"In Ballymena, at the earlier stages of the awakening, while a man was praying with great earnestness for a direct manifestation of the Spirit as on the day of Pentecost, fifteen individuals in the crowd were simultaneously prostrated, and with loud cries for mercy, borne off the ground, or prayed over by ministers and friends. At Rasharkin, while one prayed that the Holy Spirit might descend as with fire, a flash of lightning, which filled the building at the moment, struck the congregation with awe, so that trembling with terror, they prostrated themselves upon the floor, and out of a congregation of 700 there were 100 cases of decided conviction.

About the beginning of June the awakening commenced in Coleraine, and advanced with remarkable rapidity, as if it were to embrace the whole community. At the first meeting held, more people assembled than ever attended any meeting in town, either for instruction or amusement. The day after the meeting not fewer than 150 cases of decided conviction were known, and on the evening of that day the conversions were more numerous still. In one week the whole place seemed to be turned up-side-down; young and old were affected, and business, except in selling bibles and testaments, which was unusually large, was well nigh paralysed."

SOME RESULTS.

"Christian union promoted.—Dr. Cook of Belfast, in a lecture he gave on revivals said, that 'the great end of them was to counteract all sectarian spirit, and to show that God appeared in all sections of his church, and performed a common work in them; and that it was their duty to teach in that spirit of truth and mercy which He had inculcated upon them.' This spirit appeared early in the movement. A meeting of ministers was convened to consult about a forenoon prayer meeting. The following week the first meeting was held in the Music Hall, presided over by the Mayor, and about eighty ministers, of various denominations, were on the platform, while the hall was so densely crowded that the lower room had to be opened also to hold the overflow. A minister of the Established Church writes thus, on having witnessed this soul-thrilling meeting: 'God grant that it may be the inauguration of a new epoch, when christians will show the world that, however they may differ in non-essentials, they agree in fundamentals, and can love as brethren.'

Entire streets which were known as being the most disorderly portions of the town, in which nothing was to be heard but quarrelling, cursing and blaspheming, especially on Saturday nights, have been so thoroughly changed, that last Saturday night there was scarcely a house in them in which prayer and praise had not taken the place of drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Ministers and praying laymen are frequently up nearly all night, pointing out the way of salvation to the convicted, and praying with them."

The following paragraph is from the Report of the General Assembly of Aug. 6th.

"The effect produced by this awakening on the life and character of those who have experienced it, is decidedly evangelical—a deep sense of sin, especially of the sin of having neglected the great salvation, fervent love of Christ, intense brotherly kindness, earnest desire for the conversion of sinners, habitual communion with God, and delight in his Word, worship and service—these attributes of character are assuredly the fruit of the Spirit, and those are the characteristics of multitudes who have lately declared themselves the servants of Christ. The drunkard has been made sober, the libertine chaste, the blasphemer and Sabbath breaker devout, the worldling constrained to think deeply and penitently of his sins, and to flee from the wrath to come. These are surely trophies of divine grace, and many such trophies as these have been raised to the honor of God since the commencement of the present revival."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 14, 1859.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

This great feast of tabernacles commenced Aug. 29th, according to appointment, and was crowned with triumphant success. We think it was decidedly the best meeting we ever had on that ground. We felt assured the Lord smiled upon us during the whole meeting. We very much doubt whether a campmeeting was ever held, at any other place, characterized by so good order as our late meeting at W. We did not see the first disorderly act during the entire meeting. We heard no hooting or disturbing noise. All was quiet, peaceful, heavenly. It seemed like holy ground. We lay down to rest as quietly at night as in our own peaceful homes. There were forty-one tents and sixty-four preachers, and although a variety of views were represented, all seemed to love one another. The meeting was noted for good feeling and kind deeds to all who visited the ground. Every disciple of Jesus appeared to enjoy the meeting and feel glad that he was there. The weather was most delightful; in short, every thing seemed to conspire to make this a scene of profit to all visitors, and one of happy remembrance to every one who participated in its devotions. The Camp Hill at W. has become a hallowed spot to many of the lovers of Jesus, who will long for the next annual gathering, if Jesus does not come to take them before the returning anniversary of this tabernacle feast.

It is a lovely shade, grass-grown, upon the hill top, overlooking a wide-spread landscape, pleasant farm houses, distant hills, ponds and winding stream. We are only sorry that all the dear pilgrims could not have been present; but hope, if deliverance does not come, to see a gathering next year, like the great feasts at Jerusalem, when all went up to worship the Lord. Commence at once, and lay by a few mites, saved by self-denial, till the aggregate shall be sufficient to take you to this feast of tabernacles, which is, to us, like the transfiguration scene to Peter, James and John. The christian love-cords are greatly strengthened by the hallowed associations in the tented grove, where soul-stirring exhortations, ardent petitions, and enchanting songs, mingle in holy harmony, and echo afar at morning's dawn, or upon the balmy evening air, to cheer the heart of the weary pilgrim, who comes to rest in this sweet bower of prayer. [For a full report, see our next issue.]

Collinsville Campmeeting.

The Collinsville meeting was an excellent one, affording much comfort and profit to those who attended it. It was distinguished for good order, kind feeling and happy results. We met many christian friends with whom we have worshiped the Lord in other places, in former days, and we were rejoiced to find them steadfast in the truth and practical religion. The church appears to be doing well in Ct., standing firmly for the faith once delivered to the saints. They, like others, have their trials, but they have learned that these light afflictions work out for them "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." They have counted the cost, and concluded to pay the price. The truth and light are evidently advancing in this State, and the sectarian opposition is less and less effective in its resistance against the glorious hope of the gospel. Candid, thinking men are fast losing their confidence in the popular theology of the day, and are becoming delighted with the harmony and simplicity of the true Bible doctrine. They now begin to see the difference bewteen fables and the word of the Lord.

We did not get to the ground at the commencement of the meeting, and when we did arrive, having traveled all the preceding night, we felt rather dull, and lay down in the straw and slept; consequently we are not able to give a report of the first part of the meeting, but learn from others that it was interesting.

Wednesday, Aug. 24th. This has been a very rainy day, but our meetings have been excellent. Preaching in the Collinsville tent, which is large and convenient, and speaks well for the enterprise of our brethren in that place. We found some that were seeking the Lord, who requested prayers, and received comfort in the Lord. We had conversation with one, a poor cripple, who is a member of an evangelical church, once distinguished for simplicity of dress and manners as well as holy living. This man was found at evening's hour, by a brother in Danielsonville, Ct., in a very destitute situation, uncared for by a cold world, and a proud church. With a good Samaritan feeling, and acts corresponding, the brother in D. took the poor man into his house, provided for his wants, and in the morning put $8.00 into his hand and sent him on his way rejoicing. While he tarried at the house of this good man, he learned something of the blessed hope that cheered the heart of him who had shown by his kind deeds that pure christianity consists in something more than a bare profession of religion, and union with a popular church. He was told of the campmeeting soon to be held at Collinsville, and felt an anxious desire to see more such people, and become acquainted with their mode of worship and learn more of their faith. Learning that his Samaritan host intended to be at the campmeeting, he felt still more anxious to be present, and finally succeeded in reaching this delightful grove. His expectations seemed to be more than realized. With streaming eyes and a rejoicing heart he rose in a prayer meeting in the Hartford tent, Wednesday evening, and said he had been seeking for real christians, and he was satisfied that he was then enjoying their society. He felt like Simeon of old, when he took the child Jesus in his arms, and said,—"Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace . . . . for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." This prayer meeting will be long remembered by those present.

Thursday, A. M., was very rainy, but at noon it cleared away, and we think nature has not smiled more beautifully since the fall of Adam. The silver rain drops pending from the leaves and sparkling in the golden sunlight produced a magical effect upon the beholder.

This morning, Sr. M. S. Mansfield, from Mich., spoke in the Collinsville tent on "pure and undefiled religion," showing that it consists not in mere profession, and being "in good and regular standing" in some evangelical church, but in right doing.

In the evening, we listened to a very profitable and interesting discourse from Bro. H. L. Hastings. The sermon was admirably calculated to give exalted views of our Creator, and remove the contracted notions that characterize many professors of religion; at the same time awakening love to God in the hearts of the hearers, while our Bro. portrayed in a forcible manner their indebtedness to him for every thing worth having.

Friday, A. M., Sr. Mansfield addressed the people, and was heard by a deeply interested audience, while she proved very clearly from the Bible, that the righteous get no reward till Christ comes the second time. Those who listened seemed satisfied that woman can do something for Jesus now, as well as in the days of the apostles. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield have labored with much success in the western states, where they think of returning after the Wilbraham campmeeting. They are devoted to the cause of Christ and his truth.

In the P. M. we were entertained by Bro. E. Burnham. The discourse was profitable and instructive. The people were clearly shown how to become christians, and be fitted for the coming kingdom. The sermon was well calculated to exalt Christ, and cause the people to love him more, and serve him better. The necessity of entire consecration was made prominent, and all who wish to be saved were urged to submit entirely to the Lord and do all to his glory. In the evening preaching by the Editor.

Saturday, A. M., good preaching by Bro. Walter Pratt, whom we were all glad to see and hear, after his faithful and toilsome labors in the wide west. We do not see that his earnest zeal for Christ is at all abated, but rather increased. He has passed through many trying scenes since he left New England, but he is homeward bound with wide spread sail to catch the heavenly breeze. If it is so pleasant to meet our fellow laborers here, what height of rapture shall we feel when we greet each other upon the plains of glory in the coming kingdom.

In the P. M. Bro. Burnham preached an able discourse on the resurrection and judgment of wicked men, showing the necessity of both, in order that the Scriptures be fulfilled. The text was so plain in itself, that argument seemed hardly necessary. It reads:—"The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." 2 Pet. 2: 9. It was very clearly shown that there is a future day of judgment; that the unjust are not being punished now, but will be after their resurrection and judgment.

In the evening Bro. Hastings preached a soul-stirring sermon, admirably adapted to awaken the backslider and show him his true position. A deep impression was made on many minds, which, we trust, will not be soon erased.

Lord's day. The weather was very fine, and the meetings excellent. We had a love-feast in the morning, during which, one hundred and forty spoke in one hour, besides singing some twenty times. It was a heavenly season, that will not be soon forgotten by those present. At the hour of preaching, Bro. Burnham presented an effective discourse on the atonement. A very large and attentive audience listened with deep interest. In the P. M., Bro. Hastings preached a very instructive sermon on practical religion, showing the importance of right living, in order to be useful in the vineyard of the Lord. The discourse was timely. Bro. W. Pratt preached the closing sermon in the evening, urging the sinner to repent, and the christian to a greater degree of faithfulness.

Thus closed a very profitable meeting. Several backsliders were reclaimed, sinners were converted, and five were buried with Christ in baptism. This meeting has done much towards spreading light and truth among the people. Prejudice is fast giving way, deaf ears begin to hear, and blind eyes to see, while once stupid hearts are rejoicing in the blessed hope of immortality through Christ. This is the field where Bro. S. G. Mathewson has bestowed his faithful labors for some time past, and he has reason to rejoice that his efforts have not been in vain. We hope to meet in the kingdom the loved ones whom we greeted at this feast of tabernacles. Let us all endure to the end.

Early Monday morning, Aug. 29th, we hastened away to the meeting at Wilbraham.

The following, from the Editorial columns of the Springfield Republican, we insert as of interest to many of our readers who enjoyed not this feast of tabernacles.

A full report of the meeting will be given by us in our next number.

Sunday at the Second Advent Campmeeting.

The campmeeting at Wilbraham of the sect of the Second Adventists closes this morning, after a successful continuance of seven days. The attendants have mostly been from Massachusetts, from North Adams on the west to Newburyport, and New Bedford on the east. Connecticut has contributed liberally, while the other New England states, New York, Pennsylvania, and some of the distant western states even, have been represented. This meeting being, to the sect, a general or national convention. There were about forty-five different tents on the ground, and the regular attendance of members of the sect has been rising five hundred persons. On Sunday, of course, there was an extra gathering both of sympathizers and curious outsiders. Probably not less than three thousand different people were present during the day. Hundreds went from Springfield; every livery stable being stripped of its horses and carriages for conveyances; while the other neighboring towns turned out proportionate quotas. Four of five hundred vehicles of all descriptions were stationed in the neighborhood of the camp-ground. Though many of this crowd were drawn by other than religious motives, or even by that of curiosity alone, and though it was not difficult to pick out booths and shanties where liquor was sold along with "pies and cakes and hot oysters," there was no disturbance of the worship of the disciples,—no rowdyism, or rioting, or even undue noise. This was the more noteworthy since there were no police on the ground, and no government except that of love and self-respect, the Second Adventists being non-resistants. The worshipers commanded respect for their sincerity, if they failed to secure sympathy for their belief.

* * * * * * *

At 10 o'clock there was a sermon by Rev. John Couch of New Hampshire from Revelations, full of the technicalities of the Second Advent faith, and worse than Greek to the uninitiated in the jargon of the "beasts," the "horns," the "red dragon," the "seals" and the "trumpets." * * * *

The afternoon was opened with the largest audience and the most attractive talk of the whole session. Mrs. M. S. Mansfield was the orator. She is the wife of one of the Second Advent clergymen, and he joined her in opening the services by chanting the eighth Psalm.

Mrs. Mansfield said she had been urged to speak by brethren who still did not believe women ought to preach or speak in meeting. She took the bull by the horns, selecting as her text Paul's famous Corinthian counsel:

"Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law:—And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church."

Mrs. Mansfield first offered the argumentum ad absurdum, and showed that if Paul meant just what he said, and what modern theology taught from this text, women should not sing and pray in the churches; that they should not even go to the churches, but stay at home and ask their husbands what was taught; that those who hadn't any husbands, or whose husbands were blockheads, or wouldn't go to meeting, would stand a very poor chance for religious knowledge and culture; and further that as Paul elsewhere instructs the women to obey their husbands, those wives whose husbands tell them to preach in the churches (as hers did) were placed in an awkward predicament, from which Paul himself had left no escape. Then she followed him to his appeal to "the law," and showered the audience with cases and texts from the Old and New Testaments in illustration or in favor of women preaching. * * * Mrs. Mansfield then branched off on to the general subject of the equality of the sexes, and said the history of "the fall" showed the superiority of the woman, for Eve only yielded to the tempter after long argument and seductive appeals, while Adam was such a simpleton that he bit the apple at the very first invitation. So, too, in the order of creation, there was constant upward progression, a lower class being succeeded by one higher, and woman being made after man, she must be a little ahead of him. Her appeals for fair play for women, and to her sex to cease being the slaves and toys of the men, to eschew fashion and fine dressing, to cultivate physical health, and elevate the sex and thus the race itself, to be, in a word, the equal and the help-meet of the man, were quite eloquent and effective. She thanked God her husband was not one of those narrow, mean souls who want their wives to be simply slaves in the kitchen or ornaments in the parlor—but was willing to have her go along with him in the work of life; sometimes he led, then again she did, and again they marched abreast, as occasion and their capacities demanded. Mrs. Mansfield spoke extempore, and was at times quite eloquent.

Elder Miles Grant of Boston preached the regular afternoon discourse, on—1, will the wicked be punished; 2, where; 3, when; 4, how; and quoted liberally from the Bible to prove that they would be punished; on this earth; at or after the judgment day, for which they would be "reserved," and not directly after death; and by eternal and total destruction. The main portion of his discourse was on the form of punishment, concerning which he stated there were four theories: 1, that it was received in life; 2, that it was after death, but temporary, and ending finally in restoration to the kingdom of the blessed; 3, that it was endless torture and suffering; and 4, that it was total and instant destruction. The last he defended as the Bible doctrine, and held that this was the signification, in the original Hebrew, of all those words referring to the character of the punishment of the wicked, translated "perish," "perishing," &c., in the Scriptures. * * * * *

Of the sights and sounds of the "camp," most people have had an experience. This was only less luxurious and aristocratic than that of the Methodist denomination near the same spot a week before. Yet everything seemed comfortable; and if it is "glory" to lie on straw under tents, and eat and dress out of a trunk or a bag, for the sake of cultivating the art of killing your fellow men, the same word, with a higher signification, may not fairly be denied to those who thus assemble, and spend a week together, in the hope and for the purpose of saving souls for the Eternal Life.

Correspondence.

From Eld. P. B. Morgan.

BRO. GRANT:—A large number of friends failed to notice in the Crisis last spring the change of my post office address; and I take this opportunity to say to all such that I am no longer a resident of Illinois, but of Indiana, and am so far removed—and for other reasons—I cannot perform the labors of an evangelist in Illinois, as heretofore. I am now performing the quiet labors of the pastorate, and at the same time doing a little in a secular way. My mission in Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, although not accomplished, is, for a time at least, suspended—"not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope," I may say.

It has seemed God's will I should leave the labors and travel of the four years past, and occupy in a somewhat different manner for a time. But while this is the fact, I beg you, my beloved brethren, be assured I am yet one with you in the patience and hope of the gospel. And though now my circumstances have somewhat changed, and I have wherewith to feed and clothe my family, (which, many times, could not be said during the past four years,) and, what is equally as agreeable, the thought that I have a prospect of by and by paying my honest debts,—yet I can assure you my faith and zeal are not abated. My labors and trials I count as nothing; and feel yet ready, if God will, to undertake any effort that shall be for the furtherance of our thrice precious cause. In publishing the Messenger, and by the general financial crash just passed, I was reduced to what is worse than absolute penury; but having a clear conscience in the matter, I can say,—I trust to the praise of God,—that my peace and communion with God were never more joyful or abiding than now. My interest in the Illinois annual conference was never greater, nor did my heart ever beat higher in anticipation of success, than when I read the minutes of its last annual gathering. What conference in America can boast as much? What evangelist can report as much real labor performed, miles traveled, quarterly meetings attended, churches organized, sermons preached, and numbers baptized, as were reported by our veteran pioneer, Eld. M. Chandler, the evangelist of last year's Illinois annual conference? I hesitate not to say,—after more than ten years spent in the ministry of "this gospel of the kingdom," during which time I have traveled and preached in most of the states between the Atlantic ocean and the Mississippi river, north of Mason's and Dixon's line, and south of the 46° north latitude, including the Canadas,—I believe there is not one. No conference ever held by Adventists, local or general, gave so much evidence of efficient arrangement as has this in its last sittings. In this conference, I recognize not less than three or four churches gathered, by the blessing of God, under my own personal labors; and brethren, not a few, with whose hearts I feel my own is allied in inseparable bonds—whose God is my God, and whose end I trust shall be mine.

My interest in your prosperity, brethren, is no less than when proclaiming the truth in your midst. Our faith in the speedy consummation of Israel's hope should be mightily strengthened by the present accumulating signs of the times. But until this is realized, let us "mind the same thing, and walk by the same rule." You now have your churches organized, your quarterly conferences, and all annually represented in the State conference. Your individual independence, as members and as churches, is in the outset agreed upon. You have combined in this arrangement the evangelistic and pastoral offices; the independent and co-operative elements; and the vastly superior character of this arrangement, compared with the former disorderly way of getting on, you have demonstrated.

Continue, then, in well doing. Wherever there are three or four of you, organise; invite the Evangelist to visit you, ordain your Elder and Deacon, and set in order what is wanting; afterward, meet at regularly appointed times, sing, pray, read the Scriptures, exhort one another, and, like the primitive church, whose faith we contend for, upon every First day of the week break bread in remembrance of Christ, who commanded—"This do, in remembrance of me." Once in three months make out your report, and send, with one or more delegates, to the quarterly conference, securing, if no more, the occasional labors of the Evangelist, for the purpose of building up by the preached word. Remember that from the last quarterly conference [of the year] is to be sent delegates to represent your interests in the annual conference.

True, these things may require an effort, sometimes painful or self-denying; but have we not learned that except we labor we cannot live? And do we not know that such, or a somewhat similar course, is the only way by which we can perpetuate the lively and sanctifying influence of "that blessed hope"—the "exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust?"

And I desire to exhort you, brethren, to hold up the hands of those who labor among you in word and doctrine, and "esteem them highly for their works' sake." It is sad that, after so faithfully laboring, the evangelist of last year should have received so small a pittance of his last year's due. Did our brethren of the East realise this matter as it is, no interests would so engage their attention, not even that of tracts, as to allow these things to be so; but here "we see through a glass darkly;" we must do what we can. And yet I write this under the painful belief that not only Bro. C. but also Bro. P., and many others laboring in the West, know what it is to want the common necessaries of life for their families; and, unlike the worldling, they do it with no prospect of an earthly return. But again I say, let all do what they can, remembering the sacrifice of those who have left all for the unspeakable privilege of preaching the word; and though they may not be men trained and adorned according to scholastic lore, yet, know they are equipped with what is infinitely more valuable, viz., the panoply of the Gospel—the truth as it is in Christ, and a rich christian experience. "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

But I have written you a long letter. It is to you each, beloved brethren and sisters, among whom I have formerly gone preaching the word. Brethren, pray for us. And may the benediction of God be upon you all. Amen.

Union Mills, Laporte Co., Ind., Aug. 24th, 1859.

From P. Tandy.

BRO. GRANT:—I esteem it a very great privilege to peruse the Crisis from week to week, which bears many heart-cheering epistles from different brethren and sisters from the east, west, north, and south. Dear friends, we may be hated by wicked men and devils, but "they hated me," says Christ, "before they hated you." Then, let us not be discouraged. We are scattered here and there over this wide earth, probably we shall never have personal acquaintance until Jesus comes the second time; yet it is a duty and a privilege to become familiar with each other through the medium of the pen. What blessed privileges we may thus enjoy. Now mark; if we belong to Christ's body, we shall certainly care for the members of that body, shall we not? The apostle says, "By this ye may know that ye have passed from death unto life, because ye love the brethren." The same beloved apostle says again, "Whoso keepeth the word of God, in him verily is the love of God." Again; "Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." The same apostle says, "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us." Let us think of the love of God manifested in giving his only Son to die, to ransom us from that penalty entailed upon us by the disobedience of our first parents.

Think also of the unspeakable love the Son of God has shown towards fallen man, by his great willingness to die for and forgive even his enemies. He consented to that ignominious death upon the cross. There he was extended between heaven and earth, as if not fit for either place. And after they had made a crown of thorns and placed it upon his head, ridiculing him, even spitting upon him and giving him vinegar mixed with gall to drink; he looks upon them with an eye of pity and says,—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." What compassion was here manifested! Again, we see the Father's love in making his will plain to our understanding; he has not left us in the darkness, but he has given us a revelation—we do well to take earnest heed to it!

We see the Spirit of Christ is very tender, affectionate, forbearing and kind; and in proportion as we possess this spirit, we should manifest it in all our doings. It will mingle with, and give grace and loveliness to, all our acts, both public and private. We ought to have the same regard for each other's feelings that the beloved apostle Paul had. He said he would not eat meat so long as the same was a cause of offence to his brethren, or an occasion of stumbling. He also says, the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak; and we should ever beware lest we make still weaker the weak for whom Christ died, and whose lives are precious in his sight.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, is there any class of people on earth from whom the world have more reason to expect a clear exhibition of the spirit of Christ, in its various features and graces, than from those who are constantly looking for the speedy redemption, yea, I may say looking daily for the return of their blessed Savior? Ought not the bearers of this most solemn and subduing message ever presented to mortal man, continually to show the length and breadth of its controlling and subduing power on their own hearts and lives? May the grace of God be sufficient for us, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

From Geo. Dillabaugh.

Dearly beloved in Christ, fellow pilgrims and saints scattered abroad :—The church in this place have enjoyed the labors of our dear Bro. Grant. We esteem him very highly for his works' sake. The church has been greatly quickened and strengthened in their faith. Some others have already taken a stand for the truth, and we hope to see others. Prejudice has given away among some, while those in high places are arraying all their forces against God's word. Bro. G. delivered seventeen discourses, the plainest and most simple, and yet the most powerful and argumentative to which I have ever listened. The great secret of success in laboring is, to practice what one believes; and if all of God's servants would be more careful in practising what they believe, we should see more pure and holy religion. We, who are looking for such glorious things soon to be realized, ought to be a very holy people, living justly and honestly before the world; for, unless we are strictly honest in all our dealings with our fellow man, how can we be living epistles known and read of all men? Christ is the christian's example. If we follow him, then we shall shine forth as lights in the world.

Brn. and Srs., let us practice pure religion every day. The church of Christ will be presented without spot; let us be careful in keeping ourselves unspotted from the sins of this polluted age. If we are in Christ, then let us try to walk as he walked; let us abide in Christ, that we may receive strength and nourishment from him. Our conversation must be holy; foolish talking and jesting is not profitable for the saints of God; let us keep on the bridle, for the tongue is an unruly member, and boasteth great things. It is the pure in heart that shall see God.

The way to Mount Zion, the city of our God, appears more lovely to me. Let the world despise us on account of our blessed hope, we will continue to tell them our King is soon coming.

Seneca Falls, N. Y.

From G. W. Barnes.

I am glad to hear that Bro. Hastings is trying to do something for the West. I hope we shall be remembered, and have some books sent to us. I would be glad to help, but I cannot now; hope to be able by and by.

I want to tell you something of how I live out West. I have preached in my feeble way, some in Minnesota, some in Iowa, and most of the time in Wisconsin, and have paid $75 dollars for books and to preachers, within the last eighteen months, and have not received one cent for preaching, or for a book, but God has blest in some measure; some have been converted, and some others have embraced the truth. We have formed a church here, and I think with a little help, and the blessing of God, there might be quite a number more added, that are already almost persuaded. I hope you and Bro. H. will remember us in your prayers, and with your books. It is a good place to give away books.

Look Here!

The best book I know of to study the New Testament with is, The Englishman's Greek Concordance. 1 Vol. Royal 8vo. 880pp. Price $4. Every Bible student ought to have it. I will sell it to poor preachers (and I guess they are nearly all poor if they preach the truth,) for $3, which is the wholesale price. Those who are rich and generous can pay me $4 for it. It can be sent by express from Providence, Boston, or New York. Send your orders at once to H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

New Tracts.

"Will all men be saved?" $2 per 100. A hard knock for Universalism. Home—12 pages. Lost, Lost—8 pages. Life Insurance—12 pages.

The last three are just large enough to slip into a letter without being folded. A hundred of each kind, 300 in all, will be sent for $2.00, or by mail, post paid, for $2.50. Address H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Northfield Farms, July 27th, after an illness of fourteen days, David Martin, son of David M. Beach, aged sixteen years.

He experienced a change of heart last spring, and made it manifest by a change of life. He was good, kind and industrious. He was a constant reader of the Bible, which became his daily companion. He embraced the faith of Christ's Advent to give immortality to all his saints, in which he hoped to share. In the last hour of his life he was sensible he must die. He bade good by to father, mother and sister, and sent his last messages to his absent brothers and sisters;—"Tell them to get ready to meet me in the kingdom of God." He soon requested us to sing the hymn,

"O for a faith that will not shrink!"

and also repeated the hymn, his favorite,—

"We are voyagers on an ocean,
And our destiny we know;"

then prayed most earnestly for us all that we might be an unbroken family in the kingdom of God. His last words were, "Praise God for this salvation!" and fell asleep without a struggle, leaving a good evidence that he will be remembered in the first resurrection. Some five or six weeks before his death, he followed his blessed Master down into the liquid grave in likeness of his death and resurrection.

Funeral services were conducted by Bro. Bennett of Hinsdale. After reading the 7th chapter of Ecclesiastes to the 20th verse, by my request, he preached a lengthy discourse from 1 Cor. 15 : 58. David M. Beach.

Sister Naomi Jane, daughter of Daniel M and Hannah Smith, of New Hampton, N. H., fell asleep in Christ, May 25th, 1859, aged twenty-three years, one month and twenty-four days.

Sister Naomi met with a change when about ten years of age, but did not become decided to live religion and bear the cross until she was about seventeen; soon after her health began to decline. About this time, without hearing any preaching on the Savior's soon coming, while reading the Savior's discourse on the signs, light broke in upon her mind, and she became established that the second personal advent of Christ was at hand. In the spring of fifty-seven, as the skill of four physicians had failed, she being unable to walk for twenty-two months, she wished the brethren to be called, and prayer offered in her behalf, which was done. It was the faith of those present that Sister Naomi would be strengthened sufficiently for her to attend to the duty of baptism, which had borne with much weight on her mind; and according to their faith she was able to walk, although she never fully recovered her health. Last fall, while the snow whitened the surrounding hills, with a Savior's love burning in her heart, she was enabled to go down into the water with a firm step; but the coldness of the weather and water did not quench the heavenly flame, which burst forth in an acclamation of praise as she arose from the liquid grave, finding in the path of obedience justification and peace.

The last nine weeks of her life she suffered much; but she believed in the Lord, that them which sleep in Jesus God will bring with him. May the consolations of the Gospel support the bereaved parents, that they, with the surviving sister, may meet Naomi with all the saints in the kingdom of God, where anxious nights and suffering days will never come. J. G. Smith.

Died, in Melrose, Mass., Sept. 1st, Ellen, only child of Mason M. and Ellen S. Flint, aged seventeen days.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

ITALY.

The National Assembly at Modena on the 20th, by an unanimous vote, decreed the forfeiture of Francis Fifth, and any other prince of the House of Hapsburg-Lorraine to the Ducal throne. All the members of the Assembly were present.

At Florence, on the 20th, the National Assembly of Tuscany unanimously voted the annexation of Tuscany to Piedmont, amidst acclamations of "Viva il Re!"

A defensive league has been concluded between the States of Central Italy. Prince Hircollin, Delegate of the Government of the Legation, had signed the act of accession to the League.

At the sittings of the Modenese Assembly on the 22d, it was unanimously resolved, by open voting as well as by ballot, to confirm and maintain, even at the price of sacrifices, the union of the Modenese Provinces to the Kingdom of the glorious House of Savoy.

The Paris Pays says that on the arrival of M. Parini to assume the Dictatorship of Parma, a portion of the troops proclaimed fidelity to the Bourbon Duchess and took possession of the fortress of Bardi, intending to hold it for their Sovereign as long as a chance of her restoration remained. The Pays also says that a French Division has reached Parma.

The Times' Paris correspondent says in his last letter: "The news from Central Italy received to-day appears to be good. The Italians pursue their main object of independence with steadiness and moderation, the best guarantee for success. The demand for annexation with Piedmont may give rise to diplomatic complications, though some persons of good judgment and authority doubt that the Emperor of the French was serious in any engagement for the restoration of the late rulers of Central Italy, as probably the Emperor of Austria will find out before long, if he has not done so already."

The Florence correspondent says: "I hear from Modena that Garibaldi has taken the command, not only of the Tuscan troops quartered in the Duchy, but also of the military forces raised in the Duchy itself, and in the adjoining Parmesian provinces. Those of Modena and Reggio alone amount on paper at least to two brigades, two battalions of Bersaglieri, one squadron of mounted guides, and one battery and a half; 12,000 Modenese, who, with as many Tuscans, will constitute a force of 24,000 combatants. There are rumors afloat of a concentration of Austrian troops at Mantua, and on the Modenese frontier north of the Po. It is well known that the province of Mantua extends across the Po on the right bank, all along the territory of Modena. As yet, however, I do not hear that the Austrians have ventured upon any serious move across the river.

On the other hand, there is no doubt but the Pope is straining every nerve to prepare for an attack upon his lost provinces of Romagna."

BELGIUM.

The Belgian Chamber of Deputies had agreed to the project for the fortifications of Antwerp by a vote of 757 to 42. Le Nord contends that the project will endanger the neutrality of Belgium.

It was reported that the British Government had congratulated the French Ambassador on the recent political amnesty, and that Queen Victoria addressed very warm congratulations to Napoleon on the occasion.

FRANCE.

Commands had been distributed to the Marshals at the head of the army of Italy.—McMahon is appointed to command at Lisle, where a large body of troops is being concentrated. Canrobert, Castellane and Baraguay D'Hilliers return to their commands at Nancy, Lyons and Tours. Niel replaces Bosquet at Toulouse. Magnan retains his post as commander-in-chief of the army of Paris.

The Moniteur, in announcing these nominations, says that the augmentation of these commands is in order to form a more equal division of the military force of the Empire.

A general impression prevailed that McMahon's appointment to Lisle was in reply to the projected fortifications of Antwerp.

The Constitutionel, in a semi-official notice, says that the reduction of the French army will take place immediately after the arrival of the corps de armee from Italy at their respective garrisons.

It was reported that Changarnier will refuse to accept the amnesty, and Victor Hugo, in declining the amnesty, says when liberty returns to France he will return.

Paris, Wednesday. The Moniteur of this morning contains the following:

"The Emperor having ordered that the army be placed from a war to a peace footing, the Minister of War has given orders that from September twenty thousand men should return to their homes, whose term of service expires in 1859. Moreover, furloughs of three months will be allowed to those who are in that class of exceptional cases provided for by the statutes of 1832; and the same has also been granted to men who can prove that they are indispensable to the support of their families.

The London Post's correspondent learns that the French government had addressed a despatch to the great powers, declaring that France will not assist the self-exiled Princes to return to their dominions by force, nor will she permit Austria or any other power to afford them military aid for that purpose.

AUSTRIA.

Letters from Vienna express apprehension that the difficulties of the Italian question will not be settled at Zurich, and give a report that furloughs granted to Austrian soldiers returning from Italy had been suspended, and that seven out of twelve Austrian corps de armee are to be retained on a war footing.

RUSSIA.

On the 20th of September the Hereditary Grand Duke will enter his sixteenth year, and, according to the laws of the empire, will attain his majority and take part in the deliberations of the Council of the Empire, and be present at the Councils of the Ministers. It is believed that on that day the general emancipation of the serfs of Russia will be proclaimed.

The reply of Prince Gortschakoff to the Prussian proposal for mediation had been published. It is dated July 7, and expresses in general terms a desire for peace, but insists on the necessity for a Congress. It carefully abstains from any notice of the basis of the proposal made by Prussia.

The Cabinet of St. Petersburg are said to be divided on the Italian question. The German party oppose the independence of Italy, while the Emperor and a small minority manifest more liberal sentiments.

The Conference at Zurich.—An article in the Paris Patrie of the 22d of August, seems to intimate that all is not going so smoothly at Zurich as the Nord would have us believe. The writer says:

Sardinia and Austria then, are incompatible at Zurich. Their plenipotentiaries already decline direct communication with each other; they only communicate through the medium of the French representative. So, before an agreement could have been come to, they won't even listen any longer to each other. This is a situation that greatly impedes a mutual understanding.

France, it is true, does all she can to allay this antagonism. She arbitrates with an authority equal to her wisdom. She brings to the negotiations a spirit of business that undoubtedly would succeed were it not confronted by the obstinate resistance of Austria.

Great, however, as is the conciliatory disposition of France, she nevertheless cannot go to such a length as to yield to Austria what she cannot abandon, and what she has the right to consider as the fruit of her victories.

France wishes Italy to be independent; Austria does not wish it.

France wishes the Confederation to be Italian; Austria wishes it to be Austrian.

France wishes the Pope to consolidate his power by prudent reforms; Austria wishes the Pope to remain subject to influences antipathetic to the French mind.

France desires that the Dukes of Tuscany and Modena may be able loyally to become reconciled with their peoples; Austria desires to impose them by force.

France wants the fortresses of the quadrangle to be occupied by a federal army; Austria wants these fortresses to be occupied as barracks by her army, that this may remain as a permanent menace against the independence of Italy.

Notwithstanding her spirit of generous and wise conciliation, we greatly fear that France herself will be unable to carry out her arbitration between Austria and Piedmont.

Recourse must be had, then, to another jurisdiction. Europe alone is competent to judge and solve such great difficulties, such serious interests.

For all these reasons, the Italian question in short, as it appears to us, can only be settled by a European Congress. The sword of France has cut through the treaties that consecrated the domain of Austria in the States of the Peninsula. It is to the authority of Europe that it pertains to complete the work.

Piedmont under Lock and Key.—Reports have come of great dissensions at the conference. It is said that the King of Sardinia insists upon the cession of the fortresses of Peschiera and Mantua to Lombardy; on the other hand, that he is willing to give up all pretensions to the Duchies. There is a rumor that the partisans of Prince Napoleon are actively engaged in agitating the Duchies in his behalf; with some promise of success. Still there the cry is war—war—war! The remedy in this crude state of things is not apparent to the Piedmontese. They say that they have had their house enlarged, but that the Austrians keep the key of it with four bolts.

The young Grand Duke of Tuscany went to Paris incognito to supplicate the Emperor to help him to his father's throne. The Emperor is reported to have said, "It is not my fault that you fought against Italy in the Austrian ranks." It may be gathered, therefore, from various sources that to restore the duchess and the dukes has become little less than an impossibility.

The Revival in Wales.—In Wales the revival is represented by a minister laboring there as "manifesting itself among all orthodox churches—The Established Church, Independents, Baptists, Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, and Wesleyan Methodists—alike. It has produced great unity and brotherly love amongst them. It is wonderful to behold what a spirit of prayer has possessed the Lord's people, more especially the recently converted, and what immediate replies are vouchsafed to their prayers. The prayer meetings are universal through Wales, and God meets his people."

Notices, &c.

☞ Bro. Edwin Burnham will commence a protracted meeting in Woodstock, New Brunswick, on Friday evening, after the second Sunday in September, and from that time will labor one month in the Provinces, as the friends may arrange.

Grove Meeting in Poultney.

Providence permitting we will hold a grove meeting in Poultney on Mr. Wells' land, Sept 18th. Should the weather be unfavorable, the meeting will be in the Stone Church.

General Convention in Northern Indiana.

It is proposed to have a General Convention of churches and preachers at Union Mills, La Porte Co., Ind., commencing Thursday, Oct. 6th, and continue over the following Lord's day. The object of this meeting will be to determine upon a system, or plan of arrangements, by which the cause of our soon coming Lord may be more largely and effectually advanced in this region of the West. All such as are interested in an effort of this kind are specially requested to be present; preachers in person, and churches by their representatives—as it may be expected that important measures will be adopted at this meeting, in the carrying out of which there should be enlisted the largest possible interest of such as love the coming and reign of the Messiah.

Brethren, ye who desire to see something more accomplished for the advancement of our common cause than has yet been accomplished,—ye who believe it can be done, and that it should be done,—let us now arise, and in a united, intelligently-defined and systematic manner, undertake this effort, spreading far and wide a knowledge of "the faith once delivered to the saints."

The church at Union Mills has kindly offered their hospitalities to such as may attend the meeting, and will spare no pains to make the visit of delegates agreeable; but having recently incurred considerable expense in building a meeting-house and otherwise, it is deemed proper to say we could not presume further upon their liberalities; hence it is suggested churches see to it that their preachers are sent to this meeting without being embarrassed for want of means wherewith to go and come.

Friends coming via. P. Ft. W and C. R. R will stop at Hannah Station. Those coming by the M. S. and N. I. R. R. will stop at La Porte. Those coming by the N. A and S. R. R will stop at Westville, where brethren will call for them upon the arrival of Thursday afternoon train.

Notice.

The Iowa, Minnesota and Wis. Christian Conference will be held with the church of God in Springville, Badax Co., Wis., commencing Oct. the 6th, 1859, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Lord's day. As this conference is young in organization, embracing in its territory a new country, and is therefore a new field of labor, it is desired that as many of the preaching brethren within the precincts of this conference shall attend as can do so; and that all the churches of like precious faith within the limits of the conference should be represented by delegates or letter. Those that write epistles of christian salutation, we hope will be sure to write in season for their letters to be presented to the conference. Those that write will direct to Y. Higgins, Viroqua, Badax Co., Wis.

Those coming from the south will leave the river at Badax city, as it is but seventeen miles to Springville. Those that come from the east will come to Milwaukee, and from thence take the Milwaukee and Mississippi R. R. to Sparta, and from Sparta to Viroqua; a stage runs every Thursday. Those coming from the north and north-west will leave the river at Lacross, from Lacross to Springville; the stage runs Tuesdays and Fridays; fare $1 50. Friends coming from the south-east of this State will come to Prairie du Chien, from thence to Viroqua, the stage runs Thursdays, fare $3.00.

By order of the conference,
Y. Higgins, Evangelist.

Bro. Grant:—I have been requested to make known through the Crisis the condition of Bro. Timothy Dodge, he being in distressed circumstances. For a number of years he has been sick, and not able to labor but a small portion of the time, and for the last year his son, on whom he depended, has been confined to the house, and is now confined to his bed. If there be any that can lend a little aid, it would be very gladly received. They are in immediate want. His address is Brimfield, Mass. J. E. Ainsworth.

N. Illinois and S. Wis. Conference.

According to previous appointment, the southern Wisconsin and northern Illinois conference of the church of God will meet at Crane's Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill., Thursday, September the 15th, to continue over the First day. Let it be understood that the ministering brethren are expressly requested to be there on Thursday, at half-past ten o'clock. Crane's Grove is five miles south of Freeport. Those coming on the cars will write to H. Collings, Forreston, Ill. Provision will be made to meet them at Freeport, and convey them to the conference.

Michigan Church Conference.

The second annual meeting of the Michigan Church Conference is appointed to commence in the school house at Ballard's Corners, three miles south of Grand Rapids, Tuesday evening, Sept. 30th, and continue over Sunday. A general attendance of brethren and other friends is solicited.

O. R. L. Crozier, Sec.

Notice.

We are making arrangements with some of our eastern brethren to come and aid us in our western field, and wish our friends on either of the thoroughfares from New England to Chicago, Ill., to give notice through the "Crisis" immediately, where our brethren can stop and preach on their way, and receive aid to assist them on their journey. Will brethren west that want a servant of God among them, inform me at once. We are making special efforts to aid our western brethren.

My P. O. address, until further notice, is Batavia, Ill. Watson Pratt.
Boston, Sept. 13th.

Notice.

The next quarterly meeting of the Rhode Island Conference is to be at Fisher's Factory, Exeter, R. I., in the Temperance Hall, Sept. 28th, 1859. Those coming by R. R. come on the Providence and Stonington R. R. and stop at Wickford station.

Providence permitting, we will hold meetings in the State of Maine as follows:

In North Searsport, Sept. 20th and 21st.

Conference at West Frankfort, (old meeting house) Thursday, Sept. 22d, at 2 P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath.

Frankfort Village, (where Bro. Gilman Hammond may appoint) Monday evening, Sept. 26th, to continue evenings through the week, and over the Sabbath.

Newburgh, (where Eld. J. Morrill may appoint) Oct. 4th, 5th and 6th.

Conference at North Hermon Oct. 7th, and continue over the following Sabbath.

Conference at Holden, (where Bro. Clewley may appoint) Oct. 13th, at 2 P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath.

Corinna Village, Oct. 22d, at 2 P. M., and over the Sabbath.

Augusta, Oct. 26th, and continue over the Sabbath.

Note.—Will some Bro. in this place write us a line, informing us where the meeting will be held. Direct to North Hermon.

P. S. We shall look for letters at Frankfort, North Hermon, Bangor, Corinna and Augusta.

Come to Yarmouth.—What For?

1. Because the Maine Annual (adjourned) Conference is to be here.
2. Because this is to be an important meeting, and we want the co-operation of all lovers of the "Advent cause."
3. Because much is to be done, and what is done must be done now.
4. Because it is very desirable that all should agree upon the best plan to carry on the cause we so much love.
5. Because this may be the last annual meeting we may ever have, and we want to see as many as possible together once more.
6. Because the church here need your labors and words of encouragement.

Come, then, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord, one and all. Come praying. Come to labor for Jesus; and may the Lord of Israel meet with us. Amen.

In behalf of the cause,
R. R. York.

New Hampshire State Conference.

As the time draws near for the next session of our State conference, it becomes my duty to make the inquiry, Where shall our next conference be holden? Will brethren who may desire the meeting convened with them, please inform me at their earliest convenience, that I may be able to fix on the time and place, and give seasonable notice.

Should there be a choice in regard to the time of the meeting, please name it; but the usual time is the early part of October.

For the Crisis.

On the Death of Eld. John W. Perkins.

AFFECTIONATELY INSCRIBED TO THE BEREAVED WIFE.

[illegible] The seal is set upon his brow,
Death's dreadful work is done;
He sleeps at last most peacefully,
The head that [illegible] done.
[illegible] the fight to win
The victor's glorious crown,
[illegible] his warfare were o'er,
He laid his armor down.

My sister dear, all lonely now
Thy pilgrim way must be,
And this poor world, so drear before,
Seems doubly dark to thee!
But let thy faith unwav'ring be;
The widow's God and friend
Has promised e'er to be with thee,
E'en to thy journey's end.

Sister, dost thou remember all
The bonds of other days?
When, with thy loved companion near,
Ye joined in prayer and praise?
When prayers of simple faith were heard,
A blessing to us given?
Ah! what a sweet encouragement,
A foretaste sure of Heaven!

Dear sister, think how quietly
Your husband resteth now;
Gone is each pain and sorrow now,
Still is that throbbing brow.
Ah! henceforth those who in the Lord
Do die are surely blest;
Free from life's turmoil and its strife,
They find a quiet rest.

How sadly will they miss him in
The home that gave him birth!
No more will he return to them,
To cheer their lonely hearth;
But, parents, brothers, sisters dear,
Whose griefs no tongue can tell,
Remember, oh remember still,
"He doeth all things well."

Dear sister, press thee onward then,
The journey ne'er give o'er,
For just within the distance lies
The bright and shining shore;
And angel bands are gathering
To wait their Lord's command,—
"Gather ye my redeemed ones
From every age and land!"

Full well I know we sorrow not
As those whose hopes are vain,
For there's a blessed promise given
T' assuage your every pain;
And, when you laid your loved one down
Beneath the cold, damp sod,
'T was with assurance sweetest, blest,
He waiteth here his God.

Inconsistent Prayers.

I hear many things prayed for that seem to me very inconsistent. For instance, when I hear any one pray—"O Lord, sanctify my soul.' Give me a clean heart;" and at the same time do not believe it possible to be sanctified, or to possess a pure heart, I think the prayer a very inconsistent one.

When I hear a person say—"Here, Lord, I give myself away to thee; do with me as thou wilt;" and at the same time refuse to truly dedicate themselves from the heart unto God, and are rebelling against his will from day to day, I think such a petition very inconsistent.

When I hear a person pray—"O Lord, fit me out for usefulness in the world; enable me to do some good in thy cause;" and at the same time do nothing to benefit others, or to advance the cause of God, I think the prayer a very inconsistent one.

When I hear a person pray—"O Lord, strip me from pride; make me truly humble;" and at the same time live in the constant indulgence of pride; provide daily for its existence by making provision for it, by following all the fashions of the day—adorning the person with jewelry and flowers, costly apparel, and pampering its dainty appetite in every way, I think them very inconsistent prayers.

When I hear a person praying God to bless the poor, and open a way for them to have their wants supplied, and then turn away empty the needy applicant from their door, and seeking to quiet conscience by denouncing them, one and all, as impostors, I think them very inconsistent prayers. Such persons do not seek out the worthy poor; they never visit the abodes of wretchedness in order to alleviate their wants, but with the cry of "impostor" against every applicant, they close their purses, and harden their hearts against the pleadings of the poor.

When I hear a person pray that the gospel may spread throughout the earth, and at the same time give nothing to make it progress, I think the prayer useless and inconsistent. Such are like Aunt Dinah, a shouting colored woman. When the missionary box was going round, she would sing very lustily with others, but always threw her head back, and shut her eyes, till the plate had gone by. One day, however, the sable collector said to Aunt Dinah very bluntly, "Look a'here, Aunt Dinah! you needn't be singing "Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel, if you doesn't give nothing to make it fly!"

"Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel!"

When I hear a person pray God to deliver the poor oppressed slave from his bondage, and at the same time oppress their own hirelings in their wages, withhold the rights of the poor, and rule with rigor those over whom they have authority, I think their prayers very inconsistent. [illegible] prayed for deliverance from [illegible] and obtained [illegible] as we sometimes term it—the evidence that God would deliver him; but he did not therefore sit down and do nothing. He selected a large and very fine portion of his flocks and herds, and sent them on before him as a present with which to pacify his brother, and this no doubt had much to do towards the accomplishment of his desire. If we desire to become pure in heart, we must come fully to Christ, and trust wholly in him to cleanse us from sin. If we pray truly to be useful, to be instruments of good, we must act in accordance with our prayer—we must go to work, and seek to accomplish good.

If we wish to be humble, we must humble ourselves, and deny self—make no provision for the pride of our hearts. If we truly desire the poor to be benefited, we must minister to them, if in our power—"give to him that asketh thee," according to your ability, and not denounce every one as an impostor. If we would have the gospel progress, we must give something to make it go, or devote ourselves to the work of promoting it.

Many will talk long and loud about the wrongs of the Southern slave, and pray much for them; while the poor white man at their very door is oppressed, robbed of his rights, and forced to toil hard for a scanty pittance, suffering cold and hunger: "but it is only a white man; he has his liberty, and the black man is in bondage." And so all the sympathy, prayers and efforts are in behalf of the poor slave down South. Better first do all we can for the relief of white slaves at the North—possessing naught but the name of liberty—and then, when our duty is faithfully discharged at home, do all in our power to relieve the oppressed abroad. And while we offer prayer for the heathen on foreign soil, let us remember the heathen in our midst, and not merely offer prayer for them, but visit them—give them the gospel—carry it to their homes; for alas! since the advent of gorgeous palaces in which to worship God, the poor do not have the gospel preached unto them.

Let us pray and work—work and pray.

Brotherly Kindness.

This is one of the many graces of the Spirit, and none more requisite than this for the perfecting of the body of Christ, which is the church, and charity, which is the bond of perfectness. The Apostle Paul says, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity; and the greatest of these three is charity." "Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; is not easily provoked; thinketh no evil; charity never faileth.' With this blessed principle we can ever overcome evil with good, and bear fruit to the glory of God.

The Savior says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." Then this is the cord that binds the true disciples of Jesus together, and unites them to Christ, as a branch is united to the vine.—"This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you."—"Love is the fulfilling of the law;" and our love should be fervent, without partiality or hypocrisy; "for if ye have respect to persons ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors." Then how careful we should be to let brotherly love continue. Love will soften the hard heart into tenderness and penitence. It is a plant of Paradise, and must have congenial soil, or it will not grow and bear fruit. O that we may all cultivate this heaven-born principle in our hearts and lives, that it may be said of us, "See how these brethren love one another!"

Brethren and sisters, may the Lord Jesus Christ guide you into all truth, and to a patient waiting for his glorious kingdom; and we will continue to pray, "thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

"Yes, he will come, no longer fear,
Though earth and hell assail;
His word attests the moment near,
And that can never fail."

THE TRANSFIGURATION OF MEMORY.—"As there was an hour when the fishermen of Galilee saw their Master transfigured, his raiment white and glistening, and his face like the light, so are there hours when our whole mortal life stands forth in celestial radiance. From our daily lot falls off every weed of care, from our heart friends every speck and stain of earthly infirmity. Our horizon widens, and blue, and amethyst, and gold touch every object. Absent friends and friends gone on the last journey stand once more together, bright with an immortal glow, and, like disciples who saw their Master floating in the clouds above them, we say, 'Lord, it is good to be here!' How fair the wife, the husband, the absent mother, the gray-haired father, the manly son, the bright-eyed daughter! Seen in the actual present, all have some fault, some flaw; but absent, we see them in their permanent and better selves. Of our distant home we remember not a dark day, not one servile care, nothing but the echo of its holy hymns, and the radiance of its bright days—of our father not one hasty word, but only the fullness of his manly vigor and noble tenderness—of our mother nothing of mortal weakness, but a glorified form of love—of our brother, not one teasing, provoking word of brotherly fiddling, but the proud beauty of his nobler [illegible] our sister, our child, only what is fairest and sweetest."—H. B. Stowe.

Tendencies of the Times.

BY REV. [illegible] PLATT.

THE VOICE OF GOD TO THE CHURCH IN VIEW OF THESE FACTS.

That voice calls first of all for more of principle, not feeling. Men who will take the word of God as their rule, and bend everything to its requirements. Men of stern metal, who will ring out clear and strong upon the world the unalterable truths of God's salvation. Men who will wield the weapon of the strongest moral influence, consistent example. "Specimen Christians!" to whom the world may wonderingly look, and the Church exultantly point as examples of what the gospel can do. Give us such men, and the hopes of the world will brighten, and her day-star speedily climb the sky. Give us such men, and the fair daughter of Zion shall no longer clothe herself in sackcloth and ashes, and hang her harp upon the willows of Babylon, refusing to sing the Lord's song in a strange land.

Give us such men, and they will seize with strong arm the restless spirit of the age, and bind it to the car of christian progress; they will render every invention tributary to the great work of evangelization; they will temper the recklessness and worldliness of the times into holy daring and benevolent acquisition; they will substitute profound principle for the superficiality and want of principle around them, and finally they will infuse a living fire into the pietism of the day, and compel its skepticism to surrender to the power of their example.

As one result of this principle, God calls for a better spirit among christians! Says an able writer—Steward—"Christianity relies not on the number or resources of its champions for its triumphs, but simply on their spirit."

We shall see the truth of this, when we remember that the world judges of the reality and value of religion by its practical results within the sphere of their own observation; and if they see there the duplicate of Christ's example—their own ideal of christian excellence personified—living, walking, talking, a thing of life, clothed in the vesture of unspotted moral purity, their hearts must melt, and "the hardest parts of the sinner will be found as powerless to resist the sharp sword of the Spirit as the softest."—Caughey. As another result of this principle, God calls for fruit bearing Christians. Not merely christians whose labors he can consistently bless, but those who shall claim fruit as their right, and usefulness as their inheritance. Men who shall take hold of that assurance of our Lord—"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bring forth much fruit," and lifting it to the Throne of Mercy, by the power of that petition—"Father glorify thy name"—shall claim its fulfillment always as a covenant pledge. And then adding the supplemental plea—"I have chosen you and ordained you, that you shall go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain." "And now, Father, keep that which I have committed unto thee, that none may be lost"—should thus win, and retain till they go to their reward.

O that we would comprehend our privileges. God has done his part. He gives to every young convert an earnest ambition to be useful. In this, he is no respecter of persons. In his commands and promises he is not. He commands us all to "covet earnestly the best gifts," and declares that "whoso knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin;" and promises that "if we ask, we shall receive"—"if we cast our bread upon the waters, we shall find it after many days"—that "if we go forth weeping, bearing precious seed, we shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing our sheaves with us." And, as if to silence all doubt and quiet every fear, assures us that "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which we despise hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence."

Again, God calls for a more strict individualism! Generalization is the tendency of the times. Men's ideas are getting too large to dwell long upon personal responsibility! We merge our own responsibility in the duty of the mass, of the society, of the Church—forgetful that what is the duty of the whole, is, in part, a duty of each component part of that whole. The means within our reach must be used, or we fail, and by one failure the whole fails. We want to be more deeply imbued with the sentiment that the design of this life is to save the world—not to secure social position, wealth, etc., and that all the responsibility arising from the fact that we exist, and may be useful, rests upon us in our personal, identical character.

Again, as a consequence of this individualism—God calls for believing Christians. Faith is the grand moving force, and the promises the fundamental law, of the kingdom of God on earth. What that force might do within the limits of its law, we do not know; but one thing we do know—it might raise the dull, inert mass of mere profession to the level of [illegible] and then grapple with all the facts of existence with the power of a determined conqueror. It might infuse into the praying heart the consciousness of its strength, and inspire it to seek a sphere of action worthy of its responsibilities and its destiny. It might clothe our responsibilities with such a fixedness of identity as would extort from every prostrate soul the anxious inquiry, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and then send him forth a flaming messenger of salvation to the world around.

Again, God calls for an aggressive Christianity in the lives of his people. The first religious impulses, felt by the child of God, are aggressive. Like the first physical effort of the new-born child for air, they indicate a necessity of the being! And as, when great exertion is required, an increased action of the physical organs is demanded—so earnest, straight-forward, zealous aggression feeds the spiritual powers, and tunes them up to greater efforts and more lasting triumphs. The most holy christians are those who fight the most. O how much is needed a generation of daring warriors for God, who shall court danger, and esteem peril as a privilege, and sacrifice an honor!

Aggression is a law of life for the Church—may Heaven give us more of it!

Dr. Wayland relates that when the Baptist mission commenced among the Karens, the Missionary could only labor a few months in the year; but he labored faithfully, and a few were converted. The Missionary was obliged to leave his station, but returned in a year or two, fearful that they had all been scattered, and inquired for them. Judge of his surprise when he learned that 1,500 persons awaited baptism. How was it? Each pointed his neighbor to the Savior. There was an individual responsibility and an aggressive spirit.

* * * * * * *

They were aggressive Christians!

The truths and agencies of religion are equally well adapted to all classes and all time; hence its appeals are constant and universal; and aggression and extension soon enter into its very nature. Hence the questionable benevolence which would merely make the gospel accessible to all, finds no place here, but a burning love and zeal, which would press it upon each, is the distinguishing characteristic of its beneficence. God has done everything necessary for the salvation of the world, even to the impression of the excitements of his Spirit to that end, so that nothing is now needed, but for men to urge home the claims of Heaven upon every one, by precept, by example, by the powerful persuasions of urgent prayer and vehement exhortation.

Last of all, God calls for Christians for the times! Men of depth, of principle, and piety sufficient to sustain them in position, amid the whirl and foam of this superficial age. Men of sober sense and modest pretensions, to rebuke the extravagance of the day.

Men of far-seeing sagacity, and calm, determined prudence, to stand at the helm of the Church, amid the reckless race for worldly bubbles. Men who will estimate wealth, not so much by the sensual gratification it is capable of giving, as a means to lay up treasures in the heavens. Men of sober, but scrutinizing faith, who shall stand as the wave-washed rock, the same amid the commotion of the elements around, unmoved by the taunts, or sneers, or ridicule of the skeptical and profane. Men who shall be ever on the alert to lead every device, and invention and scheme to the great work of advancing the interests of the race, and harness every promising change in some way to the car of salvation.

Men who shall ride upon the very crest of the wave of progress, who shall roll on the first tide of emigration, who shall burn with the intensest fires of activity, but all with a settled purpose to range side by side with the adventurous spirit of the age, only to chain that spirit to the right and the true and the pure! To soar with it in its deepest mine, to roam with it in its wildest excursion, all still to point out God and humanity as the end of all effort, and the sum of all duty.

Men who shall claim success as their right, and conquest as their dower. Who shall dwell in such an atmosphere of holy love as to bring down upon their associates and the world the convicting influence of the "power of God." Men whose very lives shall be a standing refutation of Infidelity, and whose exertions shall prove that the humanities of the age are dear to their hearts.

Men who will "surrender their hearts to a single principle, and their lives to a single impulse," and who shall look continually for the outpouring of the Spirit from on high, and labor for its speedy appearing. Men, in short, whose battle-cry shall be, not—the sword of the Lord and of Gideon, but—the power of the Holy Ghost, the gift of believers! The power of the Holy Ghost the salvation of the Church! The power of the Holy Ghost the hope of the world!

"The power of the Holy Ghost mine now and forever!

Selections.

Interesting Extracts.

The following extracts are from an old translation, or rather paraphrase, of the New Testament, furnished us by Bro. Geo. Dillabaugh, Seneca Falls, N. Y. The book is so worn that no trace of publisher or date can be found. The corners of the leaves are worn nearly round, so as to obliterate a portion of the text.—ED.

2 Cor. 5: 2. For in this present vehicle we groan under the oppressive load of mortality, ardently longing to be invested with that spiritual structure which awaits us in the regions of immortality.

4th v. For surrounded with this decaying tabernacle, we groan under the pressure of this mortal life—not that we are desirous to be divested of it. We are rather desirous that our celestial vehicle might be superinduced over it; that mortality might by an imperceptible translation be absolved in immortality.

16th v. Wherefore being interested in these signal blessings, we for the future know no invidious distinctions between persons of different nations; and though we have gloried that Christ was a Jew, yet we glory in this particular no longer.

Eph. 1: 10. That when, in the order of his dispensations, the fullness of time was arrived, he would, under Christ as their head, summarily comprise and combine into ONE collective system all in heaven and all on earth.

11th v. To whom we Jews were also allotted as part of his extensive kingdom; being originally appointed to this distinguishing felicity by the designation of that great Being who, by his irresistible energy, effecteth all things as seemeth best to his infinite wisdom.

Phil. 1: 23. For I am now embarrassed in this difficult dilemma—cherishing a warm desire for my dissolution, and longing to be with Christ—a felicity infinitely superior to any this life can bestow.

Col. 1: 13. Who hath rescued us heathens from the horrors of our dark and gloomy confinement, and vindicated us into the light and liberty of the glorious kingdom of his beloved Son.

1 Tim. 4: 1. But from this divine religion great numbers, the Spirit of God expressly assures us, will in subsequent ages apostatize, eagerly embracing the delusions of impostors, and doctrines concerning departed spirits.

2d v. Being duped by the frauds and dissimulation of false teachers, who have abandoned all sense of conscience and virtue.

Ch. 6: 16. The sole Being, who is essentially endowed with immortality, who dwells in light inaccessible, whom no mortal hath seen or could sustain to see—to him be honor and dominion through all the revolving ages of eternity! Amen.

Heb. 1: 8. But concerning the Son, this is its language—"The Supreme hath established thy throne forever and ever—a sceptre of rectitude is the sceptre of thy kingdom.

Ch. 11: 5. The sovereign direction of the gospel dispensation, of which we are now discoursing, the Deity did not assign to angels.

Ch. 7: 3. His father, his mother, his pedigree, are no where mentioned—the time of his birth and of his decease is not recorded—a character this, extremely similar to the Son of God, as he was invested with a priesthood liable to no succession.

James 2: 26. For as an human body, when uninformed with life, is only a torpid and inert mass of senseless matter—just so faith, unconnected with good works, is a dead, unanimated principle.

1. Pet. 3: 18, (last clause.) Suffering death, indeed, in the flesh, but restored to life by the Spirit of God;

19th v. By whose afflatus (Spirit) in the primitive ages of the world he delivered solemn admonitions to those who are now in the state of the dead:

20th v. But these repeated warnings they rejected, though God in the days of Noah waited their repentance during the whole time the ark was constructing—in which only eight souls escaped the general inundation.

21st v. To this escape from the common ruin corresponds the everlasting salvation, into the firm belief of which our baptismal profession of christianity introduces us—that baptism which is not merely the ablution of the body, but the attestation of a good conscience towards God—and this salvation is ascertained and ratified to us by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

1 John 3: 8. He who lives in wickedness is of the Devil; for from the first origin of the world he still continues a wicked being; for this end the Son of God appeared on earth, in order that he might utterly abolish the empire he had erected.

Heb. 11: 14. Since therefore the sons of God are compounded of flesh and blood, he also, in like manner, assumed humanity in order that by his submission to death he might totally crush and annihilate the empire of that being who held the sovereign dominion of death, that is the devil.

Rev. 1: 9. I, John, your fellow christian, fellow sufferer, and fellow expectant of the future glorious kingdom of Jesus Christ, being in the island of Patmos, etc.

1 John 5: 6. This is the person, even Jesus the Messiah, whose divine mission was most illustriously attested, both at his baptism and at his death—not at his baptism solely, but both at his baptism and at his death—it was the Spirit of God, who attested his character—the attestations of the Spirit are absolute truth and veracity.

7th v. That Jesus is the Messiah, is confirmed by the sanction of three witnesses:

8th v. Which are the Spirit, his baptism, and his death—and these three witnesses all unite to attest this one great truth.

12th v. He who cordially embraces the religion of Jesus, is entitled to immortality. But he who rejects the Christian revelation forfeits immortality.

Heb. 12: 22. But under the gospel you are conducted to Mount Zion, to the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, to myriads of angels.

2 Cor. 4: 16. Animated by these motives, we suffer not ourselves to sink under the pressure of any fatigue—but though the animal part of our nature is exhausted and broken with labors, yet our intellectual part is continually, every day more and more enlivened and invigorated.

Eph. 3: 16. That he would grant you, according to his most glorious, inexhaustible benevolence, the illumination of his Spirit to strengthen, and improve your rational and intellectual powers.

Col. 3: 10. And are now invested with the privileges of a new dispensation, which, like its original author, is replete with the most transcendent wisdom.

2 Cor. 3: 6. Who hath empowered and qualified us to be ministers of the new covenant, not the Mosaic, but the Christian covenant—for the Mosaic pronounced an irreversible sentence of death upon its transgressors; but the Christian covenant holds forth the palm of immortality.

Eph. 4: 26. Should your resentments be excited, let them not transport you into any criminal excesses—let not the sun set on your unrelenting anger.

27th v. Neither give any just cause to the calumnies of the slanderer.

Ch. 6: 12. For we combat not merely with the vices and prejudices of private individuals, but we have to conflict with all the confederate and united powers of grand and potent establishments, both civil and religious, which are supported by the sovereigns and rulers of this benighted age.

Col. 3: 3. For you are dead, and your future life hath been deposited by the Deity in the hands of Christ.

4th v. When Christ, who will reanimate our sleeping dust, shall appear, then shall you, at the same time with him, be exhibited in glorious splendor.

2 Tim. 4: 3. For the time will arrive, when men will not bear the true and salutary doctrines of christianity; but their taste being vitiated, and their prurient ears tickled with sounds, they will accordingly countenance a number of public teachers, who will soothe their depraved passions.

4th v. These will reject truth with the last aversion, and drink in fictions and fables with insatiable avidity.

1 John 5: 18. We know that every one who is born of God, doth not live in the practice of wickedness—but he, who hath been happy in this moral birth, preserves an inviolate purity, and the wicked being cannot injure him.

Ch. 3: 9. Every one, who hath been born of God, doth not lead a wicked life, because the principles he received at his moral birth are inherent in him, and it is morally impossible for him to practice wickedness, because he hath been born of God.

Richter's Prayer in Sickness.

God! whom I as Love have known,
Thou hast sickness laid on me,
And these pains are sent of Thee,
Under which I burn and moan;
Let them burn away the sin
That too oft hath checked the love
Wherewith Thou my heart would'st move
When Thy Spirit works within!

In my weakness be Thou strong,
Be Thou sweet when I am sad,
Let me still in Thee be glad,
Though my pains be keen and long.
All that wears my body now,
All that wasteth me away,
Pressing on me night and day,
Love ordains, for Love art Thou!

Suffering is the work now sent;
Nothing can I do but lie
Suffering as the hours go by;
All my powers to this are bent.
Suffering is my gain; I bow
To my Heavenly Father's will,
And receive it hushed and still;
Suffering is my worship now.

God! I take it from Thy hand
As a sign of love; I know
Thou wouldst perfect me through woe,
Till I pure before Thee stand.
All refreshment, all the food
Given me for the body's need,
Comes from Thee, who lovest indeed;
Comes from Thee, for Thou art good.

Let my soul beneath her load
Faint not, through the o'erwearied flesh;
Let her hourly drink afresh
Love and peace from thee, my God;
Let the body's pain and smart
Hinder not her flight to Thee,
Nor the calm thou givest to me;
Keep Thou up the sinking heart!

Grant me never to complain,
Make me to Thy will resigned,
With a quiet, humble mind,
Cheerful on my bed of pain.
In the flesh who suffer thus,
Shall be purified from sin,
And the soul renewed within;
Therefore pain is sent on us.

I commend to thee my life,
And my body to the Cross;
Never let me think it loss
That I thus am freed from strife:
Wholly Thine, my faith is sure,
Whether life or death be mine;
I am safe if I am Thine,
For 'tis Love that makes me pure."

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Food.

Food should be placed on the table as nearly in its simple state as possible; hence we advise all persons who want to live in health, live a long time, and thus, in the end, eat a great deal, to eat each article of food by itself, in its own juices, and as few different articles of food at any one meal as possible. A man ought to be in very good health who takes more than three kinds at any one meal.

As to the kinds of food which may be eaten, we will impose but one restriction, and that is all a man of common sense needs. Eat whatever agrees with you in moderate quantity. By the word "agrees" we mean the absence of any uncomfortable feeling after eating. If, after a simple meal, as described, there is any feeling in the whole body which attracts the attention unpleasantly, then it may be safely considered that something has been taken which has not agreed with the stomach, that an error has been committed as to quantity or quality. In most cases it is very certainly an error of quantity. The better plan for correcting the error is not to conclude that it is the kind of food which disagrees, and therefore discard it, but to take the same kind the next day, only less of it, and so experiment for several times, and settle the question definitely. If it should be found that the difficulty is in the quality of the food, it should be discontinued for a time, but not permanently; for what does not agree this year [illegible] have noticed [illegible] their own systems, and may have wrongfully charged Nature with fickleness, when in reality it is a wise instinct. In general terms, what we "crave" is most likely to agree with us, but in consequence of a too free indulgence we have foundered ourself, and have at once charged nature with a false instinct; doctors call it abnormal, that is, a lawless appetite, but the lawlessness is on our side in the irrational indulgence.

It may be set down as a very general rule, that in health and disease what we crave is best for us, and ours should be the wisdom of a very moderate indulgence at first; and if all goes on well, a more liberal allowance may be taken next day, thus feeling the way along to a safe and beneficial quantity.

Most persons have had experience of a sudden and strong craving for a particular, and perhaps a very uncommon article of food; it is simply Nature's unerring instinct expressing her need of a particular element for the wants of the body, precisely as in any great manufactory—to-day wood is needed, to-morrow metal, now gas, then water. In short, it is by Omnipotence and by instinct, the agent of Omnipotence, that we live an hour. If left to ourselves an hour, in that hour we would die, for we weary or forget, but instinct never sleeps, never slumbers, and there is ceaselessly upon us the sleepless eye of "Our Father in Heaven." There must be variety in our food. The human body is made up of many different elements, and in different proportions. There exist invariable combinations in every article of food we eat.

Some possess elements which are absent in others. Families are very apt to get a round of food and sameness of preparation, and after a while get "tired" of every thing—have very little inclination to eat at all; but let us go to a neighbor's, next door, or a block, or miles away, and the first time we sit down to table we make a "tremendous meal"—seems as if we could hardly get enough. One reason for this is, the food is different and differently prepared, giving different combinations and different elements, some of which may not have been supplied to the body for weeks together, and it is languishing for want of them. Hence an occasional change of a cook has a hygienic value, and should not be so much complained of as is apt to be the case with that portion of our wives who have "nothing to do," and those also who "know how to do nothing" in the direction of the kitchen.

Hence the wisdom of having made us social beings, to induce us to visit our friends and neighbors and kindred every now and then for a meal, or a month, according to circumstances; and when we return home, the old routine is as pleasurable as the leaving of it had been before.

Surely there is wisdom as well as benevolence in every thing in which God has a hand, and the more closely we study his works, his ways, the more strikingly will both these be exhibited. They always go together when man, His child, is concerned.—"Health and Disease," by Dr. W. W. Hall.

Care of the Eyes.

Crawford, the celebrated sculptor, had an inveterate habit of reading in a reclining position; one eye had to be taken out in consequence of a cancerous tumor forming behind it, and his life has paid the forfeit after years of suffering and the expenditure of a large amount of money. Prescott, the historian, in consequence of a disorder of a nerve, by which the eyes were rendered useless for all writing purposes, could not use a pen, as he was unable to see when it failed to make a mark for want of ink; nor could he distinguish the lines or edges of his paper; yet with these disadvantages he wrote all his historicals, using an agate stylus on carbonated paper, being guided as to the lines or edges by brass wires drawn through a wooden frame; but with all these hindrances, he has made himself one of the most readable of modern historians and earned a fortune besides.

To avoid these, and similar calamities, we urge upon the young, especially, never to use the eyes by any artificial light, when nicety of sight is required, nor to use them in any strained position or while riding in rail cars or carriages. We urge upon parents, in view of the many incurable eye diseases, to caution their children against reading by twilight; that is, not before sunrise nor after sunset. It would be greatly better not to allow them to read or sew by any artificial light; but if that is unavoidable, let it be imperative that they cease by nine o'clock at night in summer, and by ten at farthest, in the winter. It is a most inexcusable folly, and will, sooner or later, bring its punishment, to read or sew by gas, or lamp, or candle light, and then sleep after daylight next morning, as a habit. To persons of all ages it is a most injurious practice.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$1.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	[illegible]
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.00
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for [illegible] cts, which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write for the Crisis.

Over all Business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to pre-pay the postage on their papers [illegible] in addition to the above: i. e., $1 will pay for [illegible] numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same [illegible] Provinces.

Resurrection of the Just.

Hark! hear the trumpet loudly roar!
It shakes the earth from shore to shore,
And makes it reel as ne'er before,—
It speaks the close of mercy's door.

The sleeping saints now hear the sound,
And leave their prison in the ground,
Where long by death they have been bound;
Immortal life they now have found.

Oh! how resplendently they shine,
With lustre brilliant and divine;
Thus will the Lord his saints refine,
To bring about his great design.

Like clouds of incense they arise,
To meet their Savior in the skies;
Quick to the earth in haste he flies,
To claim his precious "purchased" prize.

They shout, oh death! where is thy sting?
Oh grave! where is thy glorying?
As they arise to meet their king,
Who comes their recompense to bring.

The Lamb.—Our Sacrifice.

"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

On the plains of Shinar a group of wise men are gathered with their eyes fixed in admiration upon a magnificent planet which has just appeared in the East. Oh! how the other stars paled before its royal radiance as it fairly quivered with the intensity of its own brightness,—and within their hearts came the voice of prophecy, soft and musical as the evening breeze, saying,—"There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall arise out of Israel,"—and they gladly followed their brilliant guide "till it came and stood over where the young child was . . . . and they saw the young child with Mary its mother." Oh! did not the young mother gaze upon that holy brow with awe, as she looked down the prophetic vista of years, and gazed upon the grand panorama of events that circled around her child. Oh! did she see the mystic mount of Calvary, with its summit wrapped in cloud through whose dark foldings gleamed a cross? Did she see the crown of thorns on the bleeding temples, and turn in anguish from the sight; or did she look beyond this to the bright cloud that shed its soft light over his glorious form at the mount of transfiguration, and feel within her bosom a gush of joy, love, and gratitude?—Thus we behold the Lamb of God in a manger,—the first gift of a perishing world to its Savior.

Far away through the fertile vale of El Ghor flows the river Jordan, sometimes bright as burnished silver in the golden light of a midday sun, and sometimes the clear waters steal softly through a long aisle of willows, dim and cool, pausing but to kiss the green bank, and then rippling away through the woods. Here came the Apostle of the wilderness, and stood in the stream baptizing.—"And this same John had his raiment of camel's hair and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and wild honey." But his face shone with intellect, and his eye burned with the mild fire of love. Silently the people sat on the green sloping bank, listening to the words,—"I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear; he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." And lo! while yet the words were on his lips, he raised his eyes and on the bank stood Jesus waiting to go in. The apostle hurried to his feet, saying, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" And Jesus met his earnest looks with a lingering smile of heavenly sweetness, and answered, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness;" and drawing the apostle's arm around him he gently drew him into the midst of the stream, and the form of the Son of the Highest was immersed in the limpid waves. As they came up out of the water, the apostle reverently folded his hands, and silently followed in the footsteps of his Master, when lo! a light, bright as the glory of the sun, yet lambent as the softly burning stars, enveloped them, and a voice broke from the midst, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased;" and a snow white dove floated down, shedding sweet music from its plumes, and fluttered in the Savior's bosom.

After his baptism we behold the Lamb of God teaching and healing; we see his pensive, solemn countenance bending over the dying couch—in the hut of poverty—in the streets of Jerusalem—by the weary way-side, his tender feet torn and bleeding with long travel—tears of pity for others' woes falling from his matchless eyes. We see him at the tomb of Lazarus—by the plague-stricken leper—and everywhere he is the same trusting, loving, self-sacrificing Lamb, healing the sick, raising the dead, casting out demons, preaching eternal life through himself. Oh! his was a message of "Peace on earth and good will to men."

It was night, still, calm, holy night! The disciples had gone into a ship to cross to the other side of the sea of Galilee, and Jesus had retired into a mountain apart to pour out his soul in prayer. How sweetly and softly the night wind sighs through the olive trees, and lifts the damp locks from the Savior's brow. The silence is deep and holy on land and sea, and countless gems are lighting up the dark blue concave—quenchless lamps they are, hung there in the dawn of creation by the hand of the Eternal Jehovah,—and will they not be porch lamps before his throne? But over their brilliancy is thrown the black pall of the storm king, and lurid gleams of lightning flash in quick succession through the gloomy sky, as volley after volley of heaven's artillery is poured forth with deafening rapidity.

A storm comes sweeping down from the valley of El Ghor, and the wild winds lash the foaming waves "like maddened spirits along the distant shores;" and there on the little sea of Galilee, usually so calm and peaceful,—there in that dread night picture is gathered the Armada of the storm king. The angry sky above and the black goal of death a "hundred fathoms down!" Oh! must that little faithful band go down where "Night and Death have built their thrones," while the wind rolls out its stern triumphant hymns? If they do, no marble can there record their names, no loving eye follow them to their long rest; for who dare follow them down to death amid the battle of the elements? Ah! their funeral trains must be long lines of marching billows—their burial psalms can only be the volleyed thunder and the sounding storm. Who can guess the thoughts that filled their brains amid the confusion of that dreadful hour? Oh! did they not think of the hearts their fate must break? Did they not think of the loved ones around the home circle who were listening to the storm with tearful eyes and full hearts, whose every throb sent to heaven a prayer for their safety? And lo! far through the thick gloom a bright form is gliding over the crested waves, sweeping towards them in the darkness; is it a marvel that their white faces grow whiter still as they whisper to each other—"It is a spirit!" Then along the foaming billows come the thrilling accents—"It is I; be not afraid!" Oh! what a weight was taken from their hearts, and how quickly Peter begged and obtained permission to go to him.—"But when he saw the wind boisterous he was afraid; and beginning to sink he cried, saying, 'Lord, save me!'" His was an urgent position and his an urgent prayer. He had no time to utter an eloquent plea composed by the rules of modern eloquence—his petition was brief and comprehensive,—"Lord, save me!" "And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand and caught him and said unto him, Oh! thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? And when they were come into the ship the wind ceased;" and again the bright surface of Galilee was calm and smooth as a sea of molten silver.

* * * * * * *

Jesus and his disciples are gathered together at the last passover, and he said, "Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God. And when they had sung a hymn they went out into the mount of Olives." They sung a hymn, the victim singing at the altar—the Lamb singing under the very edge of the sacrificial knife—was there ever before a hymn sung under such circumstances? The twelve pass through the lone streets of Jerusalem, unminded by the inhabitants of the sleeping city, for sleep has long since sealed the eyes of the thousands that daily moved through the marts of Judea's capital. The stars were holding their nightly festival around the midnight throne, and the moon, gilded with its silver light the towers and domes, that by day had reflected the beams of the torrid sun—slowly they wend their way through the deserted streets; beyond Kedron they reach Gethsemane. The night wind moaned hoarsely through dark cedars and mournful cypresses, or sighed gently amid the soft, long grass at their feet. The brook of Kedron murmured by, singing in its dreams; the stars shone on as they ever shine, unmindful of the great wail of human woe! "And he saith to his disciples, sit ye here while I go and pray yonder; . . . . and he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee; . . . . and he said unto them, my soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death; tarry ye here and watch." And slowly he glided along and knelt on the damp sod; hark! how clearly rise his mournful accents on the night air. 'Tis the voice of a son pleading with his father—the voice of the long promised Messiah—the Prince of Peace—the Savior of Israel. He heeds not the chilling blast, too intensely bitter is the anguish of his spirit; all the energies of his soul are absorbed in the struggle. And from his brow, clammy with the night dews of heaven, large drops of bloody sweat trickle to the ground—the very life-stream gushing from the crushed heart. Oh! what anguish and woe is depicted in every lineament of his lovely face as he cries, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt." Legions of shining angels with intense sympathy gaze upon the scene, and bright seraphs, hovering on noiseless wing, with mingled awe and sadness watch the fearful conflict; as nature failed Divinity came to his aid, "an angel strengthened him," and then came the sweet sentence of resignation above quoted. Oh! then hell's dark legions fled aghast and angels with tenfold rapture tuned their golden harps before the throne of the Eternal! Roman helmets flash through the gloom—Roman swords glitter in the moonlight—Judas betrayed him with a kiss—and the fearful scene paled before the awful tragedy of the crucifixion. Centuries have rolled away and Gethsemane still remains in its gloom and loneliness, a perpetual memento of the "man of sorrows."

* * * * * * *

Once more we see him on the summit of Calvary, his fair form bent beneath the weight of the cross—suspended between two criminals he hangs and bleeds for us. Oh! how can we realize a scene so fearful that the dead dare not sleep in their graves, but bursting their quiet tombs came forth to gaze upon the bloody tragedy. Oh! we can almost see the crimson gore staining the thorny wreath; we can almost hear the strokes of the hammer as it sends the cold iron through those quivering tendons—and when the sin of a lost world darkened a father's brow, we can almost hear a cry so piercing, shrill, and wild that the universe shuddered, as "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabbacthani," quivered through the atmosphere like an electric shock. But why should we dwell upon the painful working of the agony-wrung brow—the convulsive heaving of the tortured bosom? Why should we dwell upon a scene from which the sun veiled his face, refusing to look upon the deeds of finite man thus madly rushing upon the thick bosses of the Infinite? Ah! it summoned an earthquake which rent the rocks, severed the veil which shielded the "Holy of Holies," and made those three crosses reel like twigs in a tempest.

There is another scene in which we shall "see him as he is"; and now do we most vividly feel the powerlessness of language to describe, or pen to paint, that second coming. "For behold the Lord will come with fire and with his chariots, like a whirlwind to render his anger with fury and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord shall be many." The nations have filled the vial of wrath, and upon their devoted heads must fall the vengeance of Jehovah, for out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God, and he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings and Lord of lords.

He will not come again as a lamb led to the slaughter—a sheep dumb before his shearers; he will not come the poor, despised Nazarene, to be buffeted, mocked and scourged by a reviling world; but he will come with "wreath of flame and robe of storm," with his retinue of shining attendants, "mighty hosts of the angels that wait on the Lord." And before the eternal throne the books will be opened, and the dead small and great, shall stand in the presence of the "Ancient of Days." They will come trooping up from the mossy churchyards; children that the great Spoiler had taken while yet pure and undefiled—maidens that he laid down to sleep while the rosy avenues of life were just opening before them; and with them will come those who drank of the bitter cup of life's cares until, wearied with its dregs, they folded their pale hands and said, "I can drink no more, take it away;" side by side they slept with their dear, faithful pastor, who for long years toiled with them, until his raven locks were silvered with bright threads, which were but the pearly forerunners of a brighter crown;—still they come from amid the polar icebergs, the scorching sands of Arabia, and from the fathomless depths of old ocean; for a voice will cleave its walls of pearl and sapphire, with the cry, "give up thy dead!"

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." We are Voyagers.

We are voyagers on an ocean, and our destiny we know,
For our chart it has pointed out the way;
Our Leader, too, is cheering us as o'er the waves we go,
Saying, courage, sailor, soon we'll gain the day.

CHORUS.

Then we'll watch and we'll pray,
As our vessel bears away,
And we ne'er will be disheartened any more;
For the port is getting nearer,
And I hear the Leader say—
We soon shall reach the harbor and the shore.

Though hard the winds are blowing, and high the billows roll,
'T will only make us sigh for land the more;
And our rest will be the sweeter when we reach the final goal,
And shout our voyage is over on the shore.

CHO. Then we'll watch, etc.

We have past the coast of Babylon and the Medo-Persian light,
And we've left the coast of Grecia far behind;
We've been sailing down the Roman shore for eighteen hundred years,
And the chart declares the port we soon shall find.

CHO. Then we'll watch, etc.

For the Crisis.

Bible Sabbath Facts.

BRO. GRANT:—The article with this caption in the Crisis of August 17th, from our aged Bro. Grew, sets forth the subject of the Sabbath in its true light; and I wish it might be read and re-read by all, especially by those that doubt whether they should observe the old Jewish Sabbath during the gospel dispensation. The evidence presented by Bro. G. is in harmony with the views of the early christians.

Mosheim says, (chap. 4, part 2, sec. 8,) "The christians assembled for the purpose of divine worship in private houses, in caves; in vaults where the dead were buried. These meetings were on the first day of the week, and in some places they assembled also upon the seventh, which was celebrated by the Jews. Many also observed the fourth day of the week, on which Christ was betrayed, and the sixth which was the day of his crucifixion. Again (chap. 4, part 2, sec. 4,) "All christians were unanimous in setting apart the first day of the week on which the triumphant Savior arose from the dead for the solemn celebration of public worship. This pious custom, which was derived from the example of the church of Jerusalem, was founded upon the express appointment of the apostles, who consecrated that to the same sacred purpose, and was observed universally throughout all the christian churches, as appears from the united testimony of the most credible writers."

Mosheim also states in this same connection that some observed other days, and the apostles did not condemn them for so doing. It is evident from these quotations that the early christians did not consider the keeping of any particular day as set apart by God for the Sabbath or day of rest. History informs us that the first christians did not observe the entire day, but used to congregate early in the morning before it was yet light, and after spending sometime in prayer and exhortation they pursued again their daily occupation. The apostle Paul says, "Let no man therefore judge you in meats or in drinks, or in respect of a holy day, or of [illegible] or of the Sabbath." The apostle uses the definite article—"The Sabbath"—not a Sabbath.

The Sabbath was instituted under the Mosaic economy as a day of remembrance, that the children of Israel should not forget their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. God says to them (Deut. 5: 15,)—"And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched-out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." They were not only commanded to keep the Sabbath day, but it was to be observed especially on the anniversary of the same day of the month or moon on which they left Egypt, the day after the slaying of the paschal lamb on the fifteenth day of the first month, which is termed a high day, a day long to be remembered. The Sabbath was the corner-stone from which the Jews were obliged to count, that they might know when to observe the next feast. The Jews did not keep the Sabbath alternately, every seventh day, year after year; they were obliged to change the day every year, that they might have a succession of Sabbaths, seven in number, commencing to count the sixteenth day of the first month, which brought them to the feast of weeks. Lev. 23: 15;—"And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering; seven sabbaths shall be complete: even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord." I suppose that no one will dispute that these Sabbaths were the seven day Sabbaths named in the decalogue, found in the fourteenth verse of the fifth chapter of Deut., which God commanded to be kept in remembrance of their deliverance from Egypt. All must see the impossibility of keeping the Sabbath according to law without a change; for if kept consecutively the Sabbath could not fall on the fifteenth day of the first month, the anniversary of their leaving Egypt.

I wish to answer an objection made by some who wish to evade the conclusion to which this arrangement brings them. It is denied that the Sabbath from which they began to count the seven Sabbaths to the [illegible], was the Sabbath that fell on the fifteenth day of the moon; but that it was the first seventh day Sabbath which occurred after the passover, and that the first fruits were not offered on the sixteenth day of the month, but on the first day succeeding the seventh day Sabbath. As it is not said in the law that the first fruits were to be offered on the sixteenth day of the month, it will be necessary to show by the types and other evidences that the first fruits were offered in the temple the succeeding day, after the anniversary of their coming out of Egypt. Modern writers on the Jewish Calendar, such as Calmet and Lightfoot, agree in counting from the sixteenth of the month Nisan, as being the day on which the first fruits were presented in the temple; and consequently they make the day of Pentecost or the feast of weeks, to fall universally on the sixth of the month Sivan. Dr. Jarvis in speaking on this point says, "I find no place in which the word Sabbath is unequivocally applied to any other than the seventh day of the week." The Bible is explicit on this point. Paul says in 1 Cor. 15: 3, 4, "I delivered unto you first of all that which I received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he arose again the third day according to the Scriptures." The Scriptures referred to by Paul, which pointed to the death of Christ, were the slaying of the paschal lamb, and the resurrection of Christ to the offering of the first fruits under the law. The paschal lamb was slain on the fourteenth day of the first month; and if Christ arose on the third day after his death, he must have arisen on the sixteenth day of the month; and therefore the first fruits must have been offered on that day, according to law. This agrees with the saying of our Lord (Matt. 16: 21; 17: 23; 20: 19; Luke 24: 7;) that he should be killed and raised again on the third day.

Again: he arose on the first day of the week, according to the Scriptures.—Mark 16: 1-2; Luke 24: 1; John 20: 1. If these texts do not prove that the first fruits were offered on the sixteenth day of the month, it will be difficult to find where are the Scriptures that teach that the resurrection of Christ was to occur on the third day after his crucifixion according to the Scriptures. Female Preaching.

BRO. GRANT:—I notice several articles in the Crisis on the subject of female preaching. I am glad to see so able a defence from the Bible, and the opinions of good critics, but I was not aware that the reformers of this age, in any considerable number, took opposite ground to those scriptures, or the citations of critics. It was my thought that most reformers and christians of this age, consented, encouraged, and aided women to the work justified by the scriptures in question. (Some should be excepted we know.) And as for Adventists taking the ground that the Bible did not warrant female preaching, I think "Te Judice" must lack experience with them as a people,* she is doubtless a new comer amongst us, and perhaps will in all christian kindness listen to my remarks which will put her in a direction to see the thing in a better light. We have had a great company of female preachers, according to the criticisms of Clark, Whitby and others, in the Advent church, and they have had the largest scope to develop their gifts and influence, and very much good has been, and is being done in that department of the church, "to edification, exhortation and comfort."

Rarely, I think, has it been the case in these days, that reformers have cried out against such labors of devoted and christian women, in the language cited by "Te Judice," impropriety, imprudence, immodesty." And as for the masses of the people, they are always awake to hear the women speak, always go out to hear them, always throng them, and generally flatter, eulogize, and extol them for their ability, wisdom, talent and usefulness. This is far from "oppression, and opposition," which our sister (I suppose it to be) speaks of. But she may perhaps have heard strong expressions spoken against certain women's labors, and the manner of their labors, and she judged that such expressions were intended for all women, and all their christian labors. Such is a great mistake.—Those words and feelings of opposition are directed against such as took an unscriptural course, and taking a leading position which God ordained for man only. Women who break away from all Bible rule, all restraint, and throw off the obligations God has imposed on them, and thus sometimes become a reproach to christianity, they are taken in the snare of the devil. These things have been amongst us as a people, especially in our early days, and experience and example have taught many of us that such kind of female preaching is not good, and not of God. There are honorable exceptions, we know.

That females have the greatest influence, we freely admit, and that they have much talent, and are as important instrumentalities in the church, when acting in their sphere, as men, I believe; but while it may be true that "one woman has as much influence as seven men," it is also true that such ones usually find it out, and have not mental power to control it for good, but become inflated, by eulogy and flattery, with spiritual pride. Men are frequently found in the same condition, and make as bad work in public office.

Let us seek to learn the scriptural position which God intends for us each to occupy,—the male and the female; and while they are "all one in Christ," they have different offices to fill, duties to perform, each sex different from the other, yet all are important, and must be observed, respected and attended to, if we would have the approbation of God.

When reformers find that work is going on which is perverting the principles of reform, and which results in evil, it becomes them to seek reform in that direction; and if they have encouraged female preaching which led to bad results, then it is the greatest characteristic of a reformer to retract, and seek to retrace his steps. But we wish "Te Judice" to be assured that the Advent people, and many others, believe and encourage the principle that females who are "not self-willed, not soon angry, or unruly, not puffed up," but "blameless, sober, just, holy, temperate, adorned with a meek and quiet spirit," should be preachers, "to edify, comfort and exhort." May God enable such to do much, and raise up an host of others to work with them and us unitedly to carry forward the work of the Lord and gather sinners to Christ, and finally gain the coming kingdom of God. Amen. Yours still in the blessed hope of eternal life. I. C. WELLCOME.

The Sixth Seal.

That the Sixth Seal is opened, there is no room to doubt, and that important events within are yet to transpire, there is ample evidence. It appears that all the signs of Christ's coming were to take place within this period of time. Hence we see this is one of the most interesting portions of time in this age. The darkening of the sun and moon, the falling of the stars, are events in the past, but the great day of God's wrath is yet to come. The coming of Christ closes up this important period—the Sixth Seal.

Various have been the opinions as to what or who the 144,000 were. Some, and I think many of the Adventists at the present time, suppose them to be those that came up out of their graves, near to the crucifixion of Christ; if so, the Sixth Seal was opened as far back as that. But all will see that that could not be; for the six seals are opened within this dispensation; and the Sixth is the last, to close up time to the coming of Christ; and as the 144,000 are sealed within this period of the Sixth Seal, it is something to be done, if it is not done; and all must plead ignorance of the fact.

What this peculiar work is, the sealing of 144,000 individuals in their foreheads, I am not able to explain at present. The subjects are from all the twelve tribes of Israel; each tribe is distinctly named; so it is plain that no Gentile is included in the number. They are highly honored; they follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, and are seen standing on the sea of glass. I suppose God is wise in choosing such a company of Jews, and he well knows the reasons why he does it. I am willing that glory and honor should come to the Jews first, and then to the Gentile; for so God has seen fit to place it. This sealing is yet to be done. Where are the sharers in this good blessing?

I wonder that Bro. Miller should have overlooked the fact, that the sealed were from the twelve tribes of Israel, and the sealing took place within the period of the Sixth Seal; and that we cannot go back but a little from the dark Day to date the opening of this seal. I can hardly think that this sealing was to be a secret work, that none should know what it is. It might be supposed that something would distinctly mark the time when this should take place. So far there has nothing transpired to prove that it has taken place, but is yet to be looked for. H. L. BRADLEY.

The Peace.

"When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh."—1 Thess. 5: 3.

These subjects of God's destroying judgments are the persecuting, Romish powers.—2 Thess. 1: 6, 9: 2: 8; Rev. 18 and 17.—The war of "the great day of God Almighty" will be an extraordinary, miraculous, judgment war.—It is to be introduced by the seventh trumpet. "The seventh trumpet" sounds—the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's. Then the nations will oppose—"be angry"—and the destroyers of earth will be themselves destroyed.

The apostasy will then have been matured, and the crisis must come. When all the preparations for birth shall have transpired, the "travail" must come. But all who are about to be exposed,—the mother of harlots and all her paramours,—cry "peace and safety;" as long as they can maintain appearances; and so "when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them as travail on a woman with child; and they shall not escape."

The seventh—the resurrection trump—opens the scene; and up to that time they who are most interested in keeping up appearances in the Roman earth will cover up their sins, put off the evil day, and try to "make God a liar!" But "God will fulfill all his pleasure" on them.

The world's peace can not be broken "before the time;" as it would have been by a prosecution of the late war. God is faithful. But as the peace is mere patch-work, and not permanent, we may look up for "redemption" ere the great war transpires. J. B. C.

For the Crisis.

The Cross.—Gal. 6: 14.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—[illegible] reflect often on the entire end of self in the [illegible] to which it reduces us. How little do we know practically of this. We will look at this amazing quality of love in Jesus, and learn how very little our souls have realized of its power in that setting ourselves aside.

We see in him one who had all human righteousness, and one too, in whom "dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily,"—yet what path did he take?—what was the cross to him?—to what did it reduce Him? The entire setting aside of all this human righteousness,—of all this divine power!—The perfect strength of his love was proved, not only in that he "did not please himself," though "in the form of God," and thinking "it not robbery to be equal with God,"—that he emptied himself, and "being found in fashion as a man,"—humbled himself to take the place of our disobedience; but, in this place of love, he was content to be utterly rejected!—to be reduced to nothing, that love might shine forth superior to all else!

The flesh in us is subtle,—very subtle; if we manifest love, we expect that it will be felt; but if otherwise,—if when we have rendered a kindness, we meet with no return—not even a kind word, or look, our hearts grow faint and cold in the exercise of love. Do we know what it is, when our hearts have gone forth in love, to meet with that which we read of in Corinthians,—"Though the more I love you the less I be loved,"—to find that the only consequence of humiliation, is to become thereby less respected, more humbled still?

Thus it was with Jesus,—full of patience and tenderness, he exposed himself to the power and malice of Satan. But what did he find in us, when doing this work of love? Man took occasion, by his very lowliness, to treat him with the utmost scorn. He was "the reproach of men, the despised of the people," they kept him in on every side, "Dogs have compassed me about; the assembly of the wicked have enclosed me; they pierced my hands and my feet.—Many bulls have compassed me about, fat bulls of Bashan have beset me round, they gaped upon me with their mouth as a ravening and a roaring lion." He looked for comforters, but found none. One of those with whom he had "taken sweet counsel," lifted up his heel against him, and even that disciple who had been most forward to declare, "though all men should forsake thee, yet will not I"—three times denied him with oaths and curses.

He obtained no sympathy in his grief,—no comfort from his most intimate friends. In this respect he was alone on the earth, as regards man;—but we are thereby led the more fully to the deep meaning of,—"be not THOU far from me, O my God!" Despised and rejected by those he came to save, he looked to his Father. Who can fathom the agony of his righteous soul, when he uttered this mournful complaint, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!"

No answer came—darkness, hatred, and persecution oppressed him around,—but that which was worse than the wickedness of a guilty world was, that "God had hid his face from him." "I sink in deep mire where there is no standing; I come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me;"—waves and billows went over him;—all was lost in the waves but that evidence of Divinity, the power of love, to endure all, to hope all,—that he might pour out his soul unto death for us.

He was truly emptied of all else but love! The fulness of God dwelt there,—for God is love, and here we see the triumph of Him that was mighty to save in abounding love!

Dear brethren and sisters, have we felt the power of this love of Jesus;—has it warmed our hearts to forsake all for him, that we may find our all in him? Can we, do we, in this evil world forsake all? Does nothing of self remain to dim our eyes to the glory of the cross! His tender compassion could not fail to draw all hearts to him when they saw the dead raised and the sick made whole—the multitude fed, and waves stilled!—but in the cross—there was no evidence of power;—it was vile in the eyes of the multitude,—there was nothing but degradation and weakness!

Trial from man, temptation from Satan, desertion from God,—there was nothing left him but the depth and fulness of love, the [illegible] of that love which will be our happy, blessed portion forever.

The natural heart in every one of us hates the power of the cross. We desire something for the eye to rest upon—something in which we can sympathise after the flesh. We seek honor, rest, power!—there [illegible] weakness—and the cross stains all our [illegible] lays low all human glory,—[illegible] that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to me, and I [illegible] world.

Let us try ourselves, beloved friends, by this test,—are we emptied of self as Jesus [illegible] with his love, [illegible] the power of faith [illegible] than conquerors? [illegible] it blasts all our [illegible] hopes of worldly [illegible] it leaves no room for self,—no glo[illegible] of, or of resting in health, honor, talents, learning, character, or affections. Can we bear to be thus emptied, that we may be filled with the spirit and power of God? If we would be united to Christ, it must be so. May we be strengthened by his spirit in the inner man, to forsake all that nourishes pride and ease, and the fleeting hopes of the flesh—that Christ may be precious to our souls and that our enjoyment of Him may increase with the crucifying of every principle of self.

Yours in the hope of the gospel of the grace of God in Christ,

Rose Campbell.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 21, 1859.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

The gathering at Camp-Hill in Wilbraham has been one of deep interest to all attendants, and we are sure its happy results will not end with the meeting. Many a lonely pilgrim will be cheered while mediating upon that blessed meeting, and the heavenly seasons there enjoyed. We think those who find fault with campmeetings on account of iniquitous disorder from wicked rowdies, would have found no cause of complaint during the entire encampment, had they been present and watched every movement with closest inspection. The law of kindness, there exhibited, was proved to be more powerful than a host of sheriffs and policemen. Many have become satisfied that "kind words return kind echoes," and they are delighted with their sound. Our hearts often drank down sweet delight while beholding the triumphant exhibitions of christian love, so frequently manifested during our stay in that lovely camp of the saints. It caused us often to look, by an eye of faith, over to the promised land, while imagination lent its aid to view the vast company of the redeemed upon the mountain of glory, having Jesus in their midst, with no fear of parting.

We arrived on the campground Monday forenoon. We met Bro. and Sr. D. T. Taylor, with whom we had a pleasant interview. His health is gradually improving, but he is not yet able to engage in the work of the Lord with all the energy of former years. He longs for the day to return when he can again give full vent to the burning emotions that he has been obliged to smother, for want of strength to utter them. Brn. and Srs., remember him in your prayers. He often expresses his gratitude for the prayers already offered in his behalf, for he feels assured that they have been heard and answered.

The bare sight of this consecrated spot brought up memories and joys of the past, when pilgrims here have met, prayed and praised, which caused a shout of "glory" to tremble on our lips, for the privilege of visiting this delightful grove once more, for the purpose of worshiping another week with the lovely children of the great King. We found several tents erected, and others were soon spread to shelter "the gathered and the gathering," while Brn. Munger and Ladd were actively engaged in making preparations to entertain them. We soon had our tent up, and in the evening enjoyed an excellent prayer meeting under its shelter.

Tuesday, Aug. 30th. Large additions were made to our numbers to-day, and many happy greetings have been enjoyed. All seem delighted with the scenery around, and buoyant with the blessed hope of soon meeting where the parting scene never comes. At 10 1-2 o'clock, we had a profitable meeting in the Boston tent, and at 2 P. M. we gathered at the preachers' stand and heard a very interesting discourse from Bro. O. R. Fassett, of Westboro, Mass., on the better resurrection. It was clearly shown that the better resurrection is not at conversion; is not a resurrection of the spirit at death, as Spiritualists claim; but of the whole man at the literal coming of Christ, when his children come forth from the grave, and put on incorruption and immortality, and obtain the everlasting kingdom. We could not help thinking how much plainer and more consistent is the Bible theology than the popular fables of these last days, which are substituted for the truth of the Lord, making death the gate to endless bliss; teaching that a dead man knows more than a living one.

In the evening, Bro. C. B. Turner preached on the importance of serving the Lord from principle instead of feeling. We hope this subject will receive more attention, and that men will serve the Lord because it is right to do so; then we shall not see such a host of backsliders as at the present time. Those who make feeling instead of obedience the standard of their piety, usually run, or yield, at the first conflict with the enemy.

Wednesday, Aug. 31st. The happy family has been greatly enlarged to-day. Here are pilgrims from New York, Michigan, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Canada East and West, and all the New England states, rejoicing together in christian love and communion. Truly, this is a heavenly place in Christ Jesus. At 10 o'clock, A. M., Bro. A. Rock, of Lowell, Mass., preached a soul-stirring discourse on the narrow way to life, and the importance of constant communion with God, pointing out the way to secure it. His remarks were heard with deep interest and profit. Bro. H. L. Hastings, Jonathan Wilson, J. B. Cook, F. H. Berick, and E. Burnham, followed with appropriate remarks, and yet all occupied only about an hour. We could not help noticing how much more effective was this short and pointed sermon, than the long hour-to-hour-and-half ones, to which we are sometimes obliged to listen. We say obliged, for we never do it with pleasure. When will our preachers have some mercy on their hearers and themselves? Do not stuff us till we are completely exhausted and surfeited, but give us plain, wholesome food, in moderate quantities, then we shall have good appetites, and grow healthy on "the sincere milk of the word."

At 2 o'clock, Bro. W. S. Campbell, of New Britain, Ct., explained Phil. 1: 23. showing that when Paul spoke of departing and being with Christ, he had no idea of going to him at death; if so, his own teachings were contradictory. It was clearly shown that Paul had no hope of seeing Christ till he comes again and raises the dead, at which time the apostle will live and be with his Savior. In the evening Bro. A. Fox, Cold Spring, Mass., preached on "Christ and him crucified."

Thursday, Sept. 1st. Our prayer meetings are heavenly, and exceedingly cheering to the lovers of Jesus. All nature smiles upon us, and conspires to make this one of the most lovely places on earth. The air is pure, soft and balmy, and the temperature delightful. The tall trees cast a pleasing shade upon the happy throng assembled here to worship the God of our fathers.

At 10 o'clock, A. M., Bro. J. S. White, East Boston, Mass., preached a very able discourse on the first and second Adam, showing that the whole man, except the breath of life, was made of the dust of the ground, and in the physical image of his Creator; that no part of the man is alive and conscious between death and the resurrection; that the whole man will rise again in the resurrection at the last day, and possess the new earth in common with his Savior—the second Adam. The people who had not heard before were astonished at the doctrine; perhaps as much at the plainness, as the novelty of our views of Scripture. Many members of different churches rejoiced to see the Bible opened so clearly to their understandings. They had groped their way in the labyrinths of fables till they were completely discouraged in their efforts to understand the Bible; but now the light burst upon their minds in almost dazzling splendor, causing their hearts to leap for joy. Now, they can see a consistency and harmony in the word of the Lord never seen before; and yet it is so plain, they wonder they have stumbled over it so long.

In the afternoon Bro. F. H. Berick, Salem, Mass., preached on the importance of true gospel liberty, or freedom in Christ, showing the difference between christian liberty and christian anarchy; or in other words, that the disciples of Christ should be subject one to another in love, for the truth's sake, as our Savior directs. This discourse was timely, and produced happy results. Bro. Burnham followed with stirring remarks.

At 6 o'clock, Bro. J. B. Cook, Rochester, N. Y., entertained the people by lecturing from Bro. Stephenson's great chronological chart, showing that the prophetical periods run out within seven years. This chart is some forty feet in length, and is superior, probably, to any before executed. In the evening, Bro. J. Hemmenway, Worcester, Mass., preached a heart-searching sermon, showing the similarity between many at the present day, and the Pharisees in the time of our Savior.

Friday, Sept 2nd. We had a very interesting social meeting at the stand this morning. Several requested prayers, and a large number testified in favor of the joys of the christian religion. At 10 o'clock, Bro. Walter Pratt, from Illinois, preached on the coming of Christ, showing that the Scriptures cannot be fulfilled, unless he comes again personally to this earth and sets up his kingdom. It was also shown that we can have no future existence if Christ does not come and raise the dead. Our Bro. comforted the saints with evidences that our dear Savior will soon come and gather the faithful.

At one o'clock, the people gathered again at the stand to hear interesting remarks from a converted Jew.

In the afternoon, Bro. H. L Hastings, Providence, R. I., preached an able and interesting discourse, showing the value of knowledge we receive from our Creator. It was well calculated to lead us to prize the word of the Lord, and make puny man feel his weakness and dependence on our Creator for every good and perfect gift. It was one of those sermons that we can carry home and review, and from which we may reap benefit for a whole lifetime.

In the evening, Bro. Moses Chandler, Cordova, Ill., preached a solid discourse on our great High Priest, and his second coming, showing that he is about to come out of the Holy of Holies and bless the waiting ones, that have been so long looking for his return.

Saturday, Sept. 3d. At 8 1-2 o'clock, we had interesting class meetings in several tents. At the hour of preaching, Bro. R. V. Lyon, No. Augusta, C. W., spoke on the importance of choosing Christ as our portion; and was followed by Bro. L. S. Loddington, New Britain, Ct., who made excellent remarks on the nature, office, and character of Christ. In the afternoon, we had another interesting discourse from Bro. S. G. Mathewson, Bakerville, Ct., on man as he was, is, and will be. The truth took effect. In the evening, Bro. J. Lee, Southampton, Long Island, N. Y., preached on the kingdom of God, showing that this earth, made new, will be the saints' inheritance, and then will be fulfilled the saying,—"As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Bro. Lee is one of the Shinnecock tribe of Indians, that we visited last June. Others from the same tribe were present to enjoy the meeting with us. The singing at the commencement of the exercises was overwhelmingly glorious, and caused a general shout in the camp. The popular singing in fashionable churches would have been a tame affair by the side of this.

First day, Sept. 4th. This last day of the feast may be truly said to be "an high day." We commenced our meetings with a love feast at the stand, at half-past 8 o'clock, and in one hour one hundred and eighty-nine spoke of Jesus' love then burning in their hearts, and nine of these spoke twice, making one hundred and ninety-eight testimonies in one hour, besides singing sixteen times. It was the best love feast we ever had. We never heard before testimonies so laconic, comprehensive and cheering as at this heavenly feast. It was almost a second pentecost. One could well afford to go hundreds of miles to enjoy a scene like this. Glory to God for such heavenly communion with saints on earth; but, oh, what will it be, when we are all settled in paradise, and the whole earth is full of glory? Dear reader, we must be there.

At the hour of preaching, we listened to a very interesting exposition of the seventeenth chapter of Revelation, from Bro. J. Couch, Warner, N. H., in which it was shown very clearly that we are near the last link in the great prophetic chain which spans the history of this world while under the dominion of Satan, and that the time has fully come to wait and watch for the King of kings to return and overthrow the kingdoms of this world, and commence his everlasting reign. A very large congregation listened with deep attention, and the children of the Lord were much comforted with the bright evidences that we are almost home to the promised land of rest and glory.

At one o'clock, Sr. M. S. Mansfield, of Buchanan, Mich., addressed the vast crowd in a very interesting discourse, founded on 1 Cor. 14: 34–35, showing in a clear manner that neither Paul, the law, nor the gospel, forbid woman from taking an active part in spreading a knowledge of the way of life in social meetings, or more public assemblies; and that all efforts to put such a construction upon this Scripture were unsustained by the Bible and the practice of the primitive church of Christ.

At one o'clock, preaching by the Editor on the subject of future punishment. At the close of the sermon, six promising young men were ordained for the ministry. It was a solemn and interesting scene. We hope our brethren will stand by them and see that they are well sustained wherever they may labor. They need your kindest sympathies. Hold up their hands. The following are their names:—Frank Burr, Bakerville, Ct.; Franklin Douglass, Albany, N. Y.; James A. Libby, Poland, Me.; Chauncy W. Baker, Wm. A. Fenn, and Marshall R. Phetteplace. We did not learn the address of the last three.

After the ordination, at the close of a beautiful day, we repaired to a delightful place on the banks of the Chicopee river, for the purpose of showing, by baptism, our faith in the burial and resurrection of Christ. Prayer and praise echoed sweetly among the hills around, while four happy souls were buried beneath the flowing stream, and rose again with brilliant hope, and hearts bounding with joy, peace and love, resulting from cheerful obedience to a dear Savior's commands.

At 7 1-2 o'clock, we gathered once more, and enjoyed a season of heavenly communion as we sat around the table of the Lord, to commemorate the death and sufferings of the Son of God, our Savior. Although a goodly number had left the ground, there were over three hundred who were present to show their love for Jesus, and sympathy with the sorrow he endured for us in the garden and on the cross. It was a scene to be long remembered. Tears of joy mingled with sorrow wet many a cheek, as we thought of our absent Savior, whose love for us caused him to die a shameful death, that we might obtain a glorious life, and be his associates in the coming paradise-home. We sung a hymn, and thus closed our great feast of tabernacles. 'Twas hard to say farewell, and return again to meet the frowns of a cold world, but we parted more firmly resolved, by the help of the Lord, to meet again at the marriage supper of the Lord.

"[illegible] ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Preachers' Aid Society.

During our campmeeting at Wilbraham, considerable interest was awakened in behalf of poor preachers and congregations, and several said, "If you will appoint responsible men to receive and disburse funds, we should like to put money in their care for this purpose." Accordingly, a meeting of the preachers was called to consider the subject, when the following articles were prepared, and afterwards presented to the entire encampment, for their adoption, when they were accepted with the most hearty approval.

This association is to be known as the "Preachers' Aid Society."

Art. 1st. The officers of this society, who are to be chosen annually, shall consist of a President, Secretary, Treasurer, and three Trustees, who together shall constitute a Board of managers.

Art. 2d. The object of this Society is to raise funds to aid those of our preaching brethren who do not receive a sufficient compensation to sustain them while preaching the gospel of the kingdom.

Art. 3d. The duty of the Board shall be to receive and disburse the funds appropriated for the foregoing object.

Art. 4th. An agent, or agents, may be appointed annually in each State, subject to the supervision of the Board, whose duty shall be to collect and disburse funds in their respective States, for the aforesaid object, according to their best ability, forwarding the surplus to the treasurer of the Board, with an annual report of their doings.

The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year:

Edwin Burnham, Newburyport, Mass., President.

Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass., Secretary and Treasurer.

H. V. Davis, New Bedford, Mass., R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., Trustees.

The following were chosen as agents:

S. G. Mathewson, Bakerville, Ct; J. Couch, Warner, N. H.; H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.; Matthew Batchelor, Rutland, Vt.; J. S. White, East Boston, Mass; R. R. York, Yarmouth, and Israel Damman, Dexter, Me.; Rufus Wendell, Albany, J. Parry, Sandy Hill, and P. A. Smith, Rochester, N. York.; Jonas Wendell, Edenboro, Pa.; P. B. Morgan, Union Mills, Ind.; Moses Chandler, Cordova, Ill.; Wm. Sheldon, Castle Rock, Min.; Peter Deyo, Strawberry Point, Iowa; J. Porter, Danville, C. E.; R. V. Lyon, No. Augusta, C. W.; J. B. Fitch, Wolfville, N. S.; D. R. and M. S. Mansfield. Buchanan, Mich.

The following preachers gave their names as members of the association to assist in carrying out the aforesaid object. It is hoped others will forward their names to be added to the list. Jonathan Wilson, E. Burnham, S. G. Mathewson, J. Couch, J. Blain, M. Grant, W. Pratt, S. W. Bishop, C. B. Turner, D. T. Taylor, P. Noka, W. S. Campbell, C. H. Perkins, M. Chandler, J. A. Libbey, F. H. Berick, C. Goodrich, J. B. Fitch, A. Fox, S. Cook, Dr. T. Huntington, D. R. and M. S. Mansfield, H. F. Carpenter, Dr. L. S. Ludington, H. Munger, H. L. Hastings, R. E. Ladd, Wm. Sutherland, R. V. Lyon, J. L. Knapp, J. S. White, F. Burr, C. H. Sutton, W. A. Fenn, I. Morgan, E. Bellows, Dr. A. M. Higgins, J. Lee, O. Loomise.

Any that are willing to sacrifice for this noble object, can forward their donations or pledges to the Treasurer, Geo. T, Adams, Boston, or either of the agents. Let us take hold of this work in earnest. The Macedonian cry is heard in all directions, and let us give assurance to those who have been obliged to go into secular employment to support their needy families, that they shall be sustained in the work of the ministry, if they will leave all to sound the glad tidings of the coming kingdom. Why not sustain missionary labor in our own land as well as in foreign countries? There are many who have a gift to make money, that cannot preach; let such give of their substance to help the poor preacher, who must leave his family almost, if not quite, at the door of charity or poverty, while he goes forth to meet a cold world and proud, scoffing professors, to sound the solemn, judgment alarm. Let us cheerfully bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ. This was the practice of the primitive church in the days of the apostles. Let us love our neighbors as ourselves.

For the Crisis.

Financial Report.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I hand you herewith a financial statement of the receipts and expenditures connected with the ground at our last campmeeting at Wilbraham, Sept., 1859.

DEBIT.

Amount due R. E. Ladd, advanced to pay for permanent fixtures last year	$64.74
Amount for preparing the ground, viz., labor, team work, material and water this year	$70.06
	$134.79

CREDIT.

Amount received in four public collections	$131.30
Balance paid by committee	$3.49

It was not generally known that there was a debt left on the committee last year of $64.74, which they expected would be paid by those who subscribed to pay for permanent improvements, amounting to $[illegible], [illegible] of which has ever been received by the committee. This made our expenses heavier this year by so much as had been previously advanced. It is now all paid up, and when we begin another meeting (should it please the Lord that we ever do) we shall be free from debt.

In the next Crisis I will give a true and faithful statement of the receipts and expenses connected with the boarding, that our dear brethren and sisters may know just how profitable it is to take care of campmeeting boarders. I pledged myself to some brethren to give my proportion of the profits to the Preachers' Aid Association, of which I am an officer. The brethren may prepare for an amount from this source that will astonish them, and especially those who are expecting to derive benefit from that fund.

It was a good and profitable campmeeting, and I praise the Lord that I was permitted to attend it. My faith has been greatly strengthened, and the privilege of greeting so many dear christian friends and exchanging salutations with them will not soon be forgotten. May the Lord arm us all with that mind which was in Christ, that his pleasure may prosper in our hands.

Your brother in hope,

Randl. E. Ladd.

Our Tract Column.

The Tract Fund for the West.

Cares, labors, and the safe advent of another "blessed baby" have delayed my writing on this subject. So I resume the pen once more.

July 18th. I resume my record here. Received of Sr. H. her pledge of $5. 23d.—Received 50 cents from Bro. D. T. T. for the Tract fund—he wishes it was $50. Pretty well for a sick preacher, but you just keep quiet, Bro. T.; we can judge from this that your heart is just an hundred times as big and as full as your pocket is.

Here is a letter from Bro. C. with $1. He says, "Here is a chance for us all to preach the truth by a little of our money. Let us all have a share in this good work. Yours for the truth as it is in Christ." Sr. A. says, "I send you $1 for the Tract fund. . . . May the Lord bless your labors abundantly."

Another letter from my "Pilgrim Brother" with another dollar in it—his second instalment for the tracts. 26th. A letter with $2.—"I have read your appeals through the Crisis for aid in the Tract cause with great interest, and I would gladly do something to assist, but while my heart is ready to respond to the call, necessity compels me to remain silent. I can only enclose a very small sum, and my earnest wishes that you may be successful in your efforts to spread the truth, and that the soon coming Jesus may find many trophies of redeeming love gathered in through this instrumentality." Who my sister or my pilgrim brother are, the Lord knows, but I do not. May he bless them!

28th. Here is a letter from "A Sister in Christ," in L——, with $2 "to help keep the little wheels rolling." That will oil them up nicely, I think. Another from A—— says, "Enclosed you will find $2 to help along the good cause you are engaged in; . . . may it bring forth fruit an hundred fold. I am poor, but I give this willingly to the Lord; and the desire of my heart is that the word of God may have free course, and be glorified in the conversion of sinners. Your sister in Christ." Another letter from Bro. Grant, with $1 from W. A. F. and $4 from "a Sr in B."

29th. I find a letter which came by express from Bro. "W. A. S. S." of Worcester, Mass., on this wise:—"Bro. Hastings, I send you $50 for the Tract Fund, in behalf of the Thomas St. Church. May the Lord bless and prosper you and yours in the good work, and bless the truth to the saving of many souls. Yours for the truth." Another letter from Sr. L. J. B. of New Britain, Ct., who thus talks;—"The church in this place have been pleased to add to your Tract Fund the sum of $25, which you will find enclosed. I wish we could have sent more, but you know our numbers and circumstances. I like very much the idea of the churches taking this matter in hand, as it gives all an opportunity of doing something, if it is but little. What has been given has been given heartily, be assured. Those whom you "buried" little more than a year ago, have been the first to move in the work. We have done what we could, and I believe every member of the family has done something. The children, and even my faithful colored woman, contributed their quarters. Bro. H., you know not how interested I have felt since I first read your proposal in the Crisis, and I have shed many tears as I have read the calls for help, and then the thought that ofttimes those whose hearts are largest have such empty purses, and those who have an abundance have no interest. O how much is spent in the church for dress and other things that should be given to the Lord. I know self generally must be well supplied first, and if any thing is left, why, then perhaps a little can be given and not feel it. I sometimes wish such persons would read the account of David's offering unto the Lord. When Araunah freely offered to give him oxen and wood for the sacrifice, he said, 'Nay, but I will surely buy them of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt offerings unto the Lord of that which doth cost me nothing.' I did not intend to say half so much, but I have felt a great deal more; yet I suppose, after all, my sympathy will amount to about as much as a 'be ye warmed and filled,' and no more. But I do pray the Lord to bless you abundantly in all your labors, and give you to see much fruit as the result of them."

Well done for New Britain, where there have been fightings without and fears within this long time. Perhaps if some other churches knew how few and poor they were, it would provoke them a little to good works. Do not be alarmed, sister, because you haven't much besides sympathy to give. Keep praying. Remember God counts the amount given by what is left in the pocket. The widow cast in more than all the rest. Pour your prayers in with your money, and God will give the increase.

Here comes another letter, with a gold dollar pasted on the inside. I know the handwriting; it is the third instalment for the Tract Fund from my "Pilgrim Brother." He writes:—"I herewith enclose another third mite as the Lord hath prospered me." That's the way—lay by in store as the Lord prospers us. Here comes a letter from "E. E. S." of D——, with $—. Thank you! Sr. P. sends $3 "for the distribution of tracts in the West. May blessings attend the effort made. It is what I have long wished might be done. The mite is small, but may it be accepted."

Sr. C. from Ohio, sends $2, with directions where to send the tracts; this is right; a good way to do work. I have sent some as ordered, such as I had. She writes several letters. I extract: "It grieves me that I cannot now minister in temporal things to you who have ministered to my spiritual wants. I do want a religion that is pocket deep. You say it is difficult to support a paper unless it is pledged to some party or sect,—is there not the same difficulty respecting the support of an independent minister?" Yes, sister, there is, yet this is, after all, only man's view of the question. God and his angels think it very easy to take care of a faithful child. They took care of Elijah, you know. Let us trust him.

Again: "I truly rejoice to read your proposition in regard to the West. I have lived there and know your views are correct. Yes, God has true children there, those who rejoice that they are accounted worthy to suffer reproach for Christ's sake. . . . . It cheers my heart to hear of others being benefited by my efforts. I know it does yours also. I send you an extract from a letter sent me last week. I was visiting some relatives some thirty miles from here, candid, pious, and prayerful Baptists, to whom I must say I presented the truth with timidity and doubt, and much fearfulness, because of reproach, that now, as in the days of Christ, attended the word; yet we have reason to thank God for the result. I sent them some of your books. They write: 'How fervently should we thank God for putting it into your heart to send those books. It will be almost impossible for you to realize the amount of good done by their perusal. They seemed to be the thing needed. They have been read and anxiously inquired for by the careless professor, and the impenitent sinner. They are at present some three miles from here, enlightening, I humbly trust, the heart of a sincere inquirer after truth. O that God would incline the heart of every professed christian to read more carefully! If such a course was pursued, much of the mystery which seems to enshroud the revealed word of God would be done away, and much might be done towards bringing about a more charitable state of feeling among all denominations.'" Sr. B. wishes some other tracts sent, but forgets to give the name of the persons in this letter. Send it and they shall be forwarded. Such letters are truly encouraging to my heart.

Aug. 4th. Bro. S. called at my house and left $20 from the D——o church, for the Tract Fund. Well done, seeing they are nearly all young, and one of their number had previously sent more than as much more.

August 5th. Bro. C. L., in behalf of the Bro., sends $4 for tracts, and $6 on the Tract Fund. Thank you, Bro. L. I don't doubt that this $6 will do more good in tracts than any $600 you ever lost in any speculation in your life! I mean to come and see you all by and by. Here are $2 from H. F. H., and M. C., by Bro. Grant for the Tract Fund.

Aug. 6th. Bro. H. sends $1 for the Tract Fund, and also sends for tracts to scatter in his own locality. He writes: "I send you $1 for the West; it is all I have at present. I have bought a great many tracts since you sent me those. I have spread them far and near. One woman belonging to the Methodist church says she has got more light and knowledge out of a few tracts and books that I let her have, than from all the preaching she ever heard, and when she said so I could not help saying glory to God in the Highest. Some like them—some spatter about them, but thank God, it causes them to

For the Crisis.

The Cross.—Gal. 6: 14.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Let us reflect often on the entire end of self in the Cross of Christ, the nothingness to which it reduces us. How little do we know practically of this. We will look at this amazing quality of love in Jesus, and learn how very little our souls have realized of its power in thus setting ourselves aside.

"We see in him one who had all human righteousness; and one too, in whom "dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily,"—yet what path did he take?—what was the cross to him?—to what did it reduce Him? The entire setting aside of all this human righteousness,—of all this divine power!—The perfect strength of his love was proved, not only in that he "did not please himself," though "in the form of God," and thinking "it not robbery to be equal with God,"—that he emptied himself, and "being found in fashion as a man,"—humbled himself to take the place of our disobedience; but, in this place of love, he was content to be utterly rejected!—to be reduced to nothing, that love might shine forth superior to all else!

The flesh in us is subtle,—very subtle; if we manifest love, we expect that it will be felt; but if otherwise,—if when we have rendered a kindness, we meet with no return—not even a kind word, or look, our hearts grow faint and cold in the exercise of love. Do we know what it is, when our hearts have gone forth in love, to meet with that which we read of in Corinthians,—"Though the more I love you the less I be loved,"—to find that the only consequence of humiliation, is to become thereby less respected, more humbled still?

Thus it was with Jesus,—full of patience and tenderness, he exposed himself to the power and malice of Satan. But what did he find in us, when doing this work of love? Man took occasion, by his very lowliness, to treat him with the utmost scorn. He was "the reproach of men, the despised of the people," they kept him in on every side, "Dogs have compassed me about; the assembly of the wicked have enclosed me; they pierced my hands and my feet.—Many bulls have compassed me about, fat bulls of Bashan have beset me round, they gaped upon me with their mouth as a ravening and a roaring lion." He looked for comforters, but found none. One of those with whom he had "taken sweet counsel," lifted up his heel against him, and even that disciple who had been most forward to declare, "though all men should forsake thee, yet will not I"—three times denied him with oaths and curses.

He obtained no sympathy in his grief,—no comfort from his most intimate friends. In this respect he was alone on the earth, as regards man;—but we are thereby led the more fully to the deep meaning of,—"be not THOU far from me, O my God!" Despised and rejected by those he came to save, he looked to his Father. Who can fathom the agony of his righteous soul, when he uttered this mournful complaint, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!"

No answer came—darkness, hatred, and persecution oppressed him around,—but that which was worse than the wickedness of a guilty world was, that "God had hid his face from him." "I sink in deep mire where there is no standing; I come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me;"—waves and billows went over him;—all was lost in the waves but that evidence of Divinity, the power of love, to endure all, to hope all,—that he might pour out his soul unto death for us.

He was truly emptied of all else but love! The fulness of God dwelt there,—for God is love, and here we see the triumph of Him that was mighty to save in abounding love!

Dear brethren and sisters, have we felt the power of this love of Jesus;—has it warmed our hearts to forsake all for him, that we may find our all in him? Can we, do we, in this evil world forsake all? Does nothing of self remain to dim our eyes to the glory of the cross! His tender compassion could not fail to draw all hearts to him when they saw the dead raised and the sick made whole—the multitude fed, and waves stilled!—but in the cross—there was no evidence of power;—it was vile in the eyes of the multitude,—there was nothing but degradation and weakness!

Trial from man, temptation from Satan, desertion from God,—there was nothing left him but the depth and fulness of love, the riches of that love which will be our happy, blessed portion forever.

The natural heart in every one of us hates the power of the cross. We desire something for the eye to rest upon—something in which we can sympathise after the flesh. We seek honor, rest, power!—there [illegible] weakness—and the cross stains all our pride,—lays low all human glory,—God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to me, and I [illegible]!

Let us try ourselves, beloved friends, by this test—are we emptied of self as Jesus [illegible] with his love, [illegible] the power of such [illegible] more than conquerors? [illegible] all our [illegible] of worldly [illegible] it leaves no room for self,—no glory, honor, talents, learning, [illegible] or affections. Can we hope to [illegible] tempted, that we may be filled with the spirit and power of God? If we would be united to Christ, it must so be. May we be strengthened by his spirit in the inner man, to forsake all that nourishes pride and ease, and the fleeting hopes of the flesh—that Christ may be precious to our souls and that our enjoyment of Him may increase with the crucifying of every principle of self.

Yours in the hope of the gospel of the grace of God in Christ,

Rose Campbell.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 21, 1859.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

The gathering at Camp-Hill in Wilbraham has been one of deep interest to all attendants, and we are sure its happy results will not end with the meeting. Many a lonely pilgrim will be cheered while meditating upon that blessed meeting, and the heavenly seasons there enjoyed. We think those who find fault with campmeetings on account of iniquitous disorder from wicked rowdies, would have found no cause of complaint during the entire encampment, had they been present and watched every movement with closest inspection. The law of kindness, there exhibited, was proved to be more powerful than a host of sheriffs and policemen. Many have become satisfied that "kind words return kind echoes," and they are delighted with their sound. Our hearts often drank down sweet delight while beholding the triumphant exhibitions of christian love, so frequently manifested during our stay in that lovely camp of the saints. It caused us often to look, by an eye of faith, over to the promised land, while imagination lent its aid to view the vast company of the redeemed upon the mountain of glory, having Jesus in their midst, with no fear of parting.

We arrived on the campground Monday forenoon. We met Bro. and Sr. D. T. Taylor, with whom we had a pleasant interview. His health is gradually improving, but he is not yet able to engage in the work of the Lord with all the energy of former years. He longs for the day to return when he can again give full vent to the burning emotions that he has been obliged to smother, for want of strength to utter them. Brn. and Srs., remember him in your prayers. He often expresses his gratitude for the prayers already offered in his behalf, for he feels assured that they have been heard and answered.

The bare sight of this consecrated spot brought up memories and joys of the past, when pilgrims here have met, prayed and praised, which caused a shout of "glory" to tremble on our lips, for the privilege of visiting this delightful grove once more, for the purpose of worshiping another week with the lovely children of the great King. We found several tents erected, and others were soon spread to shelter "the gathered and the gathering," while Brn. Munger and Ladd were actively engaged in making preparations to entertain them. We soon had our tent up, and in the evening enjoyed an excellent prayer meeting under its shelter.

Tuesday, Aug. 30th. Large additions were made to our numbers to-day, and many happy greetings have been enjoyed. All seem delighted with the scenery around, and buoyant with the blessed hope of soon meeting where the parting scene never comes. At 10 1-2 o'clock, we had a profitable meeting in the Boston tent, and at 2 P. M. we gathered at the preachers' stand and heard a very interesting discourse from Bro. O. R. Fassett, of Westboro, Mass., on the better resurrection. It was clearly shown that the better resurrection is not at conversion; is not a resurrection of the spirit at death, as Spiritualists claim; but of the whole man at the literal coming of Christ, when his children come forth from the grave, and put on incorruption and immortality, and obtain the everlasting kingdom. We could not help thinking how much plainer and more consistent is the Bible theology than the popular fables of these last days, which are substituted for the truth of the Lord, making death the gate to endless bliss; teaching that a dead man knows more than a living one.

In the evening, Bro. C. B. Turner preached on the importance of serving the Lord from principle instead of feeling. We hope this subject will receive more attention, and that men will serve the Lord because it is right to do so; then we shall not see such a host of backsliders as at the present time. Those who make feeling instead of obedience the standard of their piety, usually run, or yield, at the first conflict with the enemy.

Wednesday, Aug. 31st. The happy family has been greatly enlarged to-day. Here are pilgrims from New York, Michigan, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Canada East and West, and all the New England states, rejoicing together in christian love and communion. Truly, this is a heavenly place in Christ Jesus. At 10 o'clock, A. M., Bro. A. Ross, of Lowell, Mass., preached a soul-stirring discourse on the narrow way to life and the importance of constant communion with God, pointing out the way to secure it. His remarks were heard with deep interest and profit. Brn. H. L. Hastings, Jonathan Wilson, J. B. Cook, F. H. Berick, and E. Burnham, followed with appropriate remarks, and yet all occupied only about an hour. We could not help noticing how much more effective was this short and pointed sermon, than the long hour-to-hour-and-half ones, to which we are sometimes obliged to listen. We say obliged, for we never do it with pleasure. When will our preachers have some mercy on their hearers and themselves? Do not stuff us till we are completely exhausted and surfeited, but give us plain, wholesome food, in moderate quantities, then we shall have good appetites, and grow healthy on "the sincere milk of the word."

At 2 o'clock, Bro. W. S. Campbell, of New Britain, Ct., explained Phil. 1: 23. showing that when Paul spoke of departing and being with Christ, he had no idea of going to him at death; if so, his own teachings were contradictory. It was clearly shown that Paul had no hope of seeing Christ till he comes again and raises the dead, at which time the apostle will live and be with his Savior. In the evening Bro. A Fox, Cold Spring, Mass., preached on "Christ and him crucified."

Thursday, Sept. 1st. Our prayer meetings are heavenly, and exceedingly cheering to the lovers of Jesus. All nature smiles upon us, and conspires to make this one of the most lovely places on earth. The air is pure, soft and balmy, and the temperature delightful. The tall trees cast a pleasing shade upon the happy throng assembled here to worship the God of our fathers.

At 10 o'clock, A. M., Bro. J. S. White, East Boston, Mass., preached a very able discourse on the first and second Adam, showing that the whole man, except the breath of life, was made of the dust of the ground, and in the physical image of his Creator; that no part of the man is alive and conscious between death and the resurrection; that the whole man will rise again in the resurrection at the last day, and possess the new earth in common with his Savior—the second Adam. The people who had not heard before were astonished at the doctrine; perhaps as much at the plainness, as the novelty of our views of Scripture. Many members of different churches rejoiced to see the Bible opened so clearly to their understandings. They had groped their way in the labyrinths of fables till they were completely discouraged in their efforts to understand the Bible; but now the light burst upon their minds in almost dazzling splendor, causing their hearts to leap for joy. Now, they can see a consistency and harmony in the word of the Lord never seen before; and yet it is so plain, they wonder they have stumbled over it so long.

In the afternoon Bro. F. H. Berick, Salem, Mass., preached on the importance of true gospel liberty, or freedom in Christ, showing the difference between christian liberty and christian anarchy; or in other words, that the disciples of Christ should be subject one to another in love, for the truth's sake, as our Savior directs. This discourse was timely, and produced happy results. Bro. Burnham followed with stirring remarks.

At 6 o'clock, Bro. J. B. Cook, Rochester, N. Y., entertained the people by lecturing from Bro. Stephenson's great chronological chart, showing that the prophetical periods run out within seven years. This chart is some forty feet in length, and is superior, probably, to any before executed. In the evening, Bro. J. Hemmenway, Worcester, Mass., preached a heart-searching sermon, showing the similarity between many at the present day, and the Pharisees in the time of our Savior.

Friday, Sept 2nd. We had a very interesting social meeting at the stand this morning. Several requested prayers, and a large number testified in favor of the joys of the christian religion. At 10 o'clock, Bro. Walter Pratt, from Illinois, preached on the coming of Christ, showing that the Scriptures cannot be fulfilled, unless he comes again personally to this earth and sets up his kingdom. It was also shown that we can have no future existence if Christ does not come and raise the dead. Our Bro. comforted the saints with evidences that our dear Savior will soon come and gather the faithful.

At one o'clock, the people gathered again at the stand to hear interesting remarks from a converted Jew.

In the afternoon, Bro. H. L Hastings, Providence, R. I., preached an able and interesting discourse, showing the value of knowledge we receive from our Creator. It was well calculated to lead us to prize the word of the Lord, and make puny man feel his weakness and dependence on our Creator for every good and perfect gift. It was one of those sermons that we can carry home and review, and from which we may reap benefit for a whole lifetime.

In the evening, Bro. Moses Chandler, Cordova, Ill., preached a solid discourse on our great High Priest, and his second coming, showing that he is about to come out of the Holy of Holies, and bless the waiting ones, that have been so long looking for his return.

Saturday, Sept. 3d. At 8 1-2 o'clock, we had interesting class meetings in several tents. At the hour of preaching, Bro. R. V. Lyon, No. Augusta, C. W., spoke on the importance of choosing Christ as our portion; and was followed by Bro. L. S. Luddington, New Britain, Ct., who made excellent remarks on the nature, office, and character of Christ. In the afternoon, we had another interesting discourse from Bro. S. G. Mathewson, Bakerville, Ct., on man as he was, is, and will be. The truth took effect. In the evening, Bro. J. Lee, Southampton, Long Island, N. Y., preached on the kingdom of God, showing that this earth, made new, will be the saints' inheritance, and then will be fulfilled the saying,—"As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Bro. Lee is one of the Shinnecock tribe of Indians, that we visited last June. Others from the same tribe were present to enjoy the meeting with us. The singing at the commencement of the exercises was overwhelmingly glorious, and caused a general shout in the camp. The popular singing in fashionable churches would have been a tame affair by the side of this.

First day, Sept. 4th. This last day of the feast may be truly said to be "an high day." We commenced our meetings with a love feast at the stand, at half-past 8 o'clock, and in one hour one hundred and eighty-nine spoke of Jesus' love then burning in their hearts, and nine of these spoke twice, making one hundred and ninety-eight testimonies in one hour, besides singing sixteen times. It was the best love feast we ever had. We never heard before testimonies so laconic, comprehensive and cheering as at this heavenly feast. It was almost a second pentecost. One could well afford to go hundreds of miles to enjoy a scene like this. Glory to God for such heavenly communion with saints on earth; but, oh, what will it be, when we are all settled in paradise, and the whole earth is full of glory? Dear reader, we must be there.

At the hour of preaching, we listened to a very interesting exposition of the seventeenth chapter of Revelation, from Bro. J. Couch, Warner, N. H., in which it was shown very clearly that we are near the last link in the great prophetic chain which spans the history of this world while under the dominion of Satan, and that the time has fully come to wait and watch for the King of kings to return and overthrow the kingdoms of this world, and commence his everlasting reign. A very large congregation listened with deep attention, and the children of the Lord were much comforted with the bright evidences that we are almost home to the promised land of rest and glory.

At one o'clock, Sr. M. S. Mansfield, of Buchanan, Mich., addressed the vast crowd in a very interesting discourse, founded on 1 Cor. 14: 34–35, showing in a clear manner that neither Paul, the law, nor the gospel, forbid woman from taking an active part in spreading a knowledge of the way of life in social meetings, or more public assemblies; and that all efforts to put such a construction upon this Scripture were unsustained by the Bible and the practice of the primitive church of Christ.

At one o'clock, preaching by the Editor on the subject of future punishment. At the close of the sermon, six promising young men were ordained for the ministry. It was a solemn and interesting scene. We hope our brethren will stand by them and see that they are well sustained wherever they may labor. They need your kindest sympathies. Hold up their hands. The following are their names:—Frank Burr, Bakerville, Ct.; Franklin Douglass, Albany, N. Y.; James A. Libby, Poland, Me.; Chauncy W. Baker, Wm. A. Fenn, and Marshall R. Phetteplace. We did not learn the address of the last three.

After the ordination, at the close of a beautiful day, we repaired to a delightful place on the banks of the Chicopee river, for the purpose of showing, by baptism, our faith in the burial and resurrection of Christ. Prayer and praise echoed sweetly among the hills around, while four happy souls were buried beneath the flowing stream, and rose again with brilliant hope, and hearts bounding with joy, peace and love, resulting from cheerful obedience to a dear Savior's commands.

At 7 1-2 o'clock, we gathered once more, and enjoyed a season of heavenly communion as we sat around the table of the Lord, to commemorate the death and sufferings of the Son of God, our Savior. Although a goodly number had left the ground, there were over three hundred who were present to show their love for Jesus, and sympathy with the sorrow he endured for us in the garden and on the cross. It was a scene to be long remembered. Tears of joy mingled with sorrow wet many a cheek, as we thought of our absent Savior, whose love for us caused him to die a shameful death, that we might obtain a glorious life, and be his associates in the coming paradise-home. We sung a hymn, and thus closed our great feast of tabernacles. 'Twas hard to say farewell, and return again to meet the frowns of a cold world, but we parted more firmly resolved, by the help of the Lord, to meet again at the marriage supper of the Lord.

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Preachers' Aid Society.

During our campmeeting at Wilbraham, considerable interest was awakened in behalf of poor preachers and congregations, and several said, "If you will appoint responsible men to receive and disburse funds, we should like to put money in their care for this purpose." Accordingly, a meeting of the preachers was called to consider the subject, when the following articles were prepared, and afterwards presented to the entire encampment, for their adoption, when they were accepted with the most hearty approval.

This association is to be known as the "Preachers' Aid Society."

Art. 1st. The officers of this society, who are to be chosen annually, shall consist of a President, Secretary, Treasurer, and three Trustees, who together shall constitute a Board of managers.

Art. 2d. The object of this Society is to raise funds to aid those of our preaching brethren who do not receive a sufficient compensation to sustain them while preaching the gospel of the kingdom.

Art. 3d. The duty of the Board shall be to receive and disburse the funds appropriated for the foregoing object.

Art. 4th. An agent, or agents, may be appointed annually in each State, subject to the supervision of the Board, whose duty shall be to collect and disburse funds in their respective States, for the aforesaid object, according to their best ability, forwarding the surplus to the treasurer of the Board, with an annual report of their doings.

The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year:

Edwin Burnham, Newburyport, Mass., President.

Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass., Secretary and Treasurer.

H. V. Davis, New Bedford, Mass., R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., Trustees.

The following were chosen as agents:

S. G. Mathewson, Bakerville, Ct; J. Couch, Warner, N. H.; H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.; Matthew Batchelor, Rutland, Vt.; J. S. White, East Boston, Mass; R. R. York, Yarmouth, and Israel Damman, Dexter, Me.; Rufus Wendell, Albany, J. Parry, Sandy Hill, and P. A. Smith, Rochester, N. York.; Jonas Wendell, Edenboro, Pa.; P. B. Morgan, Union Mills, Ind.; Moses Chandler, Cordova, Ill.; Wm. Sheldon, Castle Rock, Min.; Peter Deyo, Strawberry Point, Iowa; J. Porter, Danville, C. E.; R. V. Lyon, No. Augusta, C. W.; J. B. Fitch, Wolfville, N. S.; D. R. and M. S. Mansfield, Buchanan, Mich.

The following preachers gave their names as members of the association to assist in carrying out the aforesaid object. It is hoped others will forward their names to be added to the list. Jonathan Wilson, E. Burnham, S. G. Mathewson, J. Couch, J. Blain, M. Grant, W. Pratt, S. W. Bishop, C. B. Turner, D. T. Taylor, P. Noka, W. S. Campbell, C. H. Perkins, M. Chandler, J. A. Libbey, F. H. Berick, C. Goodrich, J. B. Fitch, A. Fox, S. Cook, Dr. T. Huntington, D. R. and M. S. Mansfield, H. F. Carpenter, Dr. L. S. Ludington, H. Munger, H. L. Hastings, R. E. Ladd, Wm. Sutherland, R. V. Lyon, J. L. Knapp, J. S. White, F. Burr, C. H. Sutton, W. A. Fenn, I. Morgan, E. Bellows, Dr. A. M. Higgins, J. Lee, O. Loomise.

Any that are willing to sacrifice for this noble object, can forward their donations or pledges to the Treasurer, Geo. T. Adams, Boston, or either of the agents. Let us take hold of this work in earnest. The Macedonian cry is heard in all directions, and let us give assurance to those who have been obliged to go into secular employment to support their needy families, that they shall be sustained in the work of the ministry, if they will leave all to sound the glad tidings of the coming kingdom. Why not sustain missionary labor in our own land as well as in foreign countries? There are many who have a gift to make money, that cannot preach; let such give of their substance to help the poor preacher, who must leave his family almost, if not quite, at the door of charity or poverty, while he goes forth to meet a cold world and proud, scoffing professors, to sound the solemn, judgment alarm. Let us cheerfully bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ. This was the practice of the primitive church in the days of the apostles. Let us love our neighbors as ourselves.

For the Crisis.

Financial Report.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I hand you herewith a financial statement of the receipts and expenditures connected with the ground at our last campmeeting at Wilbraham, Sept., 1859.

DEBIT.
Amount due R. E. Ladd, advanced to pay for permanent fixtures last year	$64.74
Amount for preparing the ground, viz., labor, team work, material and water this year	$70.05
	$134.79
CREDIT.
Amount received in four public collections	$131.30
Balance paid by committee	$3.49

It was not generally known that there was a debt left on the committee last year of $64.74, which they expected would be paid by those who subscribed to pay for permanent improvements, amounting to $63, not a dollar of which has ever been received by the committee. This made the expenses heavier this year by so much as had been previously advanced. It is now all paid up, and when we begin another meeting (should it please the Lord that we ever do) we shall be free from debt.

In the next Crisis I will give a true and faithful statement of the receipts and expenses connected with the boarding, that our dear brethren and sisters may know just how profitable it is to take care of campmeeting boarders. I pledged myself to some brethren to give my proportion of the profits to the Preachers' Aid Association, of which I am an officer. The brethren may prepare for an amount from this source that will astonish them, and especially those who are expecting to derive benefit from that fund.

It was a good and profitable campmeeting, and I praise the Lord that I was permitted to attend it. My faith has been greatly strengthened, and the privilege of greeting so many dear christian friends and exchanging salutations with them will not soon be forgotten. May the Lord arm us all with that mind which was in Christ, that his pleasure may prosper in our hands.

Your brother in hope,

Randl. E. Ladd.

Our Tract Column.

The Tract Fund for the West.

Cares, labors, and the safe advent of another "blessed baby" have delayed my writing on this subject. So I resume the pen once more.

July 18th. I resume my record here. Received of Sr. H. her pledge of $5. 23d.—Received 50 cents from Bro. D. T. T. for the Tract fund—he wishes it was $50. Pretty well for a sick preacher, but you just keep quiet, Bro. T.; we can judge from this that your heart is just an hundred times as big and as full as your pocket is.

Here is a letter from Bro. C. with $1. He says, "Here is a chance for us all to preach the truth by a little of our money. Let us all have a share in this good work. Yours for the truth as it is in Christ." Sr. A. says, "I send you $1 for the Tract fund. . . . May the Lord bless your labors abundantly."

Another letter from my "Pilgrim Brother" with another dollar in it—his second instalment for the tracts. 26th. A letter with $2.—"I have read your appeals through the Crisis for aid in the Tract cause with great interest, and I would gladly do something to assist, but while my heart is ready to respond to the call, necessity compels me to remain silent. I can only enclose a very small sum, and my earnest wishes that you may be successful in your efforts to spread the truth, and that the soon coming Jesus may find many trophies of redeeming love gathered in through this instrumentality." Who my sister or my pilgrim brother are, the Lord knows, but I do not. May he bless them!

28th. Here is a letter from "A Sister in Christ," in L——, with $2 "to help keep the little wheels rolling." That will oil them up nicely, I think. Another from A—— says, "Enclosed you will find $2 to help along the good cause you are engaged in; . . . may it bring forth fruit an hundred fold. I am poor, but I give this willingly to the Lord; and the desire of my heart is that the word of God may have free course, and be glorified in the conversion of sinners. Your sister in Christ." Another letter from Bro. Grant, with $1 from W. A. F. and $4 from "a Sr in B."

29th. I find a letter which came by express from Bro. "W. A. S. S." of Worcester, Mass., on this wise:—"Bro. Hastings, I send you $50 for the Tract Fund, in behalf of the Thomas St. Church. May the Lord bless and prosper you and yours in the good work, and bless the truth to the saving of many souls. Yours for the truth." Another letter from Sr. L. J. B. of New Britain, Ct., who thus talks;—"The church in this place have been pleased to add to your Tract Fund the sum of $25, which you will find enclosed. I wish we could have sent more, but you know our numbers and circumstances. I like very much the idea of the churches taking this matter in hand, as it gives all an opportunity of doing something, if it is but little. What has been given has been given heartily, be assured. Those whom you "buried" little more than a year ago, have been the first to move in the work. We have done what we could, and I believe every member of the family has done something. The children, and even my faithful colored woman, contributed their quarters. Bro. H., you know not how interested I have felt since I first read your proposal in the Crisis, and I have shed many tears as I have read the calls for help, and then the thought that ofttimes those whose hearts are largest have such empty purses, and those who have an abundance have no interest. O how much is spent in the church for dress and other things that should be given to the Lord. I know self generally must be well supplied first, and if any thing is left, why, then perhaps a little can be given and not feel it. I sometimes wish such persons would read the account of David's sacrificing unto the Lord. When Araunah freely offered to give him oxen and wood for the sacrifice, he said, 'Nay, but I will surely buy them of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt offerings unto the Lord of that which doth cost me nothing.' I did not intend to say half so much, but I have felt a great deal more; yet I suppose, after all, my sympathy will amount to about as much as a 'be ye warmed and filled,' and no more. But I do pray the Lord to bless you abundantly in all your labors, and give you to see much fruit as the result of them."

Well done for New Britain, where there have been fightings without and fears within this long time. Perhaps if some other churches knew how few and poor they were, it would provoke them a little to good works. Do not be alarmed, sister, because you haven't much besides sympathy to give. Keep praying. Remember God counts the amount given by what is left in the pocket. The widow cast in more than all the rest. Pour your prayers in with your money, and God will give the increase.

Here comes another letter, with a gold dollar pasted on the inside. I know the handwriting; it is the third instalment for the Tract Fund from my "Pilgrim Brother." He writes:—"I herewith enclose another third mite as the Lord hath prospered me." That's the way—lay by in store as the Lord prospers us. Here comes a letter from "E. E. S." of D——, with $—. Thank you! Sr. P. sends $3 "for the distribution of tracts in the West. May blessings attend the effort made. It is what I have long wished might be done. The mite is small, but may it be accepted."

Sr. C. from Ohio, sends $2, with directions where to send the tracts; this is right; a good way to do work. I have sent some as ordered, such as I had. She writes several letters. I extract: "It grieves me that I cannot now minister in temporal things to you who have ministered to my spiritual wants. I do want a religion that is pocket deep. You say it is difficult to support a paper unless it is pledged to some party or sect,—is there not the same difficulty respecting the support of an independent minister?" Yes, sister, there is, yet this is, after all, only man's view of the question. God and his angels think it very easy to take care of a faithful child. They took care of Elijah, you know. Let us trust him.

Again: "I truly rejoice to read your proposition in regard to the West. I have lived there and know your views are correct. Yes, God has true children there, those who rejoice that they are accounted worthy to suffer reproach for Christ's sake. . . . . It cheers my heart to hear of others being benefited by my efforts. I know it does yours also. I send you an extract from a letter sent me last week. I was visiting some relatives some thirty miles from here, candid, pious, and prayerful Baptists, to whom I must say I presented the truth with timidity and doubt, and much fearfulness, because of reproach, that now, as in the days of Christ, attended the word; yet we have reason to thank God for the result. I sent them some of your books. They write: 'How fervently should we thank God for putting it into your heart to send those books. It will be almost impossible for you to realize the amount of good done by their perusal. They seemed to be the thing needed. They have been read and anxiously inquired for by the careless professor, and the impenitent sinner. They are at present some three miles from here, enlightening, I humbly trust, the heart of a sincere inquirer after truth. O that God would incline the heart of every professed christian to read more carefully! If such a course was pursued, much of the mystery which seems to enshroud the revealed word of God would be done away, and much might be done towards bringing about a more charitable state of feeling among all denominations.'" Sr. R. wishes some other tracts sent, but forgets to give the name of the persons in this letter. Send it and they shall be forwarded. Such letters are truly encouraging to my heart.

Aug. 4th. Bro. S. called at my house and left $20 from the D——e church, for the Tract Fund. Well done, seeing they are nearly all young, and one of their number had previously sent more than as much more.

August 5th. Bro. C. L., in behalf of the Brn., sends $4 for tracts, and $6 on the Tract Fund. Thank you, Bro. L. I don't doubt that this $6 will do more good in tracts than any $600 you ever lost in any speculation in your life! I mean to come and see you all by and by. Here are $2 from H. F. H., and M. C., by Bro. Grant for the Tract Fund.

Aug. 6th. Bro. H. sends $1 for the Tract Fund, and also sends for tracts to scatter in his own locality. He writes: "I send you $1 for the West; it is all I have at present. I have bought a great many tracts since you sent me those. I have spread them far and near. One woman belonging to the Methodist church says she has got more light and knowledge out of a few tracts and books that I let her have, than from all the preaching she ever heard, and when she said so I could not help saying, glory to God in the Highest. Some like them—some sputter about them, but thank God, it causes them to think—and the tracts talk for themselves. There is one thing that I have noticed—when I have seen a great machine, on examining it inside and out, I have seen numerous little wheels or gears, and that they matched into each other, and when the driver started, all the little wheels started too, because they were all connected together, and when one started, the machine was in motion, and there were little cogs on these little wheels, so every one lifted in its turn. Well, now, Bro., I want to be one of these cogs, and when it comes my turn, I want to lift." Lift away, Brother! God give you strength to do it.

Aug. 8th. Here is another letter with $2—50, for bound tracts on Prophecy, and $1,50 for the Tract Fund. It is from one of my dear children in the common faith, who I buried with Christ about a year ago. She writes: "Bro Hastings: I would like to be one to help forward the cause of truth, so will you please to accept my mite towards the amount you desire. It looks small, but it is given with a free heart, a willing hand, and my prayers that it may be the means of doing some good. I hope you will be enabled to go on with your good work; but I often think, are the rest of us doing all we can while Bro. Hastings is laboring with heart and hand for his fellow men? May the Lord help us to do every duty. Pray for me, that I may strive for that rest that remains for the people of God. Come and see us again when you can." Yes, sister, I will try, when the Lord will, to see you again. I don't know but it will seem like a form when I say what I am just about to say: I have written it so many times, as my full heart could find nothing else that would tell its feelings to those who thus help with words and deeds in the work of God, but, as I have said before, I must repeat it—"God bless you!" O, we will meet by and by, where distance shall no more divide us! Be faithful, sister, to the end. I pray for you.

Here comes the "Pilgrim Brother's" letter once more, with its fourth instalment $1. "I again enclose to you another mite, and judging from your published weekly report on the Crisis, I find that our Heavenly Father has been sending to you many "mickles" to make up the "muckle" needed sum of $1000. It surely will come, like the manna to Israel of old, and will send forth life-healing food to many famishing souls in the western 'wilderness of the people.' Adieu for the present, Bro. Pilgrim. From yours of like precious faith." God bless you too, Bro. Pilgrim.

Aug. 9th. Letter from Bro. Grant with $1 from Sr. G——s, $2 from Sr. F., $1 from Bro. P., 50 cents from Sr. C——.

Here I must close for now. I am tired of writing. I have much to say, but more to do. Pray for me. The more I see of this work, the more I am convinced it is God's work. I go to New York in a few days to issue several hundred thousand pages of tracts. I have many calls and some most cheering letters. Send in your calls and orders for tracts. Remember hereafter—the price of all my Tracts when ordered from me with cash accompanying the order, 1200 pages will be sent post paid, for $1. 1600 pages by express for $1. As soon as I can make the arrangements, my agents will sell them at the same price. Where persons only want one tract of a kind they should send 3 cents for a 24 page tract, and for others in proportion.

For the Crisis.

The Livermore Conference.

According to appointment the brethren met, Sept. 1st, at 2 o'clock P. M., in South Livermore, in a beautiful grove on the land of Bro. C. Denning. Brethren in the place had taken much pains to prepare the ground for the convenience of the meeting, and had all things well arranged. There was a mind to work; the meeting began and progressed well. The Lord blessed us with good weather, good laborers, a good disposition, good congregations, and with his Holy Spirit to back up the word preached, which made it a blessed and profitable season. The reports from various parts of the field, viz: Mt. Vernon, Belgrade, Rome, Sidney, Richmond, Livermore and Hartford, show the general prosperity of the cause, and increase of converts and of devotion to God and truth. The ministers present were Elds. Haggett, Hanscomb, Sevey, Dudley, Wellcome and Howard. The preaching was well calculated to encourage and strengthen the believers, and alarm, awaken and lead sinners to Christ for pardon and hope of eternal life. Our social meetings were well improved, exhibiting life, activity, hope, confidence in the word of God, devotion to Christ, and a strong determination to gain the soon coming kingdom of God. On the last two days the congregations were very large, (for the place) as also in the evenings, composed of attentive listeners, or devoted worshipers, while those who care not for the Bible and its blessed hope, and who will not listen to the word, stayed away, which gave the room to those who wished to hear. The truth lodged in some hearts and will bring forth fruit. Several wanderers confessed their sins and returned to God. One young lady arose and confessed her faith in the truths we preach, and her determination to strive to become a christian and live for God.

The good influence of this meeting will not be lost, but will tell for God's glory and the spread of his truth in all that region. It was a feast indeed to the believers, and made us long more earnestly for the coming of our Lord to bring all the family into his kingdom. The friends from abroad were very kindly and hospitably entertained by the church there, and God will abundantly reward them.

Our chairman (Bro. I. Wight) not being present, Bro. E. M. Haggett was chosen chairman, no business was presented for action, the conference adjourned to meet in Richmond, Read Meeting House, Oct. 27, Thursday, 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

E. M. Haggett, Chairman.
I. C. Wellcome, Secretary.
South Livermore, Me., Sept. 7th, 1859.

From Vesta N. Cudworth.

Bro. Grant:—Our campmeeting in Savoy, although small, has not been entirely overlooked by the Master. A few of the watchmen came up to the feast of tabernacles to feed the scattered flock, and I assure you they found hungry children, who were thankful for the choice truths set before them. Home, sweet home, found an echo in many faithful hearts, and we were glad that in these retrograde times there were some Joshuas to lead us to the land, and I think they found some to stay up their hands. Some were with us that first sowed the seed (of the gospel of the kingdom preached for a witness) in this region. Others came in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel, and before the close, many learned, what some have never forgotten, who we were. We had truth enough to keep the enemy awake, but had excellent order, and I think the influence of this meeting will tell on the destinies of dying men. The leaven is working, showing up latter-day apostates, exposing the foundation of spiritualism, and some begin to see this fast age has run beyond revelation; while a new code of laws has been ordained for man.

A little of the pharisaical spirit was felt by some, with all its withering influences, which reminded us of the text—"Ye have made the heart of my people sad whom the Lord has not made sad;" nevertheless, it was a rich feast, and the Master of assemblies presided; his word proved the fire and the hammer that broke the flinty rock in pieces. Bro. Grant, this out-of-fashion truth has a glory in it yet; the children love it here; confess it, and live it out; it is the wine and the oil, that makes the heart glad and the face shine. There are many in this section who feel that they have opened their mouth to the Lord, and cannot go back; and when the angels are commissioned to gather those that have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice, I believe a little handful of waiting ones will be found that somebody has cared for, and that Jesus has loved.

I will leave this for others, who probably will give a more full account of the meeting. Your sister waiting.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Aug. 30th, 1859, at her father's house in Peacedale, R.I., Emma L., daughter of Geo. W. and Mary Ann Ecclestone, aged seventeen years and nine months.

Emma was a dear child, intelligent, studious, gentle and dutiful. It seems but yesterday that I saw her among the lambs of my little flock,—one of the foremost in the Sunday School, sometimes committing hundreds of verses for a lesson,—the light and joy of her home, and the comfort of her father's family. But all is changed. Though for sometime she has been confined to the house, and has been gradually wasting away, yet in the midst of it all she was led to look for strength to Him who is the resurrection and the Life. And so resting upon the arm of Christ, she walked calmly down amid the shades of the dark valley and feared no evil, for the Heavenly Shepherd was near to comfort and to bless. While we were praying and praising God at Wilbraham, her friends were bearing her with many tears to her silent resting place. They sorrow not as those who have no hope. May God bless them and give them consolation. When I go there I shall mingle my tears with theirs, for I shall no more see dear Emma's pallid countenance wreathed with the smiles of welcome as before. But shall we not meet again? I trust we shall. O! may these stricken ones look forward and press forward till the Lord shall come and bring the loved ones back to life again.

Emma did not make a public profession of faith in Christ previous to her decline of health, but for many months she gave cheering evidence by confessions and the temper of her mind that the good seed had not been sown upon her heart in vain. We hope to see her when the Master maketh up his jewels. God grant that we may meet her there in peace.

H. L. H.

Providence, R. I. Sept. 6th, 1859.

Our youngest daughter, Martha M. Sinclair, fell asleep in Jesus on Monday, the 12th inst., at 2 1-2 P. M., aged twenty years and seven months.

We mourn 'tis true, but not as those who have no hope; for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. We hope to meet her in the morning of the resurrection when Jesus shall come to destroy the last enemy.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The sailing of the steamship Great Eastern has been postponed till Sept. 29th.

[From Liverpool the 31st ult.]

The Zurich Conference.

A dispatch dated Zurich, August 27, says that, for the last few days, there has been no Conference of the Plenipotentiaries. It is believed they will be enabled to quit Zurich, at the latest, in a fortnight.

On Sunday, August 28, the French and Austrian Plenipotentiaries held a private Conference.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, in a letter dated the evening of the 28th, says a private letter from Zurich of the 26th states that the labors of the Plenipotentiaries were going on slowly enough. Notwithstanding the announcement a few days ago, it is doubtful if any important point has yet been settled. Whether the fault is attributable to the Plenipotentiaries themselves—to the preliminaries of the treaty of Villa Franca, and to the two Emperors not having taken into calculation, in their eager anxiety to make peace, all the difficulties of negotiation—no one knows. Some people incline to the opinion that this delay is intentional, and the manner in which M. de Borqueney is acting, lends some color to the suspicion. What the French government at last will have to do is simply to declare to Austria that it has done all that was morally in its power in favor of her proteges, or else it must dispose itself to impose them on the Duchies by intrigue, if not by force.

A late Berne telegram says that the reports current as to the proceedings of the Conference were quite contradictory, and that there was every reason to believe that the Sardinian Plenipotentiary would not affix his signature to any protocol in favor of the return of the deposed rulers of the Italian Duchies.

The Paris correspondent of the Times, writing on the 30th, says that things are going on so badly at Zurich as to render a dissolution of the Conference in a very few days probable. A Congress of war seems to some the only alternative, and a Congress, to which Austria is decidedly opposed, would have as little success as the Conference. The designation to be given to the new kingdom has been discussed at Zurich, and Austria is willing Victor Emmanuel should be known as King of Sardinia and Lombardy, but will not consent he should describe himself as King of Upper Italy.

Leigh Hunt, the popular author, died in London on the 28th ult., in his 75th year. He had been in declining health for a considerable time.

The Isle of Man had been successfully connected by a submarine telegraph cable with England.

Telegraphic communication between England and Malta was re-established. This would expedite the reception of news from India, &c., about three days.

A Cabinet Council was unexpectedly summoned in London on the 29th. Various speculations were afloat as to the cause. Generally supposed to have reference to some new phase in the Italian question.

The London Times, in a leading article on England's defense preparations, says she is now rapidly approaching a position, if indeed she has not actually attained it, in which no assailant can hope to attack her with impunity.

FRANCE.

The Emperor remained in retirement in the Pyrenees. It was asserted he would shortly proceed to Cherbourg, and also pay a second visit to the Chalons Camp.

A speech of Count Morny, at the opening of the Council General of the Department of Prey de Dome, attracted considerable attention. It was regarded as an annunciation of the sentiments of the Emperor. The Count endeavored to show that the apprehensions existing in England of a French invasion were quite groundless, and that, on the contrary, France was very desirous of cementing the alliance between the two countries, and waging only manufacturing and commercial war. He denounced that portion of the English press and those members of Parliament who questioned the intentions of the French Government.

The Paris Constitutionnel, in an article on the Duchies says that the Emperor having agreed at Villafranca to the restoration of the former reigning princes, has not yet given up all hopes of success, and will fulfill loyally to the end his disinterested mission; but if he should not succeed in reuniting the princes and people in mutual accord, it is not his intention to force either one or the other. It is not the wish of His Majesty to follow the errors of the ancient Austrian policy, whose armed intervention in the affairs of the peninsular has ceased forever. We have given to the Italian people advice which we believe wise and prudent, which, if they do not follow, it will grieve us, but which we could not press upon them by force. To us Italy owes her independence. We shall not take away from her again what we have given her yesterday.

Per steamship Borussia. Advices of the 3d instant.

Uneasiness was felt in Paris on account of the Zurich Conferences, and Rentes had declined.

Accounts from Madrid state that Spain had withdrawn her Consul from Tangier, and had decided to demand satisfaction of Morocco, for the outrages at Ceuta. Orders had been given for the formation of an expeditionary corps of 10,000 men.

It is suggested in the London papers that the firing on the steamer Indus, from Tarifa, was for the purpose of bringing her to, to ascertain the state of affairs at Ceuta.

Advices from Vienna state that Austria had decided to discount that portion of the Austrian debt which is to be apportioned to Lombardy, and also sell the public domains.

A Paris telegram of Friday says the French government has intimated to Turkey that France would support the Suez canal project.

Per Persia from Liverpool the 3d inst.

ITALY.

Some official correspondence of the late Grand Duke of Modena had been brought to light, which is anything but complimentary to the Emperor Napoleon.

The correspondent of the Times says the latest accounts received in Paris were far more favorable. The advance of the Pontifical troops into the Legations was believed to be imminent. If they are successful, the entry of the Duke of Modena into his states at the head of his army was considered probable, but if the Papal advance is repulsed, a rising in Naples would most likely follow.

A Milan letter expresses an apprehension that bad blood was growing up between the French army of occupation and the Italians.

The return of the French Ambassador to Rome is accompanied by a rumor that the Emperor demands of His Holiness the establishment, in the legitimate legations, of a Viceroy who shall govern in the name of the Holy See.

Le Nord states that Prince Poniatowski had not gone to Italy for any political object, as reported from Paris, but simply on private affairs.

The same journal says that, in a new note addressed by Cardinal Antonelli to the Catholic powers, he not only rejects all reforms, but protests warmly against what he calls an attack on the sovereign rights of the Pope.

A difficulty which arose between the American Consul and the Japanese Government has been amicably settled.

The Pope on the Confederation.

A letter from Rome, of the 14th, in the Emancipation of Brussels, gives some details which are quite at variance with the information previously received. It says:—

"There has been much said here lately of a memorandum or ultimatum which the Emperor Napoleon has addressed to the Pope. What is true in this affair is, that Napoleon III has lately sent to his Holiness a very long autograph letter, in which, in the most respectful terms, he invites the Pope to accept the honorary Presidentship of the Italian Confederation, the separate administration for the Legations of the Romagna, and other propositions. The Pope replied to the first point that he should first wish to know with whom he should be co-federated, since three of the Italian princes had been banished from their States, and that of the two who remain one only was in friendly relations with the Holy See, the other maintaining a hostile attitude towards Rome. He is also said to have objected that, not being able to appear in the Confederation except as Sovereign of a portion of his States, the other part still being the pressure of a usurping power, it was not consistent with his dignity to accept it at the present moment.

His Holiness consequently demanded as a primary measure the restoration of the princes and of the legitimate authorities in the duchies and in the Romagna, and the reestablishment of friendly relations between the Holy See and Piedmont. As to the secularization of offices, the Pope would be disposed to accept it in cases which may not be incompatible with the conditions of laymen, and provided his subjects do not demand the reinstalment of priests in such offices, as happened after the restoration of 1849. As to the separation of the adminstration of Bologna and Romagna, his Holiness refused to accede to it, on the ground that it was an infringement of his prerogatives as a Sovereign, and also incompatible with his duty. His Holiness has, therefore, replied to this letter in the most precise and categorical manner, accepting what he thought acceptable, refusing what he could not admit, reserving the right of more maturely examining that which might be doubtful, and requiring explanations on what did not appear to him sufficiently clear."

Crime.—It is a startling fact, that the terrible crime of murder is greatly on the increase. Suicide, too, is becoming a species of mania, and wife-beating on an atrociously brutal scale appears to be running riot. The annals of the criminal and police courts are rife with accounts of barbarous wife or husband slaying and with the painful records of self-destruction. The daily province of police magistrates seems to be to adjudicate on incessant charges of infamous brutality preferred by wives against their ruffianly husbands, fellows who, without any real provocation, employ clenched fist and nailed boots to injure, sometimes fatally, those whom before God they have sacredly sworn to love and to cherish. Coroners were never more busy with inquests on butchered individuals or self-murderers than now. Of late the judges have donned the fatal black cap with almost the terrible frequency they did in the dark and guilty "blood money" days, and the grim hand that strangles according to law has no lack of employment. Turn which way we will, the thrilling cry of murder rings in our ears.—London Times.

Notice.

The Free Tabernacle in Foster, R. I., near Cornell's stand, will be dedicated D. V. to the worship of God on Thursday, Sept. 29th, at one o'clock, P. M. Sermon by H. L. Hastings. Services will continue daily through the week and over the following Sunday. Brethren from abroad are invited. Pray for us.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference holden the 14th, 15th and 16th of Oct., in the Jerome school-house, corner of Barton and Flint, in Genesee Co., Mich., four miles N. E. of Grand Blanc Center. Bro. and Sr. Seymour are expected to be in attendance to preach the word of life. Bro. Curry is especially invited to attend, and as many other ministering brethren as can make it convenient. Let us pray for a profitable season.

In behalf of the brethren,
A. F. Servis.

Notice.

The Iowa, Minnesota and Wis. Christian Conference will be held with the church of God in Springville, Badax Co, Wis, commencing Oct. the 6th, 1859, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Lord's day. As this conference is young in organization, embracing in its territory a new country, and is therefore a new field of labor, it is desired that as many of the preaching brethren within the precincts of this conference shall attend as can do so; and that all the churches of like precious faith within the limits of the conference should be represented by delegates or letter. Those that write epistles of christian salutation, we hope will be sure to write in season for their letters to be presented to the conference. Those that write will direct to Y. Higgins, Viroqua, Badax Co., Wis.

Those coming from the south will leave the river at Badax city, as it is but seventeen miles to Springville. Those that come from the east will come to Milwaukee, and from thence take the Milwaukee and Mississippi R. R. to Sparta, and from Sparta to Viroqua; a stage runs every Thursday. Those coming from the north and north-west will leave the river at Lacross, from Lacross to Springville; the stage runs Tuesdays and Fridays; fare $1.50. Friends coming from the south-east of this State will come to Prairie du Chien, from thence to Viroqua; the stage runs Thursdays; fare $3.00.

By order of the conference,
Y. Higgins, Evangelist.

Michigan Church Conference.

The second annual meeting of the Michigan Church Conference is appointed to commence in the school house at Ballard's Corners, three miles south of Grand Rapids, Tuesday evening, Sept. 30th, and continue over Sunday. A general attendance of brethren and other friends is solicited.

O. R. L. Crozier, Sec.

Notice.

The next quarterly meeting of the Rhode Island Conference is to be at Fisher's Factory, Exeter, R. I., in the Temperance Hall, Sept. 28th, 1859. Those coming by R. R. come on the Providence and Stonington R. R. and stop at Wickford station.

Notice.

We are making arrangements with some of our eastern brethren to come and aid us in our western field, and wish our friends on either of the thoroughfares from New England to Chicago, Ill., to give notice through the "Crisis" immediately, where our brethren can stop and preach on their way, and receive aid to assist them on their journey. Will brethren west that want a servant of God among them, inform me at once. We are making special efforts to aid our western brethren.

My P. O. address, until further notice, is Earlville, Ill.

P. S. We shall look for letters at Frankfort, North Hermon, Bangor, Corinna and Augusta.

General Convention in Northern Indiana.

It is proposed to have a General Convention of churches and preachers at Union Mills, La Porte Co., Ind., commencing Thursday, Oct. 6th, and continue over the following Lord's day. The object of this meeting will be to determine upon a system, or plan of arrangements, by which the cause of our soon coming Lord may be more largely and effectually advanced in this region of the West. All such as are interested in an effort of this kind are specially requested to be present; preachers in person, and churches by their representatives—as it may be expected that important measures will be adopted at this meeting, in the carrying out of which there should be enlisted the largest possible interest of such as love the coming and reign of the Messiah.

Brethren, ye who desire to see something more accomplished for the advancement of our common cause than has yet been accomplished,—ye who believe it can be done, and that it should be done,—let us now arise, and in a united, intelligently-defined and systematic manner, undertake this effort, spreading far and wide a knowledge of "the faith once delivered to the saints"

The church at Union Mills has kindly offered their hospitalities to such as may attend the meeting, and will spare no pains to make the visit of delegates agreeable; but having recently incurred considerable expense in building a meeting-house and otherwise, it is deemed proper to say we could not presume further upon their liberalities; hence it is suggested churches see to it that their preachers are sent to this meeting without being embarrassed for want of means wherewith to go and come.

Friends coming via. P. Ft. W. and C. R. R. will stop at Hannah Station. Those coming by the M. S. and N. I. R. R. will stop at La Porte. Those coming by the N. A. and S. R. R. will stop at Westville, where brethren will call for them upon the arrival of Thursday afternoon train.

For the Crisis.

On the Death of Jane H. Howard.

[illegible] sister, thou art sleeping,
Sleeping in the silent tomb;
[illegible] bright watch are keeping,
[illegible] the darkness and the gloom.

When the Savior comes in glory,
[illegible] will bear thy form away
[illegible] blest and heavenly mansions
In the realms of perfect day.

Jesus smoothed thy dying pillow,
Journeyed with thee through the vale,
Bore thee safe over death's dark billows,
Nor did his blest promise fail.

Sleep on, sister, rest in Jesus,
Till in glory he appears;
Then with joy thou 'lt rise to meet us,
Where are shed no parting tears.

"Farewell, father, farewell, mother,"
Was the language of thy heart,
"Meet me in that blessed Kingdom,
Where we never more shall part.

"Farewell, sister, farewell, brother,
Meet me on that heavenly shore,
Where with Jesus and the angels
We shall live to die no more."

Woman's Position in the Church. No. 4.

We are not unfrequently met by this objection to female testimony: "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak." This language of St Paul is supposed positively to prohibit a woman from opening her mouth in testimony for Jesus. We will look at it briefly. If this refers to prophesying, or praying, it must needs conflict with the same apostle's teaching in chapter 11, where he lays down directions how a woman shall be covered when praying, or prophesying. We can see no consistency in the remark, "If they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home," if it has reference to giving testimony for Christ. Supposing the minister of one our churches should say to the sisters attending the social meetings; "You must not testify in the meeting; it will not do for you to speak; if you desire any information, ask your husband for it after you get home; he will give it you." Would that be consistent? Suppose she was only a listener to the remarks of others, and made none herself, would that hinder her from learning what they were talking about? In order for her to ascertain, must she ask her husband at home? The speaking that the apostle forbids, must evidently refer to asking questions for information; he would have them defer that until they could inquire and learn at home.

Will those who thus quote Paul in justification of silent women, have them refrain from responses, and from singing in the church? They must, in order for the women to keep silence. Apollos was a man mighty in the Scriptures, and very eloquent; yet he was not unwilling to be instructed more perfectly in the way of God by a christian woman. Wesley regarded with favor "those women that labored with him in the gospel," as did Paul. Let me give a few extracts from his works.—"I am glad that Sister Crosby has been at Beverly, and that you had an opportunity of hearing her. She is useful wherever she goes, particularly in exciting believers to go on to holiness." (Vol. 7, p. 46.) "No society in the country grows so fast as this, either in grace or numbers. The chief instrument in this glorious work is Miss Perronet, a burning and shining light." (Vol. 4. p. 448.)

In his journal he gives an account of one who resisted the call of God, which I will relate.—"I was strongly importuned by our friends at Long Stratton to give them a sermon. I had heard of a young woman there who had uncommon fits, and of one that lately preached; but I did not know that it was one and the same person. I found her in the house to which I went, and talked with her at large. I was surprised. Sarah Mallet, two or three and twenty years old, is, I think, full as much devoted as Jane Cooper was, and of as strong understanding. Of the following relation, which she gave me, there are numberless witnesses. Some years since it was strongly impressed upon her mind that she ought to call sinners to repentance. This impression she vehemently resisted, believing herself quite unqualified, both by her sin and ignorance, till it was suggested, 'If you do it not willingly, you shall do it whether you will or no.' She fell into a fit, and, while utterly senseless, thought she was in the preaching house at Lowestoffe, where she prayed and preached for nearly an hour to a numerous congregation. She then opened her eyes, and recovered her senses. In a year or two, she had eighteen of these fits; in every one of which she imagined herself to be in one or another congregation. She then cried out, 'Lord, I will obey thee; I will call sinners to repentance.' She has done so occasionally from that time, and her fits returned no more. Perhaps this was intended to satisfy her own mind that God had called her to publish salvation in the name of Jesus to [illegible] sinners, and to incline her to take [illegible] which appears to have been [illegible] to her. Thus 'Wisdom' [illegible] to convince others that [illegible] God hath poured out his Spirit upon his handmaids, and upon his daughters, that they may prophesy or preach in his name the unsearchable riches of Christ."

The author of the "Heroines of Methodism," in alluding to this case, says, "Probably the experience of this young woman, and the wonderful dealings of the Lord with her, greatly helped to enlarge the views of that great man, Mr. John Wesley, upon the subject of female preaching. It is very evident from his letters and conduct towards her, that he believed her, as a preacher, to be doing what the Lord required at her hands." She says of herself, "I have often been led to cry out, in the bitterness of my soul, O Lord, I am but a child; I cannot preach thy word. But the more deeply was it impressed on my mind, 'Woe is me if I preach not the gospel,' till my distress of soul destroyed my body. In my twentieth year, the Lord answered my prayer in great affliction, and made known to others, as well as to myself, the work he would have me do, and fitted me in the furnace for his use. From that time I began my public work. Mr. Wesley was to me a father and a faithful friend. The same Lord that opened my mouth, endued me with power, and gave me courage to speak his word, has through his grace enabled me to continue to the present day. * * * * * *

When I first began to travel, I followed Mr. Wesley's counsel, which was, to let the voice of the people be to me the voice of God, and where I was sent for, to go. To this counsel I have attended to this day."

Some of the preachers not approving of her course, Mr. Wesley gave her the following note from the conference held at Manchester, 1787: "We give the right hand of fellowship to Sarah Mallet, and have no objection to her being a preacher in our connection, so long as she preaches the Methodist doctrine, and attends to our discipline." Dr. Taft has in his possession the original document.

Musings.

The peaceful hours of another Sabbath have glided swiftly by, bringing us one week nearer the judgment than when last we witnessed its close. The silver moon is riding majestically through the heavens, just as it has done many a time before, speaking to fallen man, in gentle tones, of the long-suffering and goodness of his Creator. How few heed that voice! Who can tell the scenes which shall transpire beneath that moon ere it shall veil its face before to-morrow's sun—the heaven-daring wickedness—the heart-rending anguish? Oh! it chills one's very life-blood to think of what shall be unfolded at the day of judgment.

We are living in dark and perilous times; and does not this gross darkness herald the approach of dawn? Is not the bright and morning Star soon to arise upon this sin-benighted earth? God grant that we may be ready when it comes.

Oh! let us keep close to our Heavenly Guide in this dangerous time, lest we stumble and fall to rise no more. Perhaps it may be but a little time longer that we shall have to battle with our foes, then "let us fight manfully the battles of our Lord." Let us not turn aside to follow after the vanities of the world. Why, oh, why should we grovel in earth-born pleasures when the golden crown is sparkling within our reach? Why place our affections on the fading, perishing things of earth, when an unfading, imperishable kingdom may be ours?

We cannot realize the glory of that kingdom—the picture seems almost too bright to be real when contrasted with this groaning earth; yet Jesus' word is pledged that it shall be ours, if faithful. God keep us all faithful until that kingdom come, is the prayer of your unworthy friend.

A Revival.

When the spiritual life of the church ebbs low; when the word is preached with little apparent effect; when there are few that come up to Zion's solemn feasts; prayer meetings are thinly attended, and the singing drags,—a revival is the only thing that can save such a church.

But would you have a revival? Then, like Habakkuk, pray; (3: 2;) like St. Paul, labor. Let each inquire,—Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Lay yourself out for the work by renewing your consecration to God.

That revival that is attended most by lay effort, in connection with the preached word, is the best; it is the surest sign that the work is genuine. It is the church that is "the body of Christ, and members in particular;"—and that is the "royal priesthood," and upon her (not upon the ministry alone) devolves the work of offering spiritual sacrifice; and upon the church rests the work of intercession, as one with Christ.

Then if you are not ready for the books to be closed, and the great day of judgment to come, seek for a revival.

BRO. GRANT:—The lines in your last "On the death of a Brother," remind me of a piece which I wrote years since, upon the death of an only son. I enclose it, word for word, as it was then written. Some of the lines are just alike. Those who have lost loved ones will appreciate the references to the little mementos which they leave behind, that even after the lapse of many years stir the heart.

Requiem.

I.

My lovely boy, I see thee still;
Fond memory, faithful to her trust,
In beauty calls thee from the dust;
Thou comest with the rising light,
Art with me in the gloomy night;
I meet thee at my own threshold,
In dreams my arms thy neck enfold,
Thy voice' sweet sound is in my ear,
In scenes to memory ever dear,
I see thee still.

II.

I see thee still;
In all these hallow'd tokens round,
This hammer! yes, I hear its sound;
This ringlet too thy forehead shaded,
This worsted mat by thee was braided;
My garden flowers, withered like thee,
How oft, my boy, thou'st culled for me;
This little book was thine to read,
This flower, thou placed it here indeed—
I see thee still.

III.

I see thee still;
Here is thy fishing tackle now,
And what thou whittled for a plow;
Here was thy play ground and retreat,
And here thy tiny willow seat.
My book-case stands just where it did
When last thou closed its double lid;
Here are the marks thy fingers traced,
Here is daguerreotyped thy face;
I see thee still.

IV.

I see thee still;
These ribbon blocks were thine, to build
A house; this brush, that house to gild;
This rocking horse, on which you rode,
That bounded with its lightsome load,
Long after thou, with sickness pale,
Bestrode it oft, though weak and frail.
Dark hours again their woes unfold,
With sorrows never to be told;
I see thee still.

V.

I see thee still;
Here's thy magnetic book and rod,
And here thy playground, now untrod;
These gilded fish, with scales inwrought,
By other hands must now be caught;
This top, yet to the shuttle bound,
With its long string, but half unwound;
Thy painted sled does now recall
Thee watching for the first snow fall;
I see thee still.

VI.

I see thee still;
This ship thou'st often sent to sea,
Launched on an ocean pumped by thee;
Its masts sustained by many strings,
Its deck o'erloaded with play things;
These pictures too, this bounding ball,
This one-wheeled barrow, all recall;
And here again with sacred trust,
Fond memory brings thee from the dust;
I see thee still.

VII.

I see thee not;
I miss thy voice, thy footsteps light,
I miss thy laughing smile so bright;
I miss thee at the swinging gate,
At noon's return, or evening late;
Thy welcome voice my heart hath stirred,
No longer in my dwelling heard;
Thy foot-falls, oh, I hear them not!
Though absent, they are unforgot;
I see thee not.

VII.

I see thee not;
As oft I haste to clasp thy hand,
A phantom whispers—"broken band!"
From these bright visions as I start,
New arrows pierce my bleeding heart;
At table, vacant is thy seat,
Thy smile I there no more shall meet;
Life's joys with thee passed o'er the bourn,
From whence to earth there's no return!
No more to me.

* * * * * *

I see thee still;
As when we laid thee in the tomb,
In childhood's fairest, brightest bloom,
Saw earth embrace that sacred trust,
And shroud our hopes in silent dust;
And shall that sacred dust repose
Forever in the coffin's close?
Shall we not o'er the river Time
Embrace thee in a brighter clime;
And see thee there?

Doing Good.

How easily good can be done! There are many ways that we might be helped here in the West. The Brethren could send numbers of the Crisis that they have read—remail them to us. We can put them where they can do good. Also tracts that are laid up or thrown around would help us spread the true light. I have a few—I keep them going. Some have got the scales off, who were so prejudiced that they would not come to hear us, but the tracts did the work. One of Bro. Hastings' bound books on immortality has set a man who is preparing to preach on the right track. Brethren, be assured that there are some good soldiers here, who are not afraid to front the battle. Pray for us. Our temporal prospects are not very large. I have preached for the last six months twice on Sunday, and sometimes more, and I have only received $1,50 in money. We find our Savior's word fulfilled. We look for the Rest in the world to come—life everlasting.

PETER S. W. DEYO.

☞ It is the happiness of a christian, till he attain perfection, to be advancing toward it; to be daily refining from sin, and growing richer and stronger in the graces that make up a christian a new creature; to reach a higher degree of patience, and meekness, and humility; to have the heart more weaned from earth, and fixed on heaven.—Leighton.

Correspondence.

From Benj. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—To the praise of the Lord I would say, I am still alive, still enjoying health of body, peace of mind, and the approbation of my Master. I find a large field open to me, white, ready for harvest; or, perhaps I should rather say, ready for seed time. Minds are open to conviction, and ears are ready to hear with candor; and some hearts do receive, love and practice the truth. I never have found so great readiness to hear, and such a willingness to receive, as I have in this last tour among the Islands. It does seem that the Isles wait for his law.

In Head Harbor Island a majority of the people have become believers in the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked. Five years ago, Bro. Reed visited that Island, and wakened up the spirit of inquiry; since then no Advent preacher has been there, and the saints had become scattered, like sheep without a shepherd. I received a letter from G. W. Alley inviting me there. I went; found them hungry for the word; spent three weeks with them, laboring continually with good success. I baptized Bro. G. W. Alley, a young man of great promise. It was one of the most solemn and joyful seasons of my life. The Holy Spirit was present, and God blessed his own ordinance. We also partook of the emblems of the broken body and spilt blood of Jesus. I think much good will issue from that day's labor.

The good Lord has been with me in all my labors and visits, making me strong, both in body and mind, removing all my infirmities, and giving me boldness, freedom and tenderness. He has chosen a weak thing to confound the mighty, and a foolish thing to confound the wise, that no flesh should glory in his presence. The tracts which I received at the World's Crisis office have been mostly distributed, and have found ready readers; they are doing their office work. I feel it a great privilege to be worthy to be a servant of the church. I aspire to no greater honor than to labor among the poor and destitute, and share their humble fare. I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness.

If any wish to enter this field of labor, here is room enough and work enough; yes, and good pay; a hundred fold in this life, with persecutions, and in the world to come eternal life!

BRO. GRANT:—I have been enlightened by reading the writings of P. B. Morgan and Henry Grew, in the Crisis, about the divinity of Christ, in which the latter, especially, seems to "rightly divide the word." But I need not eulogize others' writings, when well authenticated from divine revelation—would only recommend, that all believe on Christ, "as the Scripture hath said."

There is a question, however, about the oneness of our Savior's nature, on which I would solicit your opinion. It is believed by some (1) that he possessed but one nature, and that nature was all human; consequently, we have nothing but a human sacrifice; and (2) that he was the possessor of two natures, one human, the other divine; and that the human nature alone died, while the divine nature lived. If so, have we any thing more than a human sacrifice in this case? And (3) that his nature consisted of humanity and divinity, both blended into one; which made him a being different from any in heaven or on earth—the only one who could open the "sealed book"—and that this peculiar nature died.

But the question is sometimes asked—"can divinity, whether separate, or interwoven in humanity, die?"—Must we rely upon our own reason for the solution of the above queries; or can they be Scripturally answered? Who can tell? Yours after truth.

BRO. GRANT:—The good Lord by his Spirit has seen fit to visit North Troy, Vt., in these last moments of time. Last winter and spring there was quite a number plucked as brands from the burning. Twenty happy souls have followed their Lord in the ordinance of baptism.

The church in that vicinity numbers about forty-five, and notwithstanding the many things they have had to contend against, they are in a thriving condition, strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. They have no regular preaching, and I wish to say a word to God's watchmen. If you can make it in your way to visit that place while on your errands of mercy, you will meet with a warm reception from the church, and I also believe God will bless you abundantly for so doing. There is nothing that gives them so much joy as to hear the certain sound coming from the gospel trump, viz., the near coming of the Just One. May the Lord direct some of his faithful watchmen that way.

Oh! let us heartily do whatsoever our hands find to do. The last sermon will soon be preached, the last exhortation given, the last tear shed, the last servant sealed in his forehead, and we go home to die no more. Be faithful. We are almost there.

Wolcott, Vt., Aug. 20, 1859.

From Elijah Macomber.

DEAR BRETHREN:—With joy and gladness of heart I write to inform you of one who is looking with great anxiety for the great day of rest. My longing heart desires it, for I am surrounded with temptations and besetments on every hand. The enemy of all righteousness is in the land, close upon us, as were Pharaoh and his hosts upon the track of the Israelites. But thanks be to God, who will give us the victory through his dear Son; who is appointed heir of all things, to whom be the praise, bless his name.

I am somewhat as it was with St. John—I am on Block Island, out in the Atlantic Ocean, surrounded with the dismal waters of unbelief. The good Lord visited John, and He visits me, and gives me daily bread from heaven. Praise his name! That bread I eat of, and in eating it I expect to live forever.

Friends and brethren, could I but have the pleasure of meeting with some of you and sympathizing with you, and get a word of encouragement, it would cause me to rejoice in the dear Lord. I do rejoice to think there are those who mean to hold up the standard of the glorious Gospel of the Son of God to a perishing world. I feel of late stronger in the Lord than ever. I feel the assurance in my own heart, and by his blessed word, that he will deliver his chosen ones, and that soon. Are all who profess to be the children of the Holy One ready? Have you all the spirit within you that raised up Jesus from the dead? If so, it will quicken your mortal bodies, and you will sing the song of the redeemed from the earth. Hallelujah!

Brethren, exercise faith in the Lord Jesus, for we read that without faith it is impossible to please God; and if we have faith like a grain of mustard seed, we can do many mighty works. His word is true; it will not fail; heaven and earth will pass away, but his word will stand.

Brethren, you that are laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, have you forgotten there is such a place as Block Island? I pray the Lord of the vineyard may direct your minds to this portion of it. May this be a Macedonian cry to you. There may some good thing come out of Block Island. Brethren, all you that are spiritually minded, pray for Block Island; the prayers of the righteous will avail much.

BRO. GRANT:—The Crisis is a welcome visitor to me and my companion. Our hearts are in the cause it advocates. I often call to remembrance former days, when I have met the saints of God at camp and tent meetings, believing with all my heart the Lord would soon come. I am glad to know that brethren stand fast in the faith. Thank the Lord! the time is not far distant when death and its author will be destroyed; when much loved friends will be raised from the dust of the earth, clothed with immortality, to sicken and die no more. Death has made sad inroads in our own family. Our son, Charles L., was drowned June 10th, 1840, aged six years, twenty-eight days. Elizabeth Ann died of consumption April 29th, 1855, aged twenty-three years, four months, six days; and Mary S. died of consumption Feb. 18th, 1859, aged eighteen years, thirteen days. When we see notices of death's doings with the saints of God, we are led to inquire, in the language of the poet,

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just;
While the rich blood of martyrs slain
Lies mingled with the dust?"

But Hope replies—

"A few short years of evil past,
We reach the happy shore,
Where death-divided friends at last
Shall meet to part no more."

Suncook, N. H., Aug. 29th, 1859.

Selections.

The Rising Tide.

When the tide is out, you have noticed, as you ramble among the rocks, little pools with little fishes in them. To the shrimp in such a pool his foot depth of salt water is all the ocean for the time being. He has no dealings with his neighbor shrimp in the adjacent pool, though it may be only a few inches of sand that divide them. But when the rising ocean begins to leap over the margin of the lurking-place, one pool joins another, their various tenants meet, and by-and-by, in place of their little patch of standing water, they have the ocean's boundless fields to roam in. When the tide is out—when religion is low—the faithful are to be found insulated, here a few and there a few, in the little standing pools that stud the beach, having no dealings with their neighbors of the adjoining pools, calling them Samaritans, and fancying, that their own little communion includes all that are precious in God's sight. They forget for a time that there is a vast and expansive ocean rising—every ripple brings it nearer—a mighty communion—even the communion of saints—which is to engulph all minor considerations and to enable the fishes of all pools—the christians, the Christ-lovers of all denominations—to come together. When, like a flood, the Spirit flows into the churches, church will join to church, and saint will join to saint, and all will rejoice to find, that if their little pools have perished, it is not by the scorching summer's drouth, nor the casting in of earthly rubbish, but by the influx of that boundless sea whose glad waters touch eternity, and in whose ample depths the saints in heaven as well as the saints of earth have room enough to range. Yes, our churches are the standing pools along the beach, with just enough of their peculiar element to keep the few inmates living during the ebb-tide period of the church's history. But they form a very little fellowship—the largest is but little, yet is there steadily flowing in a tide of universal life and love, which, as it lips in over the margin of the little pool, will stir its inhabitants with an unwonted vivacity, and then let them loose in the large range of the Spirit's own communion. Happy church! farthest down upon the strand! nearest the rising ocean's edge! Happy church! whose sectarianism shall first be swept away in this inundation of love and joy; whose communion shall first break forth into that purest and holiest, and yet most comprehensive of all communions—the communion of the Holy Ghost! Would to God that church were mine!—Rev. Jas. Hamilton, D. D.

The Process.

☞ When you have been humbled then you may be lifted up, but "before honor goeth humility." Suppose one went to wheat, as it waved in the field, and said:—"Would you like to be made into a loaf for the queen?" "Yes," answers the wheat, "oh! yes, we should like to be presented to the queen," and on it waves, swelling with pride at the thought of its consequence. But the reaper comes, and the wheat gets a stroke at the roots and is laid prostrate. "Alas!" it sighs, "is this going to the queen?" But there it lies, dying in the hot sun; and then 'tis drawn to the threshing floor, and bruised and beaten without mercy. After this 'tis winnowed, and then tied up in darkness and carried to the mill. "Is not this almost over?" cries the poor wheat. But 'tis poured into the hopper and ground to powder. Then 'tis pressed and packed, and that is not all. It is mixed with water; it is worked and kneaded; it is subjected to various rapid changes, and finally to the process of cutting and shaping into loaves. "Ah! shall I not rest now?" sighs the poor wheat. "Yes; now you may rest," says the baker; and forthwith shoves the loaf into a heated oven. When baked, and not till then, is it fit to be eaten; and is presented to the queen. If God intends to honor you by allowing you to honor him, he will lay you low, he will flail you, he will winnow you and grind you, he will knead and fashion you, and pass you through the fire; and then you will have discovered what it is needful to do with pride.—H. W. Beecher.

A Touching Incident.

A correspondent writing from Philadelphia to the Louisville Democrat, relates the following:

Whilst an aged and poorly clad female was asking alms at the corner of Fourth and Chestnut streets, a smart-looking young sailor passed within a few feet of her, gazing intently for several seconds on her haggard face. She approached him and extended her hand in silence. Instantly his hand found its way to his capacious pocket, and when he drew it out it was filled with gold and silver, while he forced her to accept, saying:

"There, good mother, take this, you may as well have it as the landsharks. The last cruise I had out of New York found me with $400 in hand; but, as the neighbors told me my old mother was dead, I got on a spree with the money, spent it all inside of a week, and then shipped again."

"Oh! good—good sir! you are too good to an old body like me. For your sake, I will take it. Oh! you remind me of my poor son, George, who shipped and was drowned. Oh! George—George White! where are you now?"

"George White!" hurriedly exclaimed the now excited sailor. "Why, that's my name!—you—you are my mother!" With this he seized her in his arms and caressed her affectionately whilst the big tears of joy ran down his bronzed cheeks. The poor woman was entirely overcome by the recovery of her lost child, and wept and groaned alternately. A carriage shortly after conveyed the mother and son away, leaving many a moistened eye among the crowd who witnessed the scene.

NARROWER—STILL NARROWER!—The narrow limit of the longest life is every day becoming narrower still. The story is told of an Italian state prisoner, who after some weeks' confinement became suddenly aware that his apartment was become smaller. He watched, and saw with horror that a movable iron wall was gradually encroaching on the space, and that as the movement came on, it must soon crush him to death, and he could calculate it to a day. But you have not that advantage. John Foster yet more appropriately resembles our time to a sealed reservoir, from which issues daily a certain small quantity of water, and when the reservoir is exhausted, we must perish of thirst; but we have no means of sounding it to ascertain how much it originally contained, nor whether there be enough remaining even for to-morrow.

They Shall Obtain Mercy.

If you find a man disposed to complain of the coldness of the world, be sure you will find that he has never brought anything into the world to warm it, but is a personal lump of ice set in the midst of it. If you find a man who complains that the world is all base and hollow, tap him, and he will probably sound base and hollow. And so, in the other way, a kind man will probably find kindness everywhere about him. The merciful man, as a general thing, will obtain mercy. He who has always had a kind excuse for others, who has looked at the brightest side of the case; he who has rendered his pardon and his help whenever he could, who has never brought his fellow man into any strait by reason of not helping him, will find that the mercy which he has bestowed flows back upon him in a full and spontaneous spring. He will make a merciful world by the mercy he himself shows.—Rev. E. H. Chapin.

Reading for Youth.

A Child's Confidence in her Father.

In the public school in Coates street, above Twelfth, in New York, one day last week, while the school was in session, a transom window fell out with a crash. By some means the cry of fire was raised, and a terrible panic ensued. The scholars rushed into the street in wild dismay. The alarm extended to the teachers also, one of whom, a young lady, actually jumped from the window. Among the hundreds of children with whom the building was crowded, was one girl, among the best in the school, who through all the frightful scene maintained entire composure. The color indeed forsook her cheek. Her lip quivered. The tears stood in her eyes. But she moved not.

After order had been restored, and her companions had been brought back to their places, the question was asked her, how she came to sit still, without apparent alarm, when every body else was in such a fright. 'My father,' said she, 'is a fireman, and knows what to do in such a case, and he told me, if there was an alarm of fire in the school, I must just sit still.' What a beautiful illustration of faith! 'My father told me so, and my father knows!' That is the gist of the whole matter—implicit unfaltering trust in our Heavenly Father.—Sunday School Times.

On Prayer.

Little folks, do you pray? When? Where? How often? How do you pray? With all your heart? Or is it formal, external, lip-service only? God requires the heart, all of it. Parents, teach your little ones to pray, bow the knee early, submissively. Begin at the early dawnings of life. Teach them to pour out their whole souls in fervent, persevering supplications—not only around the family altar morning and evening, but also in secret. Children should be taught closet-duty early, at the first audible lispings of infantile life; reading God's word, prayer and holy meditation. Little friends, hear this—heed this. Pray especially in the morning, tune your voices early in prayer and praise—say

Blessed Savior, thou hast kept me
From the dangers of the night,
Sleep and rest have well refreshed me,
Till the dawn of morning light.

Sure I am, thy love has done it:
Who but thou could shelter me,
Safe from sickness, fire and tempest,
When no human eye could see?

Nights of pain are long and weary;
Who with aching head could sleep?
Fevers, colds, and cruel toothache,
Keep our eyes awake to weep.

Thanks for quiet sleep and safety,
Thanks for pleasant sunlight ray;
Daily bread now kindly give me,
Keep me pure from sin to-day.

The Largest Half to God.

"Mother," asked a little boy, who was trying to make a good beginning of the new year, "how much of my spending money do you think I ought to give to God?" "I do not know," said his mother; "how much have you?" He opened his wallet and dropped it on the table, a gold dollar his grandmother gave him for a Christmas present, a three cent, and a five cent piece. "There's my gold dollar; I'll halve that, he said; "three cents and five cents are eight cents, and half of that is four. No. I'll give the largest half to God. I'll give half the dollar and the five cents." How many christians are following this child's example, and giving their largest half to God?

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Endure.

The true foundation laid,
Then build secure;
Endure,
Life's troubled waters wade.

Press, press the perfect arch,
And yet more sure;
Endure,
Though burdened is thy march.

The loyal heart quails not,
Its aim is pure;
Endure,
That sure may be thy lot.

The signal blaze in sight,
Naught may allure;
Endure;
The storm will end in light.

Anchorage within the vail,
Hope will insure;
Endure,
Though flesh and foe assail.

Wait! Victory is near;
Watch and be pure;
Endure,
But sin and self to fear.

Take up thy cross—be free;
All things adjure;
Endure,
When crowned, His glory see.

What Must Be Done?

We are living in ominous and perilous times. The dangers of the last days surround us. Without pretending to divine "the times and the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power"—without rashly speculating upon symbolic prophecies, without too definitely applying scripture to passing events,—without depending too largely upon doubtful indications, it is my settled conviction, from the great outlines of prophetic development, from the moral, religious and political aspects of the age, from the sum total of those things which go to give character and peculiarity to the times in which we are, that we are now verging on towards the close of this dispensation, the completion of this age, the coming of the Son of Man, the breaking of the day of God, the resurrection of the dead, the destruction of sinful nations and individuals, the renovation of the earth, and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom of God upon the earth.

In view of a crisis so tremendous, the common call of God to the sons of men seems to come to us with augmented forcedness. "Go work in my vineyard" is a solemn and important mandate to be heeded at all hours of the day, but how much more so at the eleventh! The shadows of coming doom are hastening about us. Night, dense, dark and terrible, is gathering on the distant skies,—we must work now or not at all. The age is astir. Nothing lags, but faith and righteousness. Satan is busy. Worldlings are busy. Sinners are busy.

The activities of this age are unparalleled in the experience of six thousand years. Earth's week is closing. The night cometh on—morning is beyond it; and the evening, and the morning that hath no night beyond it, are the conclusion of this state. O what a busy world! How the seething tide of humanity leaps and sways in the tumult of its power as it rolls restlessly on towards its ocean in the distance. God calls us to labor—to labor for him as men do for the meat that perisheth. To urge the restless strife; to agonize in the agony of faith; to overcome the world, the flesh and Satan.

Shall we heed God's call? There is another call. The people perish for lack of knowledge. They grope in darkness at noon-day. They are the blinded followers of sightless guides. They stumble, they fall, they perish! They call to us for light, for help, for bread! Thousands of earnest souls pray for light. Amid the far off dwellers in distant lands, amid the [illegible] activities of our own [illegible] the [illegible] upon our western prairies, [illegible] amid our new cities springing up as by magic in the wilderness, [illegible] across the [illegible] men, disgusted with priestcraft, bigotry and bondage, look heavenward and cry for light, light, more LIGHT!! It is not a single voice; but a deep, loud concord of mighty voices coming from every quarter and rushing on our ears like the sound of the whirlwinds of heaven.

Men and Brethren! Has God given us light? Do we read his word rightly? Do we discern the signs of the times? Are we looking for the day of God? What then is our duty in this case? Shall we fold our arms? Shall we turn money-seekers? Shall we mingle with the thoughtless herd, and smothering the light within us, rush madly down to ruin? What shall we do? What must be done? The harvest is great; the laborers are few, oh, how few! What must be done?

First, we must pray. Pray for help. The night before Christ chose the twelve apostles, he continued all night upon the mountain in prayer to God. Before he appointed the seventy, he said, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest." A praying church is the nursery of an holy ministry. You may put men through college, and they may come out lawyers, doctors or politicians; but let them be kept in the fire of God's love which is enkindled in answer to prayer, and they can not avoid doing the duty that God lays on them.

Ah! there needs to be more prayer. The reason why Bro. A, B, C, and D, sit so comfortably through the week and let the world rush pell-mell to perdition beside them is, there's no prayer and life in the church. The reason why the church is dead is, because there are three or four men in it that ought to be out on the hills hunting up lost sheep for Christ; but they have fought convictions, and grieved the Holy Ghost, and stifled conscience until God has left them, and some have fallen into sin, some have been led captive by lusts, some have been ensnared by Satan, some have gone to devouring one another, some are dry as gourds and have no feeling, no spirit and no life; and others are groaning and sighing, carrying in their bosoms hearts that feel heavy as lead and hot as fire, while every breeze that sweeps over them wails in their ears, "Woe! woe! woe! if I preach not the gospel!"

All have excuses in plenty. One is like Moses, slow of speech. But who made man's mouth? Can't He fill it? Another has no education. Well, educate yourself while in the work, as thousands have done before. Another has to work for a living. So did Paul; but he preached for all that. Another is a great sinner. Then you are just the man to hunt up others like yourself. Another makes blunders. Yes, and they hurt your pride more than anything else.

Now the sum, essence and substance of this whole batch of cavilling excuses is, a lack of the Holy Spirit, the love of God, and of an ardent desire to honor him and save men from perdition. The only way to argue these things down is by prayer. The only cure is a pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Ghost. O, how small these things look when a man walks near to God—when he trembles at God's word—when he feels it like fire within his bones and is weary of forbearing and cannot stay.

These excuses are the logic of backsliding. Prayer can dissipate them. Will we pray? O for the might of God—the unction of the Holy One to incite us to fervent prayer! Let but an united cry go up to the Lord of the harvest from those who wait for him from heaven, and I doubt not that an hundred men now denned up in worldliness, would spend the coming winter preaching the mighty word of God. But there is no travail in Zion, and no bringing forth of sons of thunder or of consolation.

The present ministers are not the most talented men of the age. The men that were ordained to preach last week, differ from others equally capable, that were weeping or trembling on the encampment, only in that they are not disobedient to the call of God. In almost every church you will find some poor, miserable, comfortless, discontented soul, restless as a cast-out demon, having neither pleasure, peace or prosperity, simply because he would not go at God's bidding and preach the word of the Lord. Such men are a curse to the church forever. They are out of place. God knows where they belonged, but they wouldn't go there. So they are in everybody's way, and some of them turn worldly—others try to shun this danger and make money do their duty for them, but still God says, "To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than [illegible]

Brethren, let us pray. Let us pray for these [illegible] God; to thrust them [illegible] they work, [illegible] God [illegible] that have trod the paths of sin, that know the windings of the downward way, and can hunt out and lead back the wayward wanderers there. O, for a taking hold upon God's promises—a calling on him for help. O, for a crying mightily unto the Lord for his Holy Spirit to rest upon the people. Then the love of Christ will constrain many to awake to obedience and to duty. May God hasten the day. Amen.

"The Record that God gave of his Son."—1 John 5: 10.

Is it true that the Bible is a record? This we are plainly told by the Apostle; and by examining the record we find certain requirements with which we are to comply, in order to obtain eternal life. We are told in this record, in very plain language, the way to obtain an entrance into the kingdom of our ever blessed Savior, and how to ensure a mansion in the house of our heavenly Father, when he shall come to receive us unto himself. In this record we may find all needful directions as to the way to that beautiful country—the climate—its inhabitants, and all that will make it desirable and lovely. Then, like wise servants, let us examine the record, and know for ourselves what it contains; as it is our guide, we may find all the information necessary for us to have, that we may receive the portion willed to us by the Father, through his eternal Son. As there has been a will made and recorded in this Book, we may find what its provisions are; as everything that is necessary is plainly specified; and if we would examine it with the same minuteness that we do a record when we are to purchase a farm, to gain an undoubted title, and know all its bounds,—we shall find that it contains ample information, so that we need not resort to tradition to know our whereabouts: the record is not mysterious, as some tell us, but is so plain that a wayfaring man need not err therein. Then why should any one with this record before him be misled as many are? They follow vain philosophy, the fruits of imagination, with which a false doctrine is proclaimed, and being popular because its advocates have the reputation of great minds; yet with all their greatness, their wisdom, compared with the Record, is nought but foolishness.

An example of this I have on hand, coming from a certain D. D., in relation to a letter of inquiry, asking of him information concerning baptism. The questions asked were for the purpose of getting the truth upon the subject, sincerely hoping he would give clear and satisfactory answers to the same. We will see how near he has come to the record. The questions were, first, What does "buried with him by baptism" mean?—Rom. 6: 4; and Col. 2: 12; "buried with him in baptism?" Second, Is baptism essential or not? An explanation was requested of the following passages; Mark 16: 16; Eph. 4: 5; 1 Pet. 3: 21. For reply, in the first place he says, "If immersion be preferred, the individual had better join the Baptists." Second, as to the texts—"The Apostle was not treating of baptism; and if buried is an emblem of baptism, the subjects ought to stay under water." He adds, "of one thing I am certain, the mode of baptism is non-essential."

So much for the wisdom of what the Orthodox in these parts call wise. It appears to me when Orthodoxy has become so sickly, as manifested in the above answer by one of her prominent representatives, it is high time their divinity should be doctored and nursed by sounder heads and more loving hearts. The time has truly come when every one should take heed to the Record and see if these things are so, that we may not be found giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, neither following the commandments of men; for we most assuredly have a "sure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well that we take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn."

We are living in an age when the exhortation comes as it were in thunder tones, "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always; that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.

Labor and Result.

"And the same day were added unto them about three thousand souls." Acts 2: 41.

"They must have had some powerful preaching on the day of Pentecost," says one. "Why?" "Because it produced such an effect." Very logical. There must truly be some power to produce such an effect. But there is no mathematical ratio between labor or effort, and effect. In other words, great efforts do not always produce great results, nor are slight efforts always followed by small results. We read of Gideon's army with their pitchers and lamps; and of Jonathan and his armor-bearer routing the Philistines.

There was no proportion in those instances between human effort and the result that followed. And yet, we are apt to think that there must be a tremendous effort on our part in order to produce a very great effect. As though we were the sole cause—machinery, motive power, and all. Doesn't God do anything now-a-days? Or is he so far off that men must shout and cry after him all day and all night, and exercise themselves as the prophets of Baal did, in order to gain a hearing, or make him propitious? How long will men not "cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?" This manufactured religion is generally most apparent during seasons of revival. Now, God is just as ready to work at one time as another, and why these spasmodic efforts? Devoted christians have often wished that a more continued and steady revival interest might be felt, instead of this intermittent flow. And the christian's heart too is pained to see the real result of these revival seasons, which generally develops itself about six months afterwards. I refer to the backsliding of the converts. Yet, the adherence of one or two faithful ones proves that some of the work was of God, and, not wishing to condemn that which resulted in some good, they conclude that God works in a mysterious way; and somebody should have caused the word to read "where grace abounded sin did much more abound."

Truth is simple and easily understood, if men will only begin at the right place to study it. It is mathematical, and better begin to study in Addition than Conic Sections. And this is the simple truth concerning most all revival operations. The Lord began to work in a quiet way, and increased the glow in a few faithful hearts, and it warmed one or two others. Immediately men took the work in hand, and bonfires were lighted which cast the Lord's work all in the shade. Their object was to make a great blaze, thinking this would prove to all that there was much heat. But it takes something besides mere blaze to soften stone, and we read of "stony hearts." Thus men labored night and day until they were overwrought and exhausted, and were forced to rest. Then their fires went down, and what appeared in the cinders was the same old stony hearts, harder and blacker than ever. And so the revival closed. Now there was no need of all this. Let the Lord's Spirit lead, and men follow closely on, rather than men push on so far ahead that they must shout back to the Lord to keep pace. Let the amount of labor be in keeping with the amount of the Spirit already given, and then God will increase it at our need or request, and a steady revival feeling will be the result. "But, would'nt you have an awakening occasionally?" Yes; and I'll tell you how it is produced. We, in Bakerville, know something about this. Just let Satan go to work afresh if you want to see an awakening.

There is as much difference between a "steady revival feeling" and an "awakening," as there is between the situation of a "foraging party" and a "beseiged party." One uses only small arms, while the other uses cannon and Paixhan guns. And an "awakening" creates some noise, I'll assure you. What a glorious one we'll have by and by, brethren and sisters!! I apprehend it will be the "grand finale" of Creation's sorrows.

Again; we are apt to think if we see a desirable effect, it is proof that the Lord blesses the effort, and if there is no visible effect the Lord is not in the work. The first part of this proposition may be true, for all good comes from God, but the last part I dissent from. How was it with Noah? He preached 120 years, and then went into the ark without a convert. Suppose he had followed out the above proposition. Seeing none converted, he would have concluded God had not sent him to preach, or to build the ark either, and would have quit both. But it was God's command after all, and faith in it, led to his salvation. Therefore, we should not judge of the Lord's appreciation of our efforts in doing good by the immediate consequences manifest to us. Our inquiry should be, "what has God commanded?" instead of, "what will be the result?" The reason why we look at the effect more than the command is, because we attribute too much importance to our own efforts. We don't have an "eye single to the glory of God." We go into the work, not merely because the Lord requires it, but because we want to exult in the work after it is accomplished. We rather have men say, "see what has been done," than to have the Lord say, "good and faithful servant."

"But the Lord requires some effort on our part." So he does; and, brethren, let us see that we make the very effort he requires, no more and no less, and then, whether we shout or sing, laugh or cry, pray or preach, God's name will be magnified, and "where sin abounded grace will much more abound." To the Pilgrim.

Tremblingly, tremblingly,
Pilgrim, press on,
Dangers thou 'lt meet
Till thy journey is done;
Foes are before thee,
And close in the rear,
Ever be wary—
Move onward with fear.

Trustingly, trustingly,
He who is high,
Mighty in power,
With His all-seeing eye
Watches thy foot-steps,
And heareth thy call
For aid in all dangers,
And shieldeth from all.

Hopefully, hopefully,
Pilgrim, move on,
Soon with these trials
And foes thou'lt have done;
Peace doth await thee
On Canaan's bright shore,
Rest—when the conflict
And peril are o'er. A. C. J.

Westford Campmeeting.

BRO. GRANT:—I will write some of the good things connected with our Westford campmeeting just closed. The grove in which we assembled is one of the most delightful in the state, well situated for a meeting, being within five minutes' walk of the depot. There is also a fine stream of water running close by, and two good wells of water on the ground, giving plenty of water for a large meeting. Also there are two houses on the ground, twenty by fifteen, which are very convenient for cooking and sleeping. The village is close by, where the people are very hospitable, ready to render any assistance to make all comfortable, so that those who do not wish to sleep on the ground, in tents, can find accommodation near. These considerations make this place one of the best for a campmeeting I have ever seen.

Providence smiled, giving us exceeding pleasant weather through the week. Our meeting was not large, nevertheless it was a good one. Saturday, and especially Sunday, brought a large gathering. Throughout the entire meeting all were quiet and orderly, much to the credit of the citizens generally.

Our meetings commenced by preaching from the stand, by Bro. Ross, succeeded in the afternoon by Bro. M. Chandler from the West. Bro. J. B. Cook preached in the evening. Preaching three times, with three prayer and conference meetings, was the daily order of the meeting.

Brn. J. S. White, J. B. Cook, J. Couch, W. Pratt, A. Ross, Eld. Lathan. M. Chandler, J. D. Brown, B. P. Manning, and H. Munger were with us, rendering efficient service in dividing the word of truth.

The preaching was timely, being both dispensational and practical, and well calculated to incite us all to double diligence, not only in making our calling and election sure, but to make more efficient efforts for the salvation of sinners. The prayer meetings were rather dull and formal to commence with, but the interest increased, and the warming influence of the Holy Spirit was found to be among us. Many were quickened, and some reclaimed; thus renewing their determinations to be faithful and live better in the future. In short, there was a goodly company together, whose hearts were made to rejoice by the signs of a soon coming Lord. The truths that identify us as a body of believers were freely and faithfully preached, and although there might be differences of opinion, harmony and love prevailed, showing clearly that christian faith and love will bind together and make one.

The meeting was so successful, the harmony so endearing, and the place so desirable, that the brethren came together and resolved, if God should continue the Lord's [illegible] willing, we would hold another campmeeting next August, on the same ground, [illegible] a committee [illegible] to carry the same into effect. [illegible] inconsistent with our faith, but most of those who fully believe and strongly desire that the Lord may soon come, have come to the conclusion that the definite time to be approached by prophetic periods is somewhat uncertain, and will be till we arrive to the Advent.

This is an important time when all should be alive, waiting, watching, praying and toiling to let their light shine, that others may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

The Maine Conference of Adventists

Met according to appointment, in Yarmouth, Sept. 15th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. The first interview was devoted to prayer and social worship. In the evening, Eld. Wm. Mitchell preached a good sermon on Mark 14: 8: "She hath done what she could." Friday morning at 8 o'clock, the ministers met for consultation. At 9, the conference was called to order by the secretary, and, after prayer was offered, stated that the chairman, Eld. T. Smith, could not attend the conference, owing to the illness of his family, and another should be called; when Eld. H. B. Sevey was chosen, and took the chair. Business being then called for, I. C. Wellcome gave his views of a plan for evangelizing, remarking that there were other worthy brethren who feared to act on such a system as does this conference because we adopt a system not detailed in Bible language, but use our judgment with the scripture accounts of church order and action, adopting the most proper means we know, to gain the object of united action, while those brethren ask for a Bible precedent for all business acts connected with our meetings.

Eld R. R. York then presented his ideas of another plan to prosecute the work desired by us all. An interesting discussion then took place in which Brn. York, Wellcome, Partridge, Howard, Haggett, C. F. Hudson, (who had a seat with us) and others, took part. The remainder of the morning was spent in prayer and social worship, which was a blessed season to many.

At 2 o'clock, Bro. C. F. Hudson preached a good practical sermon, after which the conference resumed their business. A motion was put to see whether the conference would adopt Bro. Wellcome's plan of operations, or that of Bro. York. They adopted the former, and chose I. C. Wellcome, J. Partridge, and C. F. Hudson, to draft the plan for the consideration and action of the conference. In the evening, Eld. Sevey preached a good discourse.

Saturday morning, met at 7 1-2 o'clock, and spent a profitable season in prayer. At 9, the conference was opened, and the report of the Committee called for, when the following was presented:

REPORT.

"Brethren, Beloved in the Lord: Being assembled in conference, and surveying our field of labors and the instrumentalities which it seems to us ought to be employed in the spread of the truth, and believing that christian charity extends its aid to the wants of communities abroad, as well as at home; we therefore decide to make an effort to sustain one or more evangelists to preach the gospel of the kingdom in new fields and destitute places. To do which we propose to choose a committee of three, the foreman of which shall be secretary and treasurer, and act in concert with the others, to correspond with the churches, with ministers, and other persons, to employ evangelists, to receive all money and donations for that object, and to disburse the same in the support of such men as they employ, and report all their doings to the annual conference, who shall inspect the same. The majority of said committee shall be lay brethren. All said evangelists shall report the character and wants of this mission, and receive contributions, or subscriptions for the same, and report all their labors and receipts to the committee. We recommend, also, that all the ministers solicit and take subscriptions and donations for this work, and deliver all such to the treasurer."

The report was accepted, and, on motion for its adoption, a very spirited and pleasant discussion followed by several brethren, after which, it was adopted. In pursuance of the above, a committee was chosen, composed of the following brethren: I. C. Wellcome, Geo. Humphrey, Ralph Herley.

Conference then voted that the doings of its present session be prepared and sent to the Advent Herald, and the World's Crisis for publication; and adjourned its business session to meet in A. D. 1860, at the call of the chairman and secretary. At 2 o'clock, P. M., Eld. L. [illegible] [illegible] I. C. Wellcome preached. [illegible]

Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, we met for prayer and conference, and the Lord gave us an abundant blessing, so that I think all could say "It is good for us to be here." At 11 o'clock, Eld. Sevey gave us an excellent discourse. At 2 P. M., Bro. Hudson gave another on, "All things are yours." In the evening, Eld. E. M. Haggett preached on "steadfastness," which was listened to with great attention by a very crowded audience.

Thus closed another conference, which was one of the excellent kind. Love, unity, activity, harmony and determination characterized it. The brethren and sisters were blessed and strengthened, and a very serious impression rested on all who attended, which seemed to say, "these things are so." We do not doubt but God will bring much good out of this conference. We found it hard to part, but the blessed hope we enjoy of soon meeting all the saints in the immortal state, when Jesus comes, gave us sweet consolation. During the meeting about $25 were contributed and subscribed for the mission, to help fill the state of Maine with this doctrine. Others can do likewise. Let us work while the day lasts, then enter the "Rest that remains for the people of God."

No Resurrection!

"Crown'd in glory! Crown'd in glory!"

So exclaimed a minister a few days since, while preaching a funeral discourse over one of his church members; speaking in regard to the death of a fellow minister of his acquaintance, who, in the last struggles of dissolving nature, while his friends stood around his bed eager to catch the last accents from his lips, raised his hands and eyes to heaven and whispered, "Crown'd in glory! Crown'd in glory!" His departing spirit had got near enough, he said, to see that the crown was being placed upon his head, and so communicated the glorious intelligence just as it left! O, absurdity! O, false doctrine!

When will ministers of the gospel study to know, be willing to believe and preach the truths of God's word? How I longed to speak out and ask him to tell me when and where did the resurrection take place, or if this be true, why need there be any? No resurrection? thought I, no resurrection? it is wholly lost sight of—it is finally preached away. Ah, sir, your preaching is vain, and your faith is also vain. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

If, as the minister said, they are crowned in glory, with such haste as to be able to whisper it to the living just as they are leaving, how can it be true what Paul says, that they are perished without a resurrection? Certainly, one or the other must be wrong.—Again, the Revelator says, "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me." Now if the crown be the reward of the righteous, or a part of it, they have received it at death, if this theory be true, without waiting for the coming of the Just One. The Scriptures plainly teach everywhere that the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead are events to which the christian should ever look as the consummation of his hope, without which his faith and hope are vain.

Let me have and believe the plain truths of God's word rather than the fables and doctrines of men. Though I was early taught and believed the same doctrine till recently, yet I now rejoice in God that the true light has come, and that He ever gave me strength of mind and courage sufficient to believe and acknowledge the same. Brethren and sisters in Christ, it is all important that we, as well as they who preach the word, study and search diligently for truth, and then firmly, yet meekly, stand up in its defence. Though it may (it has already) subject us to reproach and contempt, yet what of all this? Was it not Jesus, the blessed suffering Son of God, endured for us that we might have eternal life? If we do meet with a cold, indifferent look from those who once warmly and affectionately grasped our hand and welcomed us, [illegible] and we [illegible] place where to weep [illegible] is it not enough that the disciple be as his Lord? He [illegible] received him not. [illegible] the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." [illegible]

What Must Be Done?

We are living in ominous and perilous times. The dangers of the last days surround us. Without pretending to divine "the times and the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power"—without rashly speculating upon symbolic prophecies, without too definitely applying scripture to passing events,—without depending too largely upon doubtful indications, it is my settled conviction, from the great outlines of prophetic development, from the moral, religious and political aspects of the age, from the sum total of those things which go to give character and peculiarity to the times in which we are, that we are now verging on towards the close of this dispensation, the completion of this age, the coming of the Son of Man, the breaking of the day of God, the resurrection of the dead, the destruction of sinful nations and individuals, the renovation of the earth, and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom of God upon the earth.

In view of a crisis so tremendous, the common call of God to the sons of men seems to come to us with augmented forcedness. "Go work in my vineyard" is a solemn and important mandate to be heeded at all hours of the day, but how much more so at the eleventh! The shadows of coming doom are hastening about us. Night, dense, dark and terrible, is gathering on the distant skies,—we must work now or not at all. The age is astir. Nothing lags, but faith and righteousness. Satan is busy. Worldlings are busy. Sinners are busy.

The activities of this age are unparalleled in the experience of six thousand years. Earth's week is closing. The night comes on—morning is beyond it; and the evening, and the morning that hath no night beyond it, are the conclusion of this state. O what a busy world! How the seething tide of humanity leaps and sways in the tumult of its power as it rolls restlessly on towards its ocean in the distance. God calls us to labor—to labor for him as men do for the meat that perisheth. To urge the restless strife; to agonize in the agony of faith; to overcome the world, the flesh and Satan.

Shall we heed God's call? There is another call. The people perish for lack of knowledge. They grope in darkness at noon-day. They are the blinded followers of sightless guides. They stumble, they fall, they perish! They call to us for light, for help, for bread! Thousands of earnest souls pray for light. Amid the far-off dwellers in distant lands, amid the [illegible] activities of our own communities, [illegible] [illegible] men, disgusted with priestcraft, bigotry and bondage, look heavenward and cry for light, light, more LIGHT!! It is not a single voice, but a deep, loud concord of mighty voices coming from every quarter and rushing on our ears like the sound of the whirlwinds of heaven.

Men and Brethren! Has God given us light? Do we read his word rightly? Do we discern the signs of the times? Are we looking for the day of God? What then is our duty in this case? Shall we fold our arms? Shall we turn money-seekers? Shall we mingle with the thoughtless herd, and, smothering the light within us, rush madly down to ruin? What shall we do? What must be done? The harvest is great; the laborers are few, oh, how few! What must be done?

First, we must pray. Pray for help. The night before Christ chose the twelve apostles, he continued all night upon the mountain in prayer to God. Before he appointed the seventy, he said, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest." A praying church is the nursery of an holy ministry. You may put men through college, and they may come out lawyers, doctors or politicians; but let them be kept in the fire of God's love which is enkindled in answer to prayer, and they can not avoid doing the duty that God lays on them.

Ah! there needs to be more prayer. The reason why Bro. A, B, C, and D, sit so comfortably through the week and let the world rush pell-mell to perdition beside them is, there's no prayer and life in the church. The reason why the church is dead is, because there are three or four men in it that ought to be out on the hills hunting up lost sheep for Christ; but they have fought convictions, and grieved the Holy Ghost, and stifled conscience until God has left them, and some have fallen into sin, some have been led captive by lusts, some have been ensnared by Satan, some have gone to devouring one another, some are dry as gourds and have no feeling, no spirit and no life; and others are groaning and sighing, carrying in their bosoms hearts that feel heavy as lead and hot as fire, while every breeze that sweeps over them wails in their ears, "Woe! woe! woe! if I preach not the gospel!"

All have excuses in plenty. One is like Moses, slow of speech. But who made man's mouth? Can't He fill it? Another has no education. Well, educate yourself while in the work, as thousands have done before. Another has to work for a living. So did Paul; but he preached for all that. Another is a great sinner. Then you are just the man to hunt up others like yourself. Another makes blunders. Yes, and they hurt your pride more than anything else.

Now the sum, essence and substance of this whole batch of cavilling excuses is, a lack of the Holy Spirit, the love of God, and of an ardent desire to honor him and save men from perdition. The only way to argue these things down is by prayer. The only cure is a pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Ghost. O, how small these things look when a man walks near to God—when he trembles at God's word—when he feels it like fire within his bones and is weary of forbearing and cannot stay.

These excuses are the logic of backsliding. Prayer can dissipate them. Will we pray? O for the might of God—the unction of the Holy One to incite us to fervent prayer! Let but an united cry go up to the Lord of the harvest from those who wait for him from heaven, and I doubt not that an hundred men now denned up in worldliness, would spend the coming winter preaching the mighty word of God. But there is no travail in Zion, and no bringing forth of sons of thunder or of consolation.

The present ministers are not the most talented men of the age. The men that we ordained to preach last week, differ from others equally capable, that were weeping or trembling on the encampment, only in that they are not disobedient to the call of God. In almost every church you will find some poor, miserable, comfortless, discontented soul, restless as a cast-out demon, having neither pleasure, peace or prosperity, simply because he would not go at God's bidding and preach the word of the Lord. Such men are a curse to the church forever. They are out of place. God knew where they belonged, but they wouldn't go there. So they are in everybody's way, and some of them turn worldly—others try [illegible] [illegible] this danger and make money do their duty for them, but still God says, "To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams." [illegible] that have trod the paths of sin, that know the windings of the downward way, and can hunt out and lead back the wayward wanderers there. O, for a taking hold upon God's promises—a calling on him for help. O, for a crying mightily unto the Lord for his Holy Spirit to rest upon the people. Then the love of Christ will constrain many to awake to obedience and to duty. May God hasten the day. Amen.

"The Record that God gave of his Son."—1 John 5:10.

Is it true that the Bible is a record? This we are plainly told by the Apostle; and by examining the record we find certain requirements with which we are to comply, in order to obtain eternal life. We are told in this record, in very plain language, the way to obtain an entrance into the kingdom of our ever blessed Savior, and how to ensure a mansion in the house of our heavenly Father, when he shall come to receive us unto himself. In this record we may find all needful directions as to the way to that beautiful country—the climate—its inhabitants, and all that will make it desirable and lovely. Then, like wise servants, let us examine the record, and know for ourselves what it contains; as it is our guide, we may find all the information necessary for us to have, that we may receive the portion willed to us by the Father, through his eternal Son. As there has been a will made and recorded in this Book, we may find what its provisions are; as everything that is necessary is plainly specified; and if we would examine it with the same minuteness that we do a record when we are to purchase a farm, to gain an undoubted title, and know all its bounds,—we shall find that it contains ample information, so that we need not resort to tradition to know our whereabouts: the record is not mysterious, as some tell us, but is so plain that a wayfaring man need not err therein. Then why should any one with this record before him be misled as many are? They follow vain philosophy, the fruits of imagination, with which a false doctrine is proclaimed, and being popular because its advocates have the reputation of great minds; yet with all their greatness, their wisdom, compared with the Record, is nought but foolishness.

An example of this I have on hand, coming from a certain D. D., in relation to a letter of inquiry, asking of him information concerning baptism. The questions asked were for the purpose of getting the truth upon the subject, sincerely hoping he would give clear and satisfactory answers to the same. We will see how near he has come to the record. The questions were, first, What does "buried with him by baptism" mean?—Rom. 6:4; and Col. 2:12; "buried with him in baptism?" Second, Is baptism essential or not? An explanation was requested of the following passages; Mark 16:16; Eph. 4:5; 1 Pet. 3:21. For reply, in the first place he says, "If immersion be preferred, the individual had better join the Baptists." Second, as to the texts—"The Apostle was not treating of baptism; and if buried is an emblem of baptism, the subjects ought to stay under water." He adds, "of one thing I am certain, the mode of baptism is non-essential."

So much for the wisdom of what the Orthodox in these parts call wise. It appears to me when Orthodoxy has become so sickly, as manifested in the above answer by one of her prominent representatives, it is high time their divinity should be doctored and nursed by sounder heads and more loving hearts. The time has truly come when every one should take heed to the Record and see if these things are so, that we may not be found giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, neither following the commandments of men; for we most assuredly have a "sure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well that we take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn."

We are living in an age when the exhortation comes as it were in thunder tones, "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always; that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.

And yet, we are apt to think that there must be a tremendous effort on our part in order to produce a very great effect. As though we were the sole cause—machinery, motive power, and all. Doesn't God do anything now-a-days? Or is he so far off that men must shout and cry after him all day and all night, and exercise themselves as the prophets of Baal did, in order to gain a hearing, or make him propitious? How long will men not "cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?" This manufactured religion is generally most apparent during seasons of revival. Now, God is just as ready to work at one time as another, and why these spasmodic efforts? Devoted christians have often wished that a more continued and steady revival interest might be felt, instead of this intermittent flow. And the christian's heart too is pained to see the real result of these revival seasons, which generally develops itself about six months afterwards. I refer to the backsliding of the converts. Yet, the adherence of one or two faithful ones proves that some of the work was of God, and, not wishing to condemn that which resulted in some good, they conclude that God works in a mysterious way; and somebody should have caused the word to read "where grace abounded sin did much more abound."

Truth is simple and easily understood, if men will only begin at the right place to study it. It is mathematical, and better begin to study in Addition than Conic Sections. And this is the simple truth concerning most all revival operations. The Lord began to work in a quiet way, and increased the glow in a few faithful hearts, and it warmed one or two others. Immediately men took the work in hand, and bonfires were lighted which cast the Lord's work all in the shade. Their object was to make a great blaze, thinking this would prove to all that there was much heat. But it takes something besides mere blaze to soften stone, and we read of "stony hearts." Thus men labored night and day until they were overwrought and exhausted, and were forced to rest. Then their fires went down, and what appeared in the cinders was the same old stony hearts, harder and blacker than ever. And so the revival closed. Now there was no need of all this. Let the Lord's Spirit lead, and men follow closely on, rather than men push on so far ahead that they must shout back to the Lord to keep pace. Let the amount of labor be in keeping with the amount of the Spirit already given, and then God will increase it at our need or request, and a steady revival feeling will be the result. "But, wouldn't you have an awakening occasionally?" Yes; and I'll tell you how it is produced. We, in Bakerville, know something about this. Just let Satan go to work afresh if you want to see an awakening.

There is as much difference between a "steady revival feeling" and an "awakening," as there is between the situation of a "foraging party" and a "beseiged party." One uses only small arms, while the other uses cannon and Paixhan guns. And an "awakening" creates some noise, I'll assure you. What a glorious one we'll have by and by, brethren and sisters!! I apprehend it will be the "grand finale" of Creation's sorrows.

Again; we are apt to think if we see a desirable effect, it is proof that the Lord blesses the effort, and if there is no visible effect the Lord is not in the work. The first part of this proposition may be true, for all good comes from God, but the last part I dissent from. How was it with Noah? He preached 120 years, and then went into the ark without a convert. Suppose he had followed out the above proposition. Seeing none converted, he would have concluded God had not sent him to preach, or to build the ark either, and would have quit both. But it was God's [illegible] be, "what has God commanded?" instead of, "what will be the result?" The reason why we look at the effect more than the command is, because we attribute too much importance to our own efforts. We don't have an "eye single to the glory of God." We go into the work, not merely because the Lord requires it, but because we want to exult in the work after it is accomplished. We rather have men say, "see what has been done," than to have the Lord say, "good and faithful servant."

"But the Lord requires some effort on our part." So he does; and, brethren, let us see that we make the very effort he requires, no more and no less, and then, whether we shout or sing, laugh or cry, pray or preach, God's name will be magnified, and "where sin abounded grace will much more abound."

For the Crisis.

To the Pilgrim.

Tremblingly, tremblingly,
Pilgrim, press on,
Dangers thou 'lt meet
Till thy journey is done;
Foes are before thee,
And close in the rear,
Ever be wary—
Move onward with fear.

Trustingly, trustingly,
He who is high,
Mighty in power,
With His all-seeing eye
Watches thy foot-steps,
And heareth thy call
For aid in all dangers,
And shieldeth from all.

Hopefully, hopefully,
Pilgrim, move on,
Soon with these trials
And foes thou'lt have done;
Peace doth await thee
On Canaan's bright shore,
Rest—when the conflict
And peril are o'er.

Westford Campmeeting.

Bro. Grant:—I will write some of the good things connected with our Westford campmeeting just closed. The grove in which we assembled is one of the most delightful in the state, well situated for a meeting, being within five minutes' walk of the depot. There is also a fine stream of water running close by, and two good wells of water on the ground, giving plenty of water for a large meeting. Also there are two houses on the ground, twenty by fifteen, which are very convenient for cooking and sleeping. The village is close by, where the people are very hospitable, ready to render any assistance to make all comfortable, so that those who do not wish to sleep on the ground, in tents, can find accommodation near. These considerations make this place one of the best for a campmeeting I have ever seen.

Providence smiled, giving us exceeding pleasant weather through the week. Our meeting was not large, nevertheless it was a good one. Saturday, and especially Sunday, brought a large gathering. Throughout the entire meeting all were quiet and orderly, much to the credit of the citizens generally.

Our meetings commenced by preaching from the stand, by Bro. Ross, succeeded in the afternoon by Bro. M. Chandler from the West. Bro. J. B. Cook preached in the evening. Preaching three times, with three prayer and conference meetings, was the daily order of the meeting.

Brn. J. S. White, J. B. Cook, J. Couch, W. Pratt, A. Ross, Eld. Lathan, M. Chandler, J. D. Brown, B. P. Manning and H. Munger were with us, rendering efficient service in dividing the word of truth.

The preaching was timely, being both dispensational and practical, and well calculated to incite us all to double diligence, not only in making our calling and election sure, but to make more efficient efforts for the salvation of sinners. The prayer meetings were rather dull and formal to commence with, but the interest increased, and the warming influence of the Holy Spirit was found to be among us. Many were quickened, and some reclaimed; thus renewing their determinations to be faithful and live better in the future. In short, there was a goodly company together, whose hearts were made to rejoice by the signs of a soon coming Lord. The truths that identify us as a body of believers were freely and faithfully preached, and although there might be differences of opinion, harmony and love prevailed, showing clearly that christian faith and love will bind together and make one.

The meeting was so successful, the harmony so endearing, and the place so desirable, the brethren came together and resolved, if the Lord should continue the [illegible] inconsistent with our faith, but most of those who fully believe and strongly desire that the Lord may soon come, have come to the conclusion that the definite time to be approached by prophetic periods is somewhat uncertain, and will be till we arrive to the Advent.

This is an important time when all should be alive, waiting, watching, praying and toiling to let their light shine, that others may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

The Maine Conference of Adventists.

Met according to appointment, in Yarmouth, Sept. 15th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. The first interview was devoted to prayer and social worship. In the evening, Eld. Wm. Mitchell preached a good sermon on Mark 14:8: "She hath done what she could." Friday morning at 8 o'clock, the ministers met for consultation. At 9, the conference was called to order by the secretary, and, after prayer was offered, stated that the chairman, Eld. T. Smith, could not attend the conference, owing to the illness of his family, and another should be called; when Eld. H. B. Sevey was chosen, and took the chair. Business being then called for, I. C. Wellcome gave his views of a plan for evangelizing, remarking that there were other worthy brethren who feared to act on such a system as does this conference because we adopt a system not detailed in Bible language, but use our judgment with the scripture accounts of church order and action, adopting the most proper means we know, to gain the object of united action, while those brethren ask for a Bible precedent for all business acts connected with our meetings.

Eld R. R. York then presented his ideas of another plan to prosecute the work desired by us all. An interesting discussion then took place in which Brn. York, Wellcome, Partridge, Howard, Haggett, C. F. Hudson, (who had a seat with us) and others, took part. The remainder of the morning was spent in prayer and social worship, which was a blessed season to many.

At 2 o'clock, Bro. C. F. Hudson preached a good practical sermon, after which the conference resumed their business. A motion was put to see whether the conference would adopt Bro. Wellcome's plan of operations, or that of Bro. York. They adopted the former, and chose I. C. Wellcome, J. Partridge, and C. F. Hudson, to draft the plan for the consideration and action of the conference. In the evening, Eld. Sevey preached a good discourse.

Saturday morning, met at 7 1-2 o'clock, and spent a profitable season in prayer. At 9, the conference was opened, and the report of the Committee called for, when the following was presented:

REPORT.

"Brethren, Beloved in the Lord: Being assembled in conference, and surveying our field of labors and the instrumentalities which it seems to us ought to be employed in the spread of the truth, and believing that christian charity extends its aid to the wants of communities abroad, as well as at home; we therefore decide to make an effort to sustain one or more evangelists to preach the gospel of the kingdom in new fields and destitute places. To do which we propose to choose a committee of three, the foreman of which shall be secretary and treasurer, and act in concert with the others, to correspond with the churches, with ministers, and other persons, to employ evangelists, to receive all money and donations for that object, and to disburse the same in the support of such men as they employ, and report all their doings to the annual conference, who shall inspect the same. The majority of said committee shall be lay brethren. All said evangelists shall report the character and wants of this mission, and receive contributions, or subscriptions for the same, and report all their labors and receipts to the committee. We recommend, also, that all the ministers solicit and take subscriptions and donations for this work, and deliver all such to the treasurer."

The report was accepted, and, on motion for its adoption, a very spirited and pleasant discussion followed by several brethren, after which it was adopted. In pursuance of the above, a committee was chosen, composed of the following brethren: I. C. Wellcome, Geo. Humphrey, Ralph Harley. Conference then voted that the doings of its present session be prepared and sent to the Advent Herald, and the World's Crisis for publication, and adjourned its business session to meet in A. D. 1860, at the call of the chairman and secretary. [illegible]

Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, we met for prayer and conference, and the Lord granted us an abundant blessing, so that all could say "It is good for us to be here." At 11 o'clock, Eld. Sevey gave us an excellent discourse. At 2 P. M., Bro. Hutchinson gave another on, "All things are yours." In the evening, Eld. E. M. Haggett preached on "steadfastness," which was listened to with great attention by a very crowded audience.

Thus closed another conference, which was one of the excellent kind. Love, unanimity, activity, harmony, and determination characterized it. The brethren and sisters were blessed and strengthened, and a very serious impression rested on all, who attended, which seemed to say, "these things are so." We do not doubt but God will bring much good out of this conference. We found it hard to part, but the blessed hope we enjoy of soon meeting all the saints in the immortal state, when Jesus comes, gave us sweet consolation. During the meeting about $25 were contributed and subscribed for the mission, to help fill the state of Maine with this doctrine. Others can do likewise. Let us work while the day lasts, then enter the "Rest that remains for the people of God."

No Resurrection!

"Crown'd in glory! Crown'd in glory!"

So exclaimed a minister a few days since, while preaching a funeral discourse over one of his church members; speaking in regard to the death of a fellow minister of his acquaintance, who, in the last struggles of dissolving nature, while his friends stood around his bed eager to catch the last accents from his lips, raised his hands and eyes to heaven and whispered, "Crown'd in glory! Crown'd in glory!" His departing spirit had got near enough, he said, to see that the crown was being placed upon his head, and so communicated the glorious intelligence just as it left! O, absurdity! O, false doctrine!

When will ministers of the gospel study to know, be willing to believe and preach the truths of God's word? How I longed to speak out and ask him to tell me when and where did the resurrection take place, or if this be true, why need there be any? No resurrection? thought I, no resurrection? it is wholly lost sight of—it is finally preached away. Ah, sir, your preaching is vain, and your faith is also vain. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

If, as the minister said, they are crowned in glory, with such haste as to be able to whisper it to the living just as they are leaving, how can it be true what Paul says, that they are perished without a resurrection? Certainly, one or the other must be wrong.—Again, the Revelator says, "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me." Now if the crown be the reward of the righteous, or a part of it, they have received it at death, if this theory be true, without waiting for the coming of the Just One. The Scriptures plainly teach everywhere that the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead are events to which the christian should ever look as the consummation of his hope, without which his faith and hope are vain.

Let me have and believe the plain truths of God's word rather than the fables and doctrines of men. Though I was early taught and believed the same doctrine till recently, yet I now rejoice in God that the true light has come, and that He ever gave me strength of mind and courage sufficient to believe and acknowledge the same. Brethren and sisters in Christ, it is all important that we, as well as they who preach the word, study and search diligently the truth, and then firmly, yet meekly, stand up in its defence. Though it may (it has already) subject us to reproach and contempt, yet what of all this? What has not Jesus, the blessed suffering Son of God, endured for us that we might have eternal life? If we do meet with [illegible] [illegible] the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." [illegible]

[illegible] immortality and eternal life through Christ alone, and our very names are cast out as evil,—yet [illegible] enough, if they are written in the Lamb's Book of Life; yea, it is enough! Jesus [illegible], and as long as He lives we may rest securely; for he says the very hairs of our head are all numbered!

O! let us give ourselves and all we have unreservedly to Him; and when our warfare has ended and our feet shall stand securely on Zion's heights, shall we look back and regret a single tear, a sigh, or all the [illegible] and sufferings that have been, or shall be endured here? No, all we shall or can have to say, and it will be with rejoicing too, Worthy is the Lamb; who hath redeemed us by his blood! Worthy is the Lamb!

O, give me the humble, weeping, despised, self-denying path of the christian through this life, and his glorious admittance and rich inheritance in the kingdom that never shall end! Let us be faithful; and should we fall asleep before Jesus comes, we will die in Christ; then we shall have a part in the First resurrection.

Your sister expecting the fulfillment of this blessed hope, D. N. KIDDER.

Angel Ministries.

Said one old minister, in giving a charge, "The people need a Jacob's ladder constantly standing, that ministers might ascend on Monday and descend on Sunday morning." The people took the hint. But the question lies in a very small compass. If the people did not support the gospel, it would do them but little good; they would in general use up the surplus for something else, and by it do themselves hurt.

Angels have never come down, and never will, to do what men are capable of doing. They have on earth, so far as necessity is concerned, lived and acted by miracle. Sometimes, when there have been no men to feed ministers, God has sent birds to do it. Sometimes, when brethren and friends have not done it, strangers have! I know a lady who well understands the import of H's story of a stranger, who came with five loaves for her breadless brood, of a cold, snowing night. This is a fact. Many such we and others could relate. I know of a case within a few weeks where it is manifest God interfered for the good of each party. One of our ministers had been preaching in a place and fared hard for means. Place new, and brethren poor. One brother had done liberally what he thought he could. He wished to send by the minister to do some little business for him to the amount of about $5. Passing into the room he handed him the money, but could not think what he wanted to send for. He was a real gentleman withal, and would not mention the business afterwards. The minister naturally enough took it as a donation. The brother put it down so and went on his way rejoicing. God prospers him; ministers do not go from his house without something—(how manifold is the rule!) Others in that same society—God bless them!—should be mentioned as doing all they can. These are "angel ministries."

You would and you should despise a man who sponges his living—how of the man who sponges his preaching? Do you say he ought to live poor? He certainly will. It is a greater blessing to the people to support the gospel well, than it is to the ministry. Should men study and work with a will, and feel that they have a cause worthy of them and the Master they serve? Take from them that mean, sickening sense of poverty which is so prostrating. It hinders mental discipline. It crushes out courage. It overwhelms the energy and buoyancy of spirit which is so essential to any important and successful effort.

"He will be thinking of some other work." And should he not? Bread and raiment, with shelter, must come for his wife and children from some other source. It is one of the most despicable emotions a man can find within himself—the feeling of necessity and dependence; all the time compelled to make some shift. Time enough, talent enough, energy enough to secure all that is needed; but no opportunity; working always in a cause that does not pay. "I will not endure it!" Such is the language of scores of ministers, some of whom, you think, they love you so well they would not leave for any call. "But they must look to the future for a reward." And where their brethren to whom they preach live in luxury? Ah, strange brotherhood!

"But they must state their wants." Oh, what a sense of meanness to beg! Some men and women have some delicacy of feeling left, if they do have to labor in the [illegible] there save it. But to beg a few times will either destroy their self-respect or drive them away. No one who has [illegible] can question the necessity.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 28, 1859.

Incidents by the Way.

We returned home from the Wilbraham campmeeting Monday, Sept 5th. We had a pleasant time on the way in social chat and song with some of the Lord's children returning from our feast of tabernacles. We arrived in season to enjoy, as usual, a good prayer meeting at our office. After an absence of nearly two months, we were thankful for the privilege of greeting again our loved ones at home. We suppose some think, (we judge from their remarks,) that ministers and their wives have no crosses or trials; such will be better prepared to judge after a little practical knowledge; but we would not be understood as complaining in the least, for it is pleasure to suffer with Jesus. For his sake, we cheerfully leave friends, and go forth to bear the bitter reproach and slander from a cold world and proud, formal professors. We are comforted with the thought that the warfare is almost over. We have counted the cost and feel willing to pay the price of truth, and suffer all the scorn its enemies can possibly manifest. Jesus is my all. Farewell to all the pleasures and charms of this vain world. Its highest honors are not worth a single struggle, nor their loss a moment's sorrow.

Wednesday, Sept. 7th, we greeted our friends, said "good bye," hastened to the cars, and were soon rushing from home to renew our combat with the powers of darkness. On our way we passed the Massachusetts Camp, at Concord, where great preparations were being made for a grand display of fighting men in their military uniform. Some eight hundred tents and thousands of soldiers in arms, marching and counter marching with stirring martial music, presented quite a warlike appearance, and in strange contrast with what we anticipate in the glorious camp of the saints in the coming kingdom. We once gloried in military display, but since we deserted from the enemy's camp, we have felt no disposition to enlist again, and become a slave to the devil, and take up with death as our wages.

Our iron horse soon ran away from this scene of confusion through romantic woods, deep dales, pleasant farms, villages, and winding streams, and rushed into Rutland, Vt., at 8 o'clock in the evening, where we were kindly met by Bro. Batchelor, who entertained us for the night. Bro. B. is pleasantly situated in the midst of a people who esteem him highly in love for his works' sake.

Thursday, 8th, we assembled at 1 o'clock for the dedication of their new chapel. It is pleasantly located, facing the common, and is a neat, convenient and commodious house. The brethren and sisters have manifested a very commendable degree of self-denial for the sake of providing a place for the worship of the God of our fathers, where the minister of Christ may stand up untrammelled and proclaim the truth of the Lord to a guilty world. A large congregation assembled to sympathize with us on this interesting occasion. About eighty of our Brn. and Srs. came over from Poultney, a distance of eighteen miles, and united their voices in hearty praise to the Lord for what he hath done. Notwithstanding earnest efforts have been made to root out the truth, and stop its progress, yet, like the sun, it still rises, and is shining through the fog banks of error and superstition, and many begin to feel its warming and cheering effects. We are glad the church has been so fortunate as to secure the faithful labors of Bro. Batchelor, an ardent lover and defender of the truth. A goodly number in the different churches are well satisfied that we have the truth, and our prayer is, they may have courage to honor it and its author with an open confession, and not be ashamed of Jesus and his words.

We continued our meetings Thursday and Friday evenings, and on Saturday went to Poultney, where we remained till Monday 19th, and were kindly and pleasantly entertained at Dr. Tefft's, whose wife has been associated with the Mendi mission in Africa. They are members of the Baptist church, but love the truth, and have courage to embrace it at the expense, if need be, of a good reputation. The enemies of truth are still active in this place, and no effort is spared to sustain the theological fables of these last days; still the cause of Christ is advancing. Three more have been baptized, making one hundred and five in all, and others are waiting for the next opportunity. The church has concluded to buy the Stone House where we have held our meetings. In looking over the past year, this people can truly say, "What hath God wrought?" Bro. Batchelor came and spent the last Lord's day with us, and others came over from Rutland to enjoy our happy religious feasts. We met at half-past 9 o'clock, as usual, for a social meeting, when between sixty and seventy testified of the goodness of the Lord, within an hour. A large audience was present all day to hear the preaching of the word. The people listened as though [illegible]

In the evening we enjoyed a delightful season around the communion table, commemorating the love, death, and sufferings of our coming King. Many of those dear saints in this place appear to be more determined to consecrate their all to Christ than ever before. They see the importance, as well as the comfort, of being pure in heart, if they would enter the kingdom of heaven. Several shed tears at the thought of parting, but we hope to meet again soon, where separation will be known no more forever.

Early Monday morning, 19th Sept., we left P. for Albany, where we met Bro. and Sr. Parry from Sandy Hill, from whom we learned good tidings concerning their place. The church at Sandy Hill will have a place of worship ready for occupation in about a month, when we purpose to visit them again. They now hold meetings every Lord's day in a school-house, and enjoy preaching from Bro. Parry. In Albany we met Bro. and Sr. Rufus Wendell, and were kindly entertained in their happy family. Their cup of joy seemed to be full, and on inquiring into the cause, we were rejoiced to learn that on the day previous to our visit, [Sept. 18th] they, in company with another, had been buried with Christ in baptism, by Bro. J. B. Cook, and were realizing the influence of the promised Comforter—the Holy Spirit. The church in Albany appear to be doing well. We had a pleasant meeting with them Monday evening, and found them heartily engaged in the service of the Lord, anxiously looking and waiting for the return of our Savior to raise the dead and set up his glorious kingdom.

Tuesday morning we started for Stepney, our next appointment. On our way, the cars stopped at Merwinsville for dinner; and we take pleasure in saying to those who may pass over the Housatonic R. R., that in all our travels we have not found a table at any R. R. station or depot so well furnished and kindly attended as that of Mr. S. Merwin, at this place; who is not only noted for setting a good table, but for his hospitality and gentlemanly deportment towards those who visit his well kept house. When we arrived at Stepney depot we were met by Bro. A. D. Eastwood, who gladly gave us a resting place for the night, and, on our part, it was thankfully received, as we had had but little sleep for forty-eight hours, on account of late retiring and early rising.

The Wonderful Man.

There is one man on the earth whose movements are exciting great "wonder" among its inhabitants; we refer to Napoleon III. We are well satisfied the crowning and most wonderful events of his career are yet in the future. A close observing English writer, speaking of Bonaparte III., denominates him, "That man whose life has been as wonderful as an oriental tale. Whatever he does, prospers—whatever he touches, as some one has remarked, turns into gold. . . . . A strange satanic infallibility attends upon his schemes. Inscrutable in his looks, he is equally inscrutable in his designs. He has taken up the most desperate measures, and yet all have prospered. He seems never to be mistaken. He has baffled ordinary men as if they had been children."

In a remarkable manner, he seems to be filling up the prophetical chart in the 17th chapter of Revelation, especially verses 7 and 11:—"The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is. . . . . And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." The past, present, and prospective movements of the Napoleon Dynasty are so clearly indicated by this prophecy, and the context, that we see little room to doubt its application. Hence we believe we are certainly near the end of the present dispensation, when the beast and its harlot rider will go to perdition.

Says the English writer, to whom we have referred, "Napoleon the Third is not merely the successor of Napoleon the First,—he is supplementary to the First. The Third is to fill up whatever the First left undone. . . . . His imitation of the First Napoleon is the most essential feature of his character. His mission seems to be the complete REVIVAL of a departed man, and of a departed empire. He is a RESURRECTIONIST—and a Resurrectionist not only in action, but in person. . . . . From this day forth he is no longer an individual, he is the embodiment of nations. . . . He has made himself, at once, the patron of Jews and Gentiles; of Christians, Turks and Pagans. What can have inspired so vast a policy? * * * *

It is strange that the present Emperor has begun his military career just at the age at which the first Emperor died. And to grant in the resemblance in all other respects that one might almost imagine the First Napoleon had revived in the Third (leaving but the fiery blackness of his [illegible]) [illegible] nothing more than the First Napoleon revived at the age of fifty-one."

How like the beast that was, is not, and yet is! How could the prophecy be more literally fulfilled than it has been thus far? Let us then be watching for the speedy accomplishment of the remainder. Praise the Lord for the encouraging prospect for an early deliverance from the power of sin and Satan. It is too late to look back to this vain world for a lost reputation. Let us bid an eternal farewell to every thing that will prevent us from being ready to meet the Lord in peace.

A Storm Gathering.

It has been a strong conviction, for some time, in the minds of many close observers, that one grand object of Napoleon III. is to avenge the battle of Waterloo, where his uncle was finally defeated and afterwards carried to the lone island of St. Helena, where he died, like a fierce lion shut up in his cage. A thirst for revenging that act of the English is in almost every Frenchman's heart, and they are anxiously waiting an opportunity to demonstrate their feelings in earnest action. There is some prospect they will not have to wait long. The Paris correspondent of the London Herald says:—

"The public mind is depressed by some vague foreboding, and a sense of impending evil. The preparations going on in the dockyards on both sides of the channel have revived the rumors of war with England. A great impetus has been given to these rumors of war by a Paris letter in the Independence Belge, which plainly tells us that the Emperor made peace with Austria merely for the purpose of putting down the naval supremacy of England, and that unless we submit quietly to have our naval estimates fixed by France there must be war."

Another Paris correspondent, speaking of Napoleon, says:—

"He is by slow and stealthy steps preparing for that grand collision which will be the crowning glory of his reign—the humiliation of England. Like the panther, the Emperor has only retired, it is said, to make a more tremendous spring . . . Here is this singular being, who, a few short years ago, was skulking from his prison with sabots on his feet, a plank on his shoulder and a blouse on his back, standing on the front of the world's stage and deciding the fate of mankind by a whisper."

The following from the Springfield Republican, shows how thinking men are looking at coming events:—

"What is the next move to be? The views of Mazzini, who certainly has not thus far been misled, are entitled to a degree of weight. The peace of Villa Franca is regarded by him as the inauguration of a new alliance between three powers that represent despotism in Europe—France, Austria and Russia—the aim of which is to be the division among themselves of the Mohammedan possession in Europe, and war against England and Prussia. This, Mazzini affirms, not as a matter of conjecture, but as a matter of fact which exists within his positive knowledge. The preparations for war he asserts to be more active in France than ever.

Now Mazzini is not a humbug. If he says this, he believes it, and believes that he has competent authority for it. . . . . There is a broader view of this subject entertained by some, and that is, that the war which must and will come between imperial continental despotism and the constitutional monarchy of England, will be a war of religions—a war between Catholicism and Protestantism. . . . . We believe that the career of Louis Napoleon has but just commenced—that the movements we have witnessed for the past few years are but the preliminaries of a career."

A Paris correspondent of the London Advertiser says:—

"Engineers have been sent down Boulogne to survey the whole line of coast extending from thence to Calais, that they may fix upon some spot for the formation of a seaport sufficiently spacious to contain a fleet of 50 transports; and the Minister of Marine has notified to his subalterns that 50 transports, each capable of containing 2,000 men, must be ready and waiting on the coast opposite to Dover by the commencement of the ensuing year. The writer says that this statement reposes on excellent authority, and full confirmation of authenticity has already been telegraphed to Downing-street."

The foregoing is indicative, to say the least, of preparations for war against England, yet, no doubt, Bonaparte will have some other pretence till the time comes to strike the blow. The coast named is the one in France, opposite England. Why should the French be prepared at "the commencement of the ensuing year" to transport 100,000 men from this part of France?

Affairs of Italy.

The affairs of Italy are becoming daily more complicated and warlike. The present state of things indicates bloody times before the return of spring. The Pope is raising troops to reduce the revolted provinces, and the people are preparing to resist till the last drop of blood is spilt. The feelings of the people towards Garibaldi, the great Italian leader, who is determined that Italy shall be free from the Papal yoke of bondage, are shown in the following extract from a letter written by a Parma correspondent:—

"The people and the National Guard were waiting for him at the railway station; the crowd was excited to such a degree that they took the horses from his carriage, and drew him in triumph from [illegible] to address the people from the balcony, which he did as follows:—

'After this demonstration, say, is it possible that the fugitive princes can ever return?' 'No, it is impossible!' was the unanimous response. 'Well, then,' added the general, 'I swear to you by this sword, that if ever they dare attempt to consign you again to servitude, we shall know how to defend ourselves to the last gasp. We ask no favors from any quarter; we only want our rights like other nations, and with the help of Heaven we will have them at any cost, since diplomacy is endeavoring to deprive us of them.'"

"Garibaldi's reception at Florence on the 15th of August was an ovation which displayed true popular enthusiasm. He was proceeding in a carriage incog. to his hotel, when he was recognized by a group of volunteers in the street. They immediately ran after the carriage, shouting, 'It is he! it is he! Garibaldi forever!' An immense cortege was collected by the time the carriage had reached the centre of the town. The news ran from street to street, from house to house, and in a short time Garibaldi's name was in every mouth. All the windows were instantly decorated with flags. The street where Garibaldi's hotel stands was crowded with people flocking thither from all quarters. He was forced to appear several times on the balcony, when he was cheered with an enthusiasm that defies description. The government sent to compliment Garibaldi as soon as he arrived."

Napoleon declares he will not assist the exiled Dukes to return by force of arms to their duchies, and the people of Parma, Modena and Tuscany are determined they shall not return by force of arms, nor any other way. Bonaparte also refuses to let Austria aid them by military power. Why have the various divisions of Italy, that have long been the faithful supporters of the Pope, now all turned against his authority, and become such inveterate haters of the harlot power? Be the cause what it may, the fact is before us, in fulfillment of a plain prophecy in Rev. 17: 16. The hatred of these Roman divisions, or horns, is so great already, that we think it will soon result in decided action, terminating in the destruction of Rome, when the 18th chapter of Rev. will have its accomplishment.

The Sandwich Islands.

Some years since, we learned from honest men, who had visited these islands, that we often received very exaggerated accounts of missionary success among them. The following, from a Honolulu correspondent of the New York Independent, agrees with what we have gained from those who have been eye-witnesses of the sad state of things in these islands. After referring to the annual meeting of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, he says:—

"In the reports of the different stations there was little to encourage—much to try the faith and patience of the laborers in this part of the great harvest. The population is almost everywhere diminishing. The number of scholars in the schools decreases, and schools are given up. The preaching of the gospel seems to have very little influence on the young, and very few of them give evidence of having been born again, while licentiousness is fearfully prevalent. Only the pastor of the church at Waimea, Hawaii, reports a revival. This work of grace has been remarkable, surpassing the expectations of one of the most devoted of missionaries. In this revival the young, more than is usual at these islands, have been brought into the kingdom of God; and 176 in all have been received into the church. Cheering indications of increasing religious interest are apparent at Hana, on Maui, and at Lihue, on Kauai.

In addition to other discouragements, there has been manifested by many a disposition to return to their old heathenish practices, especially on the island of Oahu. One of these is the Hula, or dancers. The whole influence of the Hula is most demoralizing and degrading. The dress of the performers, the dance, and the song, are all alike debasing. The dress of the dancers is most shameful, and their songs lascivious.

The prevalence of the Hula has been quite general on Oahu, and everywhere with like results. To attend the Hula, the native has left his taro patch uncultivated, and his cattle uncared for, and his house, through which the rain found its way, unrepaired. Children have left their schools, and church members the religious meetings, to be present at the Hula. The number of church members found at the Hula has, however, been comparatively small. The price of poi, the staff of life among Hawaiians, has risen one hundred per cent; but this has been one of the least of the evils resulting from the Hula.

This letter will doubtless surprise many who have been accustomed to regard the Hawaiians as a christian people, far advanced in civilization; but the friends of these islands wish to know the truth, and they ought to know the truth, how much soever it may conflict with cherished ideas and hopes."

Report of the Ohio Conference.

Agreeable to previous appointment, the brethren from the different congregations of the church of God in Ohio, met in conference at Marysville; whereupon G. W. Cherry was called to the chair, and E. R. Southwick appointed secretary. A committee of arrangements was then appointed, and the following brethren a committee on resolutions; viz: Wm. Fish, E. R. Southwick, G. W. Cherry, W. K. Bean, and D. E. Lyon. Preaching brethren in attendance were Elds. L. H. Chase, J. M. Judson, D. E. Lyon, W. K. Bean, E. R. Southwick and J. T. [illegible] [illegible]

The conference [illegible] profitable one to the church. [illegible] manifested by the [illegible] was unusually large; at the opening, however, the attendance was not so prompt as we had hoped. Six persons came forward to obey the command of our great High Priest, in the ordinance of the gospel, and were buried with Christ by baptism, thus fulfilling the law of Christ, that they might walk with him in newness of life.

The general impression on the community appears more and more favorable; the leaven of truth working love, and bringing out the spirit of kindness on the right and on the left. To God be all the praise!

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we feel more than ever the importance of maintaining a living ministry to go out into the world and preach the gospel, and bring all that are disposed to have eternal life into the Abrahamic covenant, into the one faith of the one hope of the one gospel; into heirship of the promise of the inheritance of the land of Canaan. The love of Christ should constrain us to make sacrifices to sustain those who are qualified to dispense the word of life. Through the past year we have seen the good resulting from the labors of Elds. Chase, Judson and others in Ohio. Those brethren have made sacrifices in order that they might preach the word to perishing souls. And shall not we who labor with our hands for the things of this world, impart to them of that with which God has blessed us, even to the tenth part of our substance? That which he has given us is not our own, we are his stewards, and he has said, the liberal soul deviseth liberal things and he will bring them to pass.

Resolved, That we believe it the duty of all God's children, however much scattered, to open a generous hand to supply the wants of the church. The harvest is truly great, the laborers few; therefore it is the duty of every individual brother and sister, whether his or her name be recorded on the church book or not, to do all in their power to extend the truth in Ohio.

Resolved, That P. Alling of Norwalk, Huron Co. O.; D. E. Lyon, Centerburgh, Knox Co., O.; Wm. Bales, Coberly, Union Co., O.; W. H. Reeves, Springfield, O.; H. Skeels, Pharisburg, Union Co., O.; Geo. Nellis, Ashtabula, O.; Wm. Fish, Dayton, O.; and R. L. Partridge, Marysville, O., be appointed to solicit and receive all contributions the brethren may make for the maintenance of an evangelist to travel in Ohio; and that the aforesaid committee report and remit the results of their efforts to Wm. Fish, the treasurer of said committee, at Dayton, Ohio.

Resolved, That the proceedings of the meeting be published in the "Crisis" and "Expositor."

Resolved, That we return thanks for the house, and the hospitality of the citizens in entertaining many of the friends from abroad.

Resolved, That we invite Eld. Chase of Mich., to travel in Ohio as an evangelist. Eld. Chase being present, accepted the invitation. Conference adjourned.

G. W. CHERRY, Chairman.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Janes.

BRO. GRANT:—With the Crisis of June 15th containing Bro. H. L. Hastings' communication, headed "The West," before me, I sit down to drop you a brief line. The reading of that has caused emotions to rise in my breast which are much better felt than expressed, either by word of mouth or by pen and paper; because, in the first place, he has, in a few words, represented the state of things in relation to the cause of truth and of our blessed Redeemer, in this western world, far better than I could do it if I should undertake, although I am an inhabitant of this country, and know by personal experience and observation the truth of what he has said; for almost every where we go the doors are thrown open for us to present the truth (present truth); and a very marked attention to, and an heart-felt interest in, the doctrines we advocate, is manifested on every hand, and the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us!" is almost constantly coming to our ears from the scattered and famishing flock of Christ from all over the land, East, West, North and South. And not only from brethren and sisters of like precious faith with ourselves does this cry come, but from many others who have heard a little, have become interested, and want to hear more. Thus the way is opening before us on every hand.

And here let me say to our brethren East generally: Here comes the trial;—in view of the pressing wants of the cause,—the oft-repeated calls for help, and our inability to meet those wants and calls, for want of money, and for lack of men who are able to go and tell the truth to the world, and also for want of publications whereby to scatter the light,—and sometimes for want of physical strength, (for we often talk and labor until we can scarcely hold our heads up for weariness;) I say, dear brethren, [illegible] ready to meet it,—of whom among us [illegible] be emphatically said, he or she has done what they could for the salvation of their fellow men? Come, my dear brethren, universally, and especially those in the ministry,—

> "Fly! fly on wings of morning,
> Ye who the truth can tell,
> And sound the awful warning,
> To rescue souls from hell!"

Is not God now speaking to us in louder tones through the fulfillment of prophecy, and the waking up of nations, Gog and Magog to the fray, that the end of all things is at hand, than to ancient Israel in peals of thunder upon Mount Sinai? Come, one, come all; let us have your earnest, heart-felt prayers in this matter. Let us have the benefit of your money also, a few days, in sending publications through the length and breadth of our land, that thereby we may be able to send the light of truth to many who now sit in darkness. You who can possibly or consistently go in to the field of public action, let us have your bodily presence; let us hear your voices sounding high the glad tidings of the coming kingdom, and giving the trumpet a certain sound, that the inhabitants of the land may tremble at the word of the Lord, and the people prepare for battle, for blessed are such as do this.

Bro. Hastings' plan of operation meets my mind, and I shall do all I can to help it forward, and to induce our brethren West to do the same, although we are unable to send on much money just now; but through the blessing of a kind Providence, we have universally here in the West, a rich and an abundant harvest of small grain, just ready for gathering,—corn and potatoes, and other things also, look well at present; so that we have a fair prospect of better times soon in regard to money matters; and I think we shall all know how to prize them when they come, and trust they will be used to the glory of God.

A word concerning myself and family. We left Cordova, Ill., the 23d of June, the brethren and sisters many of them accompanying us to the river side, where with pensive hearts we tried to sing the beautiful lines of the poet,

> "When shall we meet again,
> Meet ne'er to sever?"

Then commending them to the grace of God in humble prayer, we arose, and bade each other an affectionate, and perhaps a final farewell, with hearts too full, and feelings too deep to be suppressed, or expressed in human language,—after having lived and associated with them, shared their joys and sorrows with their liberality and kindness for a little over a year. May the good Shepherd still watch over, protect, and preserve the little flock in Cordova, is my humble prayer; that they may be presented to the Master in the last great day without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing.

After a very pleasant and prosperous journey of nine days, we arrived here safely, in good health and spirits. We visited several brethren on the way—held one meeting on Lord's day; and although among strangers, good attention was paid to the word. Also found an appointment out for the next day, (Sunday) which we met with a very encouraging prospect. A good congregation collected, who listened apparently with much interest. The next Sunday met two appointments in the same place, with crowded congregations before me, who seemed to be more and more interested. Next, visited some brethren at New Hartford, about thirty miles distant, and found Bro. C. Churchill had given out word for a two days meeting there for us, which we attended with an increase of interest throughout, and promised to visit them again soon.

Returned here again on Thursday last, and met another appointment in the evening,—find the interest is still increasing. I find a greater interest here, and we also like the country better, than we expected. We think to form a church soon, and have the prospect of a goodly number to join. I wish more of our brethren East would come and settle with us,—land is very cheap here now and is of an excellent quality,—a plenty of timber to be had very cheap also.

Pittsford, Butler Co., Iowa, July 22.

From M. P. Lamprey.

DEAR CRISIS:—It was on the same day of the week that Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went to the sepulchre, where their Lord and Master was laid, carrying with them sweet spices, to anoint him, as was then the custom of the people of the East. While they were consulting together, how they should roll away the stone from the door of the sepulchre, to their great astonishment they found it rolled away and the door was opened, and looking into the tomb, they saw the linen clothes lying, and the napkin folded and laid in another place from where it lay when he was laid there, and two men in shining raiment standing, one at the head and the other at the feet, and the angel said unto the women, "Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified. He is not here; he is risen. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." The women left the sepulchre with fear and joy, and ran quickly to tell his disciples. Behold, Jesus met them, saying, "All hail!" and they came and held him [illegible]

[illegible] the resurrection, immortality and eternal life through Christ alone, and our very names are cast out as evil,—yet [illegible] enough, if they are written in the Lamb's Book of Life; yes, it is enough! Jesus [illegible], and as long as He lives we may rest securely; for he says the very hairs of our head are all numbered!

O! let us give ourselves and all we have [illegible] to Him; and when our warfare has ended and our feet shall stand [illegible] heights, shall we look back [illegible] a single tear, a sigh, or all the [illegible] sufferings that have been, or can be endured here? No, all we shall [illegible] to say, and it will be with rejoicing [illegible] "Worthy is the Lamb; who hath redeemed us by his blood! Worthy is the Lamb!"

O, give me the humble, weeping, despised, self-denying path of the christian through this life, and his glorious admittance and rich inheritance in the kingdom that never shall end! Let us be faithful; and should we fall asleep before Jesus comes, we will die in Christ; then we shall have a part in the First resurrection.

Your sister expecting the fulfillment of this blessed hope, D. N. KIDDER.

Angel Ministries.

Said one old minister, in giving a charge, "The people need a Jacob's ladder constantly standing, that ministers might ascend on Monday and descend on Sunday morning." The people took the hint. But the question lies in a very small compass. If the people did not support the gospel, it would do them but little good; they would in general use up the surplus for something else, and by it do themselves hurt.

Angels have never come down, and never will, to do what men are capable of doing. They have on earth, so far as necessity is concerned, lived and acted by miracle. Sometimes, when there have been no men to feed ministers, God has sent birds to do it. Sometimes, when brethren and friends have not done it, strangers have! I know a lady who well understands the import of H's story of a stranger, who came with five loaves for her breadless brood, of a cold, snowing night. This is a fact. Many such we and others could relate. I know of a case within a few weeks where it is manifest God interfered for the good of each party. One of our ministers had been preaching in a place and fared hard for means. Place new, and brethren poor. One brother had done liberally what he thought he could. He wished to send by the minister to do some little business for him to the amount of about $5. Passing into the room he handed him the money, but could not think what he wanted to send for. He was a real gentleman withal, and would not mention the business afterwards. The minister naturally enough took it as a donation. The brother put it down so and went on his way rejoicing. God prospers him; ministers do not go from his house without something—(how manifold is the rule!) Others in that same society—God bless them!—should be mentioned as doing all they can. These are "angel ministries."

You would and you should despise a man who sponges his living—how of the man who sponges his preaching? Do you say he ought to live poor? He certainly will. It is a greater blessing to the people to support the gospel well, than it is to the ministry. Should men study and work with a will, and feel that they have a cause worthy of them and the Master they serve? Take from them that mean, sickening sense of poverty which is so prostrating. It hinders mental discipline. It crushes out courage. It overwhelms the energy and buoyancy of spirit which is so essential to any important and successful effort.

"He will be thinking of some other work." And should he not? Bread and raiment, with shelter, must come for his wife and children from some other source. It is one of the most despicable emotions a man can find within himself—the feeling of meagerness and dependence; all the time compelled to make some shift. Time enough, talent enough, energy enough to accomplish all that is needed; but no opportunity, working always in a cause that does not pay. "I will not endure it!" Such is the language of scores of ministers, some of whom, you think, they love you so well they would not leave for any call. "But they must look to the future for a reward." And why, their brethren to whom they preach live in luxury? Ah, strange brotherhood!

"But they must state their wants." Oh, what a sense of meanness to beg! Some men and women have some delicacy of feeling left, if they do have to labor in the [illegible] it. But to beg a [illegible] will either destroy their self-respect, or drive them away. No one who has [illegible] can question the necessity.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 28, 1859.

Incidents by the Way.

We returned home from the Wilbraham campmeeting Monday, Sept 5th. We had a pleasant time on the way in social chat and song with some of the Lord's children returning from our feast of tabernacles. We arrived in season to enjoy, as usual, a good prayer meeting at our office. After an absence of nearly two months, we were thankful for the privilege of greeting again our loved ones at home. We suppose some think, (we judge from their remarks,) that ministers and their wives have no crosses or trials; such will be better prepared to judge after a little practical knowledge; but we would not be understood as complaining in the least, for it is pleasure to suffer with Jesus. For his sake, we cheerfully leave friends, and go forth to bear the bitter reproach and slander from a cold world and proud, formal professors. We are comforted with the thought that the warfare is almost over. We have counted the cost and feel willing to pay the price of truth, and suffer all the scorn its enemies can possibly manifest. Jesus is my all. Farewell to all the pleasures and charms of this vain world. Its highest honors are not worth a single struggle, nor their loss a moment's sorrow.

Wednesday, Sept. 7th, we greeted our friends, said "good bye," hastened to the cars, and were soon rushing from home to renew our combat with the powers of darkness. On our way we passed the Massachusetts Camp, at Concord, where great preparations were being made for a grand display of fighting men in their military uniform. Some eight hundred tents and thousands of soldiers in arms, marching and counter marching with stirring martial music, presented quite a warlike appearance, and in strange contrast with what we anticipate in the glorious camp of the saints in the coming kingdom. We once gloried in military display, but since we deserted from the enemy's camp, we have felt no disposition to enlist again, and become a slave to the devil, and take up with death as our wages.

Our iron horse soon ran away from this scene of confusion through romantic woods, deep dales, pleasant farms, villages, and winding streams, and rushed into Rutland, Vt., at 8 o'clock in the evening, where we were kindly met by Bro. Batchelor, who entertained us for the night. Bro. B. is pleasantly situated in the midst of a people who esteem him highly in love for his works' sake.

Thursday, 8th, we assembled at 1 o'clock for the dedication of their new chapel. It is pleasantly located, facing the common, and is a neat, convenient and commodious house. The brethren and sisters have manifested a very commendable degree of self-denial for the sake of providing a place for the worship of the God of our fathers, where the minister of Christ may stand up untrammelled and proclaim the truth of the Lord to a guilty world. A large congregation assembled to sympathize with us on this interesting occasion. About eighty of our Brn. and Srs. came over from Poultney, a distance of eighteen miles, and united their voices in hearty praise to the Lord for what he hath done. Notwithstanding earnest efforts have been made to root out the truth, and stop its progress, yet, like the sun, it still rises, and is shining through the fog banks of error and superstition, and many begin to feel its warming and cheering effects. We are glad the church has been so fortunate as to secure the faithful labors of Bro. Batchelor, an ardent lover and defender of the truth. A goodly number in the different churches are well satisfied that we have the truth, and our prayer is, they may have courage to honor it and its author with an open confession, and not be ashamed of Jesus and his words.

We continued our meetings Thursday and Friday evenings, and on Saturday went to Poultney, where we remained till Monday 19th, and were kindly and pleasantly entertained at Dr. Teff's, whose wife has been associated with the Mendi mission in Africa. They are members of the Baptist church, but love the truth, and have courage to embrace it at the expense, if need be, of a good reputation. The enemies of truth are still active in this place, and no effort is spared to sustain the theological fables of these last days; still the cause of Christ is advancing. Three more have been baptized, making one hundred and five in all, and others are waiting for the next opportunity. The church has concluded to buy the Stone House where we have held our meetings. In looking over the past year, this people can truly say, "What hath God wrought?" Bro. Batchelor came and spent the last Lord's day with us, and others came over from Rutland to enjoy our happy religious feasts. We met at half-past 9 o'clock, as usual, for a social meeting, when between sixty and seventy testified of the goodness of the Lord, within an hour. A large audience [illegible] present all day [illegible]

In the evening we enjoyed a delightful season around the communion table, commemorating the love, death, and sufferings of our soon coming King. Many of those dear saints in this place appear to be more determined to consecrate their all to Christ than ever before. They see the importance, as well as the comfort, of being pure in heart, if they would enter the kingdom of heaven. Several shed tears at the thought of parting, but we hope to meet again soon, where separation will be known no more forever.

Early Monday morning, 19th Sept., we left P. for Albany, where we met Bro. and Sr. Parry from Sandy Hill, from whom we learned good tidings concerning their place. The church at Sandy Hill will have a place of worship ready for occupation in about a month, when we purpose to visit them again. They now hold meetings every Lord's day in a school-house, and enjoy preaching from Bro. Parry. In Albany we met Bro. and Sr. Rufus Wendell, and were kindly entertained in their happy family. Their cup of joy seemed to be full, and on inquiring into the cause, we were rejoiced to learn that on the day previous to our visit, [Sept. 18th] they, in company with another, had been buried with Christ in baptism, by Bro. J. B. Cook, and were realizing the influence of the promised Comforter—the Holy Spirit. The church in Albany appear to be doing well. We had a pleasant meeting with them Monday evening, and found them heartily engaged in the service of the Lord, anxiously looking and waiting for the return of our Savior to raise the dead and set up his glorious kingdom.

Tuesday morning we started for Stepney, our next appointment. On our way, the cars stopped at Merwinsville for dinner; and we take pleasure in saying to those who may pass over the Housatonic R. R., that in all our travels we have not found a table at any R. R. station or depot so well furnished and kindly attended as that of Mr. S. Merwin, at this place; who is not only noted for setting a good table, but for his hospitality and gentlemanly deportment towards those who visit his well kept house. When we arrived at Stepney depot we were met by Bro. A. D. Eastwood, who gladly gave us a resting place for the night, and, on our part, it was thankfully received, as we had had but little sleep for forty-eight hours, on account of late retiring and early rising.

The Wonderful Man.

There is one man on the earth whose movements are exciting great "wonder" among its inhabitants; we refer to Napoleon III. We are well satisfied the crowning and most wonderful events of his career are yet in the future. A close observing English writer, speaking of Bonaparte III., denominates him, "That man whose life has been as wonderful as an oriental tale. Whatever he does, prospers—whatever he touches, as some one has remarked, turns into gold. . . . . A strange satanic infallibility attends upon his schemes. Inscrutable in his looks, he is equally inscrutable in his designs. He has taken up the most desperate measures, and yet all have prospered. He seems never to be mistaken. He has baffled ordinary men as if they had been children."

In a remarkable manner, he seems to be filling up the prophetical chart in the 17th chapter of Revelation, especially verses 7 and 11:—"The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is. . . . . And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." The past, present, and prospective movements of the Napoleon Dynasty are so clearly indicated by this prophecy, and the context, that we see little room to doubt its application. Hence we believe we are certainly near the end of the present dispensation, when the beast and its harlot rider will go to perdition.

Says the English writer, to whom we have referred, "Napoleon the Third is not merely the successor of Napoleon the First,—he is supplementary to the First. The Third is to fill up whatever the First left undone. . . . . His imitation of the First Napoleon is the most essential feature of his character. His mission seems to be the complete REVIVAL of a departed man, and of a departed empire. He is a RESURRECTIONIST—and a Resurrectionist not only in action, but in person. . . . . From this day forth he is no longer an individual, he is the embodiment of nations. . . . He has made himself, at once, the patron of Jews and Gentiles; of Christians, Turks and Pagans. What can have inspired so vast a policy? * * * *

It is strange that the present Emperor has begun his military career just at the age at which the first Emperor died. And to guard in the resemblance in all other respects that one might almost imagine the First Napoleon had revived in the Third [illegible] nothing more than the First Napoleon revived at the age of fifty-one."

How like the beast that was, is not, and yet is! How could the prophecy be more literally fulfilled than it has been thus far? Let us then be watching for the speedy accomplishment of the remainder. Praise the Lord for the encouraging prospect for an early deliverance from the power of sin and Satan. It is too late to look back to this vain world for a lost reputation. Let us bid an eternal farewell to every thing that will prevent us from being ready to meet the Lord in peace.

A Storm Gathering.

It has been a strong conviction, for some time, in the minds of many close observers, that one grand object of Napoleon III. is to avenge the battle of Waterloo, where his uncle was finally defeated and afterwards carried to the lone island of St. Helena, where he died, like a fierce lion shut up in his cage. A thirst for revenging that act of the English is in almost every Frenchman's heart, and they are anxiously waiting an opportunity to demonstrate their feelings in earnest action. There is some prospect they will not have to wait long. The Paris correspondent of the London Herald says:—

"The public mind is depressed by some vague foreboding, and a sense of impending evil. The preparations going on in the dockyards on both sides of the channel have revived the rumors of war with England. A great impetus has been given to these rumors of war by a Paris letter in the Independence Belge, which plainly tells us that the Emperor made peace with Austria merely for the purpose of putting down the naval supremacy of England, and that unless we submit quietly to have our naval estimates fixed by France there must be war."

Another Paris correspondent, speaking of Napoleon, says:—

"He is by slow and stealthy steps preparing for that grand collision which will be the crowning glory of his reign—the humiliation of England. Like the panther, the Emperor has only retired, it is said, to make a more tremendous spring . . . Here is this singular being, who, a few short years ago, was skulking from his prison with sabots on his feet, a plank on his shoulder and a blouse on his back, standing on the front of the world's stage and deciding the fate of mankind by a whisper."

The following from the Springfield Republican, shows how thinking men are looking at coming events:—

"What is the next move to be? The views of Mazzini, who certainly has not thus far been misled, are entitled to a degree of weight. The peace of Villa Franca is regarded by him as the inauguration of a new alliance between three powers that represent despotism in Europe—France, Austria and Russia—the aim of which is to be the division among themselves of the Mohammedan possession in Europe, and war against England and Prussia. This, Mazzini affirms, not as a matter of conjecture, but as a matter of fact which exists within his positive knowledge. The preparations for war he asserts to be more active in France than ever.

Now Mazzini is not a humbug. If he says this, he believes it, and believes that he has competent authority for it. . . . . There is a broader view of this subject entertained by some, and that is, that the war which must and will come between imperial continental despotism and the constitutional monarchy of England, will be a war of religions—a war between Catholicism and Protestantism. . . . . We believe that the career of Louis Napoleon has but just commenced—that the movements we have witnessed for the past few years are but the preliminaries of a career."

A Paris correspondent of the London Advertiser says:—

"Engineers have been sent down Boulogne to survey the whole line of coast extending from thence to Calais, that they may fix upon some spot for the formation of a seaport sufficiently spacious to contain a fleet of 50 transports; and the Minister of Marine has notified to his subalterns that 50 transports, each capable of containing 2,000 men, must be ready and waiting on the coast opposite to Dover by the commencement of the ensuing year. The writer says that this statement reposes on excellent authority, and full confirmation of authenticity has already been telegraphed to Downing-street."

The foregoing is indicative, to say the least, of preparations for war against England, yet, no doubt, Bonaparte will have some other pretence till the time comes to strike the blow. The coast named is the one in France, opposite England. Why should the French be prepared at "the commencement of the ensuing year" to transport 100,000 men from this part of France?

Affairs of Italy.

The affairs of Italy are becoming daily more complicated and warlike. The present state of things indicates bloody times before the return of spring. The Pope is raising troops to reduce the revolted provinces, and the people are preparing to resist till the last drop of blood is spilt. The feelings of the people towards Garibaldi, the great Italian leader, who is determined that Italy shall be free from the Papal yoke of bondage, are shown in the following extract from a letter written by a Parma correspondent:—

"The people and the National Guard were waiting for him at the railway station; the crowd was excited to such a degree that they took the horses from his carriage [illegible] addressed the people from the balcony, which he did as follows:—

'After this demonstration, say, is it possible that the fugitive princes can ever return?' 'No, it is impossible!' was the unanimous response. 'Well, then,' added the general, 'I swear to you by this sword, that if ever they dare attempt to consign you again to servitude, we shall know how to defend ourselves to the last gasp. We ask no favors from any quarter; we only want our rights like other nations, and with the help of Heaven we will have them at any cost, since diplomacy is endeavoring to deprive us of them.'"

"Garibaldi's reception at Florence on the 15th of August was an ovation which displayed true popular enthusiasm. He was proceeding in a carriage incog. to his hotel, when he was recognised by a group of volunteers in the street. They immediately ran after the carriage, shouting, 'It is he! it is he! Garibaldi forever!' An immense cortege was collected by the time the carriage had reached the centre of the town. The news ran from street to street, from house to house, and in a short time Garibaldi's name was in every mouth. All the windows were instantly decorated with flags. The street where Garibaldi's hotel stands was crowded with people flocking thither from all quarters. He was forced to appear several times on the balcony, when he was cheered with an enthusiasm that defies description. The government sent to compliment Garibaldi as soon as he arrived."

Napoleon declares he will not assist the exiled Dukes to return by force of arms to their duchies, and the people of Parma, Modena and Tuscany are determined they shall not return by force of arms, nor any other way. Bonaparte also refuses to let Austria aid them by military power. Why have the various divisions of Italy, that have long been the faithful supporters of the Pope, now all turned against his authority, and become such inveterate haters of the harlot power? Be the cause what it may, the fact is before us, in fulfillment of a plain prophecy in Rev. 17: 16. The hatred of these Roman divisions, or horns, is so great already, that we think it will soon result in decided action, terminating in the destruction of Rome, when the 18th chapter of Rev. will have its accomplishment.

The Sandwich Islands.

Some years since, we learned from honest men, who had visited these islands, that we often received very exaggerated accounts of missionary success among them. The following, from a Honolulu correspondent of the New York Independent, agrees with what we have gained from those who have been eye-witnesses of the sad state of things in these islands. After referring to the annual meeting of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, he says:—

"In the reports of the different stations there was little to encourage—much to try the faith and patience of the laborers in this part of the great harvest. The population is almost everywhere diminishing. The number of scholars in the schools decreases, and schools are given up. The preaching of the gospel seems to have very little influence on the young, and very few of them give evidence of having been born again, while licentiousness is fearfully prevalent. Only the pastor of the church at Waimea, Hawaii, reports a revival. This work of grace has been remarkable, surpassing the expectations of one of the most devoted of missionaries. In this revival the young, more than is usual at these islands, have been brought into the kingdom of God; and 176 in all have been received into the church. Cheering indications of increasing religious interest are apparent at Hana, on Maui, and at Lihue, on Kauai.

In addition to other discouragements, there has been manifested by many a disposition to return to their old heathenish practices, especially on the island of Oahu. One of these is the Hula, or dancers. The whole influence of the Hula is most demoralising and degrading. The dress of the performers, the dance, and the song, are all alike debasing. The dress of the dancers is most shameful, and their songs lascivious.

The prevalence of the Hula has been quite general on Oahu, and everywhere with like results. To attend the Hula, the native has left his taro patch uncultivated, and his cattle uncared for, and his house, through which the rain found its way, unrepaired. Children have left their schools, and church members the religious meetings, to be present at the Hula. The number of church members found at the Hula has, however, been comparatively small. The price of poi, the staff of life among Hawaiians, has risen one hundred per cent; but this has been one of the least of the evils resulting from the Hula.

This letter will doubtless surprise many who have been accustomed to regard the Hawaiians as a christian people, far advanced in civilization; but the friends of these islands wish to know the truth, and they ought to know the truth, how much soever it may conflict with cherished ideas and hopes."

Report of the Ohio Conference.

Agreeable to previous appointment, the brethren from the different congregations of the church of God in Ohio, met in conference at Marysville; whereupon G. W. Cherry was called to the chair, and E. R. Southwick appointed secretary. A committee of arrangements was then appointed, and the following brethren a committee on resolutions; viz: Wm. Fish, E. R. Southwick, G. W. Cherry, W. K. Bean, and D. E. Lyon. Preaching brethren in attendance [illegible]

The conference [illegible] to the church. [illegible] was manifested by the [illegible] was usually large; at the opening, however, the attendance was not so prompt as we had hoped. Six persons came forward to obey the command of our great High Priest, in the ordinance of the gospel, and were buried with Christ by baptism, thus fulfilling the law of Christ, that they might walk with him in newness of life.

The general impression on the community appears more and more favorable; the leaven of truth working love, and bringing out the spirit of kindness on the right and on the left. To God be all the praise!

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we feel more than ever the importance of maintaining a living ministry to go out into the world and preach the gospel, and bring all that are disposed to have eternal life into the Abrahamic covenant, into the one faith of the one hope of the one gospel; into heirship of the promise of the inheritance of the land of Canaan. The love of Christ should constrain us to make sacrifices to sustain those who are qualified to dispense the word of life. Through the past year we have seen the good resulting from the labors of Elds. Chase, Judson and others in Ohio. Those brethren have made sacrifices in order that they might preach the word to perishing souls. And shall not we who labor with our hands for the things of this world, impart to them of that with which God has blessed us, even to the tenth part of our substance? That which he has given us is not our own, we are his stewards, and he has said, the liberal soul deviseth liberal things and he will bring them to pass.

Resolved, That we believe it the duty of all God's children, however much scattered, to open a generous hand to supply the wants of the church. The harvest is truly great, the laborers few; therefore it is the duty of every individual brother and sister, whether his or her name be recorded on the church book or not, to do all in their power to extend the truth in Ohio.

Resolved, That P. Alling of Norwalk, Huron Co. O.; D. E. Lyon, Centerburgh, Knox Co., O.; Wm. Bales, Coberly, Union Co., O.; W. H. Reeves, Springfield, O.; H. Skeels, Pharisburg, Union Co., O.; Geo. Nellis, Ashtabula, O.; Wm. Fish, Dayton, O.; and R. L. Partridge, Marysville, O., be appointed to solicit and receive all contributions the brethren may make for the maintenance of an evangelist to travel in Ohio; and that the aforesaid committee report and remit the results of their efforts to Wm. Fish, the treasurer of said committee, at Dayton, Ohio.

Resolved, That the proceedings of the meeting be published in the "Crisis" and "Expositor."

Resolved, That we return thanks for the house, and the hospitality of the citizens in entertaining many of the friends from abroad.

Resolved, That we invite Eld. Chase of Mich., to travel in Ohio as an evangelist. Eld. Chase being present, accepted the invitation. Conference adjourned.

G. W. CHERRY, Chairman.
E. R. SOUTHWICK, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. James.

BRO. GRANT:—With the Crisis of June 15th containing Bro. H. L. Hastings' communication, headed "The West," before me, I sit down to drop you a brief line. The reading of that has caused emotions to rise in my breast which are much better felt than expressed, either by word of mouth or by pen and paper; because, in the first place, he has, in a few words, represented the state of things in relation to the cause of truth and of our blessed Redeemer, in this western world, far better than I could do it if I should undertake, although I am an inhabitant of this country, and know by personal experience and observation the truth of what he has said; for almost every where we go the doors are thrown open for us to present the truth (present truth); and a very marked attention to, and an heartfelt interest in, the doctrines we advocate, is manifested on every hand, and the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us!" is almost constantly coming to our ears from the scattered and famishing flock of Christ from all over the land, East, West, North and South. And not only from brethren and sisters of like precious faith with ourselves does this cry come, but from many others who have heard a little, have become interested, and want to hear more. Thus the way is opening before us on every hand.

And here let me say to our brethren East generally: Here comes the trial [illegible] of the pressing wants of the cause,—the oft-repeated calls for help, and our inability to meet these wants and calls, for want of money, and for lack of men who are able to go and tell the truth to the world, and also the want of publications whereby to scatter the light,—and sometimes for want of physical strength, (for we often talk and [illegible]

[illegible] ready to meet it,—of whom among us it be emphatically said, he or she has done what they could for the salvation of their fellow men? Come, my dear brethren, universally, and especially those in the ministry,

"Fly! fly on wings of morning,
Ye who the truth can tell,
And sound the awful warning,
To rescue souls from hell!"

Is not God now speaking to us in louder tones through the fulfillment of prophecy and the waking up of nations, Gog and Magog to the fray, that the end of all things is at hand, than to ancient Israel in peals of thunder upon Mount Sinai? Come, one, come all; let us have your earnest, heartfelt prayers in this matter. Let us have the benefit of your money also, a few days, in sending publications through the length and breadth of our land, that thereby we may be able to send the light of truth to many who now sit in darkness. You who can possibly or consistently go in to the field of public action, let us have your bodily presence; let us hear your voices sounding high the glad tidings of the coming kingdom, and giving the trumpet a certain sound, that the inhabitants of the land may tremble at the word of the Lord, and the people prepare for battle, for blessed are such as do this.

Bro. Hastings' plan of operation meets my mind, and I shall do all I can to help it forward, and to induce our brethren West to do the same, although we are unable to send on much money just now; but through the blessing of a kind Providence, we have universally here in the West, a rich and an abundant harvest of small grain, just ready for gathering,—corn and potatoes, and other things also, look well at present; so that we have a fair prospect of better times soon in regard to money matters; and I think we shall all know how to prize them when they come, and trust they will be used to the glory of God.

A word concerning myself and family. We left Cordova, Ill., the 23d of June, the brethren and sisters many of them accompanying us to the river side, where with pensive hearts we tried to sing the beautiful lines of the poet,

"When shall we meet again,
Meet ne'er to sever?"

Then commending them to the grace of God in humble prayer, we arose, and bade each other an affectionate, and perhaps a final farewell, with hearts too full, and feelings too deep to be suppressed, or expressed in human language,—after having lived and associated with them, shared their joys and sorrows with their liberality and kindness for a little over a year. May the good Shepherd still watch over, protect, and preserve the little flock in Cordova, is my humble prayer; that they may be presented to the Master in the last great day without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing.

After a very pleasant and prosperous journey of nine days, we arrived here safely, in good health and spirits. We visited several brethren on the way—held one meeting on Lord's day; and although among strangers, good attention was paid to the word. Also found an appointment out for the next day, (Sunday) which we met with a very encouraging prospect. A good congregation collected, who listened apparently with much interest. The next Sunday met two appointments in the same place, with crowded congregations before me, who seemed to be more and more interested. Next, visited some brethren at New Hartford, about thirty miles distant, and found Bro. C. Churchill had given out word for a two days meeting there for us, which we attended with an increase of interest throughout, and promised to visit them again soon.

Returned here again on Thursday last, and met another appointment in the evening,—find the interest is still increasing. I find a greater interest here, and we also like the country better, than we expected. We think to form a church soon, and have the prospect of a goodly number to join. I wish more of our brethren East would come and settle with us,—land is very cheap here now and is of an excellent quality,—a plenty of timber to be had very cheap also.

Pittsford, Butler Co., Iowa, July 22.

From M. P. Lamprey.

DEAR CRISIS:—It was on the same day of the week that Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went to the sepulchre, where their Lord and Master was laid, carrying with them sweet spices, to anoint him, as was then the custom of the people of the East. While they were consulting together, how they should roll away the stone from the door of the sepulchre, to their great astonishment they found it rolled away, and the door was opened, and looking into the tomb, they saw the linen clothes lying, and the napkin folded and laid in another place from where it lay when he was laid there, and two men in shining raiment standing, one at the head and the other at the feet, and the angel said unto the women, "Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified. He is not here, he is risen. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." [illegible] door of the [illegible], and, on looking in, found that he had risen; he was not there, but in his stead were two shining angels whom his Father sent from heaven to tell those who would seek him at the tomb, (for he told them he should rise again the third day) that he had risen. No wonder that the keepers did shake with fear, and became as dead men, when they saw that great stone roll away from the door without any visible aid; him, whom they were placed there to watch; bursting the bars of that tomb that had been made secure, and coming forth; his countenance was like lightning, and his raiment as white as snow. No wonder that the subterranean fires in the bowels of the earth were kindled; causing its internal parts to burst asunder; for the angel of the Lord came from heaven and rolled away the stone and sat upon it; for the Son of God had lain in that new tomb three days! Was it because his body had lain there, the part that was human; or was it that part that came from God, his divine nature, that had lain in the tomb? Did his Father send a convoy of angels to bear his soul back to reanimate his lifeless clay asleep in the tomb, or did his soul sleep with his inanimate body, and these angels come by the command of his Father to bid him soul and body to come forth into life, and make himself known unto his brethren, and then ascend up into heaven, there to sit on the right hand of God till he shall make his enemies his footstool? He appeared unto his brethren and the twelve apostles, three times, and then ascended up into heaven, there to intercede for poor sinners till he shall make his second advent to this earth.

Mast Yard, 1859.

From C. F. Churchill.

DEAR BRETHREN:—It has been a long time since I addressed you. Although poor and unlearned, it may be my privilege, perhaps duty, to speak some words of encouragement to cheer ye on the heavenly journey.

Sorrowing and tried children, the day of our glorious redemption is at hand! your Deliverer is nigh, even at the doors! Wait patiently, till he shall enter in. Hold on,—be true to the end! Overcome through the blood of the Lamb and the word of your testimony; then shall you inherit all things, receiving an abundant entrance into the eternal kingdom of God's dear Son,—a right to the Tree of Life, in the midst of the paradise of God.

Cling to his word. Have your conversation in heaven; for from thence shall appear Him who shall change your vile bodies, and make them like to his glorious body. Have eternal life insured, by its being hid with Christ in God; that when He who is your life shall appear, you may appear with him in glory.

Let your enemies rage, hate, persecute. Let the last day scoffers lift their impious voices in derision of God's word and the waiting church. Devouring wrath must eventually overtake them; they will be swallowed up in the awful silence of eternal death. Let the angry nations rush to the final conflict. Let the black, gathering clouds of doom hang above the ungodly, heaven-daring multitudes. Child of God! it shall be well with thee. The conflict will end in the cleansing of earth—in restoring it to the children of faith, its lawful heirs, and the righteous sceptre of the King of kings.

God help the perishing to seek for shelter in Jesus from the approaching storm!

From M. H. Morrison.

We would endeavor to make a few remarks on the necessity of writing and speaking in accordance with the Book. It is given for a rule, and the only rule, for the christian to abide by. Then, whatever the subject may be, we ought to be careful to have it in accordance therewith. Let the Book be the rule, though we should know of no societies walking by it.

There is a remark to the point in Sister M. D. W.'s "Letters" on Sanctification. She says—"The question to be settled is, not whether professed christians are thus 'wholly sanctified;' whether those who bear the name of Christ are made free from sin, and have their fruit unto holiness;' whether this is your or my experience; but does the Bible offer such a salvation to us, through Jesus Christ?" "It is for the evidences we are to search, and that in God's book: if we find them, believe them, whether any of the rulers believe them or not." Yes, we give our amen with Sister W., and not only on the doctrine of sanctification, but on every doctrine and example the good old Book contains. Departing from the rules, names and ordinances therein given,—what has it not done, and is still doing? My pen would fail to tell.

We often wonder that many, more do not see the evil tendency of departing from Scriptural names and [illegible]. With God, it matters, not what our errors are. When away from his counsel and paths, we believe one error is no worse than another in his sight. God is a jealous God, and will not be mocked.

[illegible] the church herself to choose, or devise rules, or counsel for herself. Her obedience [illegible]

let us ever prove our love by speaking, acting, writing, and abiding by the precepts of our Lord and Master, having respect to his will in all things.

O, what a precious treasure is the word of God! What an unfathomable mine for the child of God to dig in, who dig with a single eye to the glory of God! Its jewels are more precious than all the earth could furnish.

New Glasgow, C. E.

From M. McClure.

BRO. GRANT:—While meditating on the great account we shall have to give of our stewardship, I began to look heavenward for help, that I might say something that would arouse the dormant energies of those who have taken the badge of christianity. Fellow traveler, where are you now? Are you encompassed with sorrow? Flee to Jesus. Be entreated by one who loves your soul, hang not your harp upon willows, and forget to sing the songs of Zion. Seek for a full redemption in a Savior's blood. Death is abroad in our land; he is taking from our midst the youth, middle-aged, and those who have numbered threescore and ten; and we know not how soon we may be called to bid adieu to scenes of earth. Then let us come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may find Him of whom Moses and the prophets did write—Jesus of Nazareth. He has balm for every wound, a cordial for every fear. He is an all-sufficient Savior,—He waits to be gracious. See him standing, inviting us to come and partake of the waters of life freely! Was it not our sins that nailed him to the cross on Calvary? Shall we now deny him before a wicked and perverse generation? God forbid! But rather let us gird on the whole armor of righteousness—be ever ready to give a reason of the hope we have in Christ.

Some tell us the cares of life pressing heavily on them they can only find time to meet the calls of the sanctuary on a Sabbath. A Sabbath Christian! Think you that will stand the test? Methinks not. I awfully fear you will be found wanting in that day. He calls you, he entreats to be ready, "for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh!"

From Eld. J. Wilson.

BRO. GRANT:—When I was at the Wilbraham campmeeting I thought of going to the other campmeeting the next week, but finding I had taken a hard cold, concluded to go to Rhode Island, and being in the way the Lord led me to fields white already to harvest. Having been welcomed back to the old fields where I have formerly labored, I have concluded to spend the time here, if the Lord will, until next summer. I have lived in Rhode Island ten years, and preached in every town in the state. I will give my appointments in different places, from time to time, within those limits of time subject to preach in that place, at the time, when and where the friends may appoint. My post office for the present year will be Providence, R. I., in care of Christopher Wilson, Pontiac.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Nova Scotia. From Liverpool the 7th instant.

The Paris correspondence of the Times says: Much importance is attached to Prince Metternich's mission to St. Saveur. One of its objects is said to have been the formation of an alliance between France and Austria, and that its success was calculated not only to endanger the cause of Italian liberty, but to menace Europe. Metternich, it is understood, has announced to Napoleon the fixed resolve of Austria never to recognize the principle of allowing people to choose their own government, nor to admit the aggrandizement of Piedmont, without guaranties that such aggrandizement will not be turned against herself in Italy. If Napoleon comes to an understanding on these heads, Austria is prepared to make concessions, and will offer no opposition to the crown of Tuscany being conferred on Prince Napoleon. The writer then refers to a possible alliance between France, Austria and Prussia for regulating the affairs of Europe.

PARIS, Sept. 7th. The Moniteur of this morning contains the following: Yesterday the Plenipotentiaries of the Paris conference assembled, and had under consideration the double election of Prince Couza in the Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia.

It is asserted that Papal troops continued to threaten the Legations. 8000 or 9000, with 12 cannon, were assembled at Pesaro.

It is said Gen. Manuel de la Concha Marquez de l'Duero, will command the expedition against the Moors, and proceed to Gibraltar to await orders to sail for Africa. A strong naval force is to co-operate with the military.

Agitation in Germany was increasing in favor of a firm, strong and central government, and for the convocation of a National Assembly, in lieu of the present Diet. Prussia is called on to take the initiative.

It was said that the Zurich Conference had determined the boundaries of Lombardy.

Another meeting between the Emperors of France and Austria was expected to take place in Switzerland.

[Per steamship Arabia, three days later.]

FRANCE.

The Independence Belge asserts that France is making vigorous naval preparations and coast defences.

At a meeting of the Paris Conference, the Ottoman Ambassador announced that the Sultan had agreed exceptionally, and for this time only, to grant an investiture to Couza as Hospodar of both Moldavia and Wallachia—the government of these places, however, to be conducted separately.

It is reported in Paris that France had notified the Porte that it does not intend to treat the [illegible] political question.

PARIS, [illegible]. The Moniteur in an article [illegible] the Chinese, [illegible] and England [illegible] to take measures together [illegible] inflict chastisement, and obtain satisfaction which so flagrant an [illegible] requires.

The article in the Paris Moniteur, in regard to the peace of Villafranca, continued to occupy attention. It produced every unfavorable effect at Paris, and future complications, again menacing to the estate of Europe, were anticipated. The article came direct from the Emperor at St. Saveur.

It is stated in a Paris letter that the Prince Napoleon is much annoyed at the ruin of all the hopes which he had formed for the freedom of Italy. He declines to hold any converse with his cousin, and is about to leave Paris. It has been observed that the Prince has removed the Imperial arms from the panels of his carriages. His servants no longer appear in the Imperial liveries.

ITALY.

The conclusion was general on the Continent that the answer of Victor Emmanuel to the Tuscan deputation, in regard to the annexation to Piedmont, was preconcerted with Napoleon.

The Council of the different districts has officially proclaimed to the people of Turid that the Tuscan deputies had presented a deed of annexation to the Sardinian government.

The National Assembly of Bologna, on the 7th, adopted resolutions declaring that the people of the Romagna desire annexation to the Constitutional Kingdom of Sardinia, under the sceptre of Victor Emmanuel. Bologna was illuminated in honor of the event.

The Assembly also authorised its President to present an address to the Emperor Napoleon and the King of Sardinia, expressing sympathies for Venetia, and offering to make peculiar sacrifices in her favor.

The Pope had been attacked with fever, and suspended all audiences for several days. He was recovering and about to proceed to Castle Gondolfo.

A deputation was about to leave Turin on a mission to the French Government.

It was supposed that the Papal army was not in condition to act against the forces of Romagna, led by Garibaldi.

The National Assembly of Parma was opened on the 7th with great solemnity. The Dictator Farina delivered an address, reviewing the history of the Bourbons in the Duchies, and terminated amid cries of "Viva Victor Emmanuel!" The city was En fete.

Several French journals were prohibited in Sardinia, in consequence of advocating the separation of Savoy from Piedmont.

Proposals were pending in the Parma National Assembly to confirm Farina as Dictator, and declare the termination of the Bourbon dynasty.

The National Assembly of Parma, on the 11th, unanimously voted by ballot the decadence of the Bourbon dynasty and perpetual expulsion from the government of all princes of that house. In the same sitting, a vote of thanks to Napoleon was agreed upon.

Little is said of the Conference at Zurich, and it appears to have lost all interest. The Plenipotentiaries continued, however, to have occasional interviews. The latest telegram, dated 13th, says the Conference had been suspended until Count Colloredo received fresh instructions from Vienna.

The Herald's Paris correspondent states that Victor Emmanuel is disbanding his army but the men are supplied with passports for Tuscany and Modena, where they will swell the army of Central Italy.

The King of Sardinia does not intend to give up his position without a struggle. He has sent an order for 100,000 muskets, with a request that the "goods shall be forwarded as soon as completed." This order has been sent to France, but a new treaty of commerce between Sardinia and England is on the tapis.

The Florence correspondent of the Times, writing on the 24th of August says: "There are rumors afloat of a condensation of Austrian troops upon Mantau and the frontiers of Modena. On the other hand, Garibaldi is ready for the worst, and has drawn up his Tuscan and other forces in a line of battle, along the Modenese boundaries, towards Mantau."

Diplomatic dispatches from Turin (says the Nord) speak of the approaching return of Count Cavour to the head of affairs. The Count deemed it his duty to retire in consequence of the situation of affairs which arose out of the peace of Villafranca; but his policy has, nevertheless, been in the ascendant, owing to the strong national feeling of the Italians, and the fidelity of the Emperor Napoleon to the object with which he entered upon the war. The recall of the Ex-Sardinian Minister would be a new guaranty in favor of the policy which he represents.

A letter from Rome of the 30th ult. says: "It is believed in well informed quarters that the government contemplates making an attempt to re-establish by force its authority in the Legations. It has collected for the purpose between 7500 and 8000 men, 4000 of whom are Swiss; it has provided them with ten pieces of cannon. Rimini will probably be the first town attacked."

AUSTRIA.

A dispatch from Vienna, Sept. 2, says:

"No measures announced in the ministerial programme have yet been carried out. It is asserted that the privileges to be granted to a few will be influenced by local circumstances, the principal privilege will be the right of acquisition of house property in larger towns. It is also reported that Austria intends to discount that portion of the Austrian debt which will be transferred to Lombardy, and to sell the public domains."

FOUR DAYS LATER.

Explosion on the Great Eastern.

It appears that on the afternoon of the 9th, when off Hastings, a feed-pipe casing in the forward funnel, which had been introduced on the ground of economy in heat, and to keep the heat of the funnels from the cabins, exploded with terrific force, blowing the funnel into the air, and tearing to pieces the grand saloon and the lower deck cabins through which the funnels passed, and otherwise doing great damage to the internal fittings. Great consternation prevailed on board, and prompt efforts were made to get at the unfortunate men in the engineering department, who were either buried in the rubbish or prostrated by the steam. Three firemen were found in a dying state, and soon expired, while eight others were more or less injured, two of whom subsequently died.

The explosion is stated to have probably been one of the most terrific which a vessel has ever survived, and which none in the world could have withstood, save a structure of such marvelous strength as the Great Eastern. She not only resisted it, her frame sustaining no injury whatever, but it made so little difference to the movement of the vessel, that the engines were never once stopped till she reached Portland.

Prior to the accident the performance of the vessel was most satisfactory, and she was almost without motion, while large vessels in her vicinity were pitching and tossing in a stormy sea. A survey of the vessel has been held, and estimates sent in to forthwith repair the damage at a cost of not more than £5000, the injury being far less considerable than was at first supposed. Little, if any, delay would take place in the departure of the ship on her first voyage, but a rumor prevailed that she would not proceed to Holyhead, but sail direct from Portland. The accident caused a slight decline in the shares of the company, but did not influence the general confidence in the ship.

CHINA.

Admiral Hope arrived off Peiho river on the 17th of June, and found that the fortifications had been rebuilt, but no guns or men were visible. The entrance into the river was barred with booms and stakes. The Plenipotentiaries joined the squadron on the 20th, and, no notice having been taken of the announcement of their arrival, an attempt was made on the 25th to force a passage, when, on a sudden, batteries, supported by a Mongol force of apparently twenty thousand men, were unmasked and opened a destructive fire. After a severe action, the squadron was obliged to withdraw, with the loss of the gunboats Cormorant, Lee and Plover, and 464 killed and wounded.

The rest of China is reported to be quiet.

A further telegram mentions that seven officers were killed and seventeen wounded, Admiral Hope being among the wounded.

The English and French Secretaries of Legation to China had returned home in the mail steamer.

This news, of course, created much sensation, and the violation of the Treaty in such a treacherous manner, called forth demands for terrible vengeance. The Times says: Henceforth negotiations must be carried on at Pekin, where no one can doubt Europeans will soon be as much at home and as safe as at Paris. It concludes an article with the following uncomplimentary reflections on the American Ambassador. The American Ambassador without force of arms, is said to have been admitted to Pekin. Of course he had a peculiar claim to this exceptional privilege, on account of assurances given to the Chinese mandarins to deprive us of the just fruits of the late successful war. Whether this, or some new claim of the same character, rendered him more admissible than those who had opened the way to him, does not yet appear. If the Americans can open China to all nations by peaceful methods, let them do it; but, thus far, they seem better able to help themselves than to do any thing for the world at large.

The French Journals publish two letters of the exiled Duke of Modena to his Minister of Foreign Affairs, which were found among the archives of the government. They speak so contemptuously of the Emperor of France, that but little sympathy can be felt for him by Louis Napoleon, who is styled by the haughty Duke an illegitimate, a self-styled Emperor and a brigand, and the Duke is proud of having never acknowledged his Empire.

BEYROUT. A letter from Beyrout of the 18th August states that a sanguinary conflict took place in a village two leagues from that town, between the Druses and Christians, in which more than forty of the combatants were killed. Several houses occupied by Europeans were pillaged. The Governor of Beyrout sent 150 irregular cavalry to the spot, and order was restored, but too late, as the disturbance had extended to other villages, and it is feared that a general war will take place between the Druses and Maronites similar to that which caused so much destruction in the year 1846.

[From Southampton the 15th.]

It was stated in London that Spain had returned an evasive reply to the question from England touching the concentration of troops in the neighborhood of Gibralter.

The Florence correspondent of the London Times says it is reported that Pope Pius had received the extreme unction or sacrament, administered to the dying.

The Florence correspondent of the London Times says a treaty was signed on the 26th of August between the Papal government and the Queen of Spain, by which the latter engages to occupy the Roman States with her troops, when the French forces are withdrawn.

The Fulton Street Prayer Meeting.

The second anniversary of the Fulton street Prayer-Meeting was held to-day. The house above and below was crowded to its utmost capacity, the aisles and doorways being thronged. Several states were represented. Dr Leland, of Columbia, S. C., presided, and opened the meeting with prayer. After singing, remarks were made by Drs. Tyng, Murray, Mr. George H. Stewart, a Philadelphia merchant, and the three clergymen who have come to solicit aid for carrying on the Irish revival—Drs. Edgar, Dill and Wilson.

The managers of the daily prayer-meetings in Fulton street are encouraged by the increased attendance, and believe that another great revival is about to take place in this city.—N. Y. Post of the 23d.

[Cor. of Boston Journal, Philad., Sept. 20.]

I have heard so much of the great religious interest in Philadelphia that I have long wished to look on it myself. Men come to New York almost every week to talk of the zeal of the people here—the great religious work among the firemen—the meetings in the tent—and other things connected with the moral elevation of man. I went up last night to see the tent meeting. It was pitched on an open lot on Broad street, near Greene. An arched entrance admits the worshiper, on which is the verse, "Come go with us and we will do thee good." The tent is lighted with chandeliers, attached to the tent poles. The seats are comfortable, but without backs, and are covered with glazed cloth. The tent will hold about 1500 people. A small audience was collected last night. The people were from among the lowly, for whom the service was designed. The singing was dull and lifeless, and very faint. The name of the preacher was not familiar to me—but the sermon was not such a one as should have been addressed to such an audience. No common-place preaching should be passed off on God's poor, who hear the gospel so seldom. It was a hard sermon. No sympathy existed between the preacher and the hearers. The hungry sheep looked up—tried to be instructed—but give it up after awhile. Some nodded, some talked and laughed, some went out. The address—"Sirs"—"Oh Sirs"—"Dear Sirs"—"Young ladies"—to such a congregation was like "vinegar upon nitre." It was an abstract talk about piety. It was cold as ice. It was hollow as sounding brass.

ITEMS.

☞ PROF. FINNEY.—We understand that the Rev. Professor Finney, from America, who has been holding meetings in London for some months past, under the auspices of various denominations, is about to commence a series of meetings for the revival of religion in Edinburgh. We believe the place arranged for these services is Brighton-chapel.—Scottish Press.

☞ Professor George Bush, known as one of the ablest and most prominent expositors in this country of the Swedenborgian doctrine, lately died at Rochester, N. Y., after a long illness.

☞ CONNECTIONS OF REVIVALS.—An interesting fact in connection with the religious movement in Port-Glasgow has come to our knowledge. It appears that there are a number of persons in Port-Glasgow and Coleraine related by family ties, and this has led to a special prayer in Coleraine on behalf of Port-Glasgow. When the news of the awakening in Port-Glasgow was delivered publicly in Coleraine by Mr. Brownlow North, a gentleman rose up and said, "There is the answer to our prayers, now." They had been praying in faith, and confidently expecting an answer.—Guardian.

Conference

Will be held in Warren Co., Ill., near Shanghai, or where our brethren may think will serve the cause of truth best, commencing Wednesday evening, Oct. 19th, and continue over the following Lord's day. Providence permitting, I will attend the Conference. Bro. Chandler will be there also, Lord willing. WALTER PRATT.

Notice.

The Iowa, Minnesota and Wis. Christian Conference will be held with the church of God in Springville, Badax Co., Wis., commencing Oct. the 6th, 1859, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Lord's day. As this conference is young in organization, embracing in its territory a new country, and is therefore a new field of labor, it is desired that as many of the preaching brethren within the precincts of this conference shall attend as can do so; and that all the churches of like precious faith within the limits of the conference should be represented by delegates or letter. Those that write epistles of christian salutation, we hope will be sure to write in season for their letters to be presented to the conference. Those that write will direct to Y. Higgins, Viroqua, Badax Co., Wis.

Those coming from the south will leave the river at Badax city, as it is but seventeen miles to Springville. Those that come from the east will come to Milwaukee, and from thence take the Milwaukee and Mississippi R. R. to Sparta, and from Sparta to Viroqua; a stage runs every Thursday. Those coming from the north and north-west will leave the river at Lacross, from Lacross to Springville; the stage runs Tuesdays and Fridays; fare $1.50. Friends coming from the south-east of this State will come to Prairie du Chien, from thence to Viroqua; the stage runs Thursdays; fare $3.00.

By order of the conference,
Y. HIGGINS, Evangelist.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference holden the 14th, 15th and 16th of Oct., in the Jerome school-house, corner of Burton and Flint, in Genesee Co., Mich., four miles N. E. of Grand Blanc Center. Bro. and Sr. Seymour are expected to be in attendance to preach the word of life. Bro. Curry is especially invited to attend, and as many other ministering brethren as can make it convenient. Let us pray for a profitable season.

In behalf of the brethren,
A. F. SERVIS.

Providence permitting, we will hold meetings in the State of Maine as follows:

NEWBURGH, (where Eld. J. Morrill may appoint) Oct. 4th, 5th and 6th.

CONFERENCE AT NORTH HERMON Oct. 7th, and continue over the following Sabbath.

CONFERENCE AT HOLDEN, (where Bro. Clewley may appoint) Oct. 13th, at 2 P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath.

CORINNA VILLAGE, Oct. 22d, at 2 P. M., and over the Sabbath.

AUGUSTA, Oct. 26th, and continue over the Sabbath.

NOTE.—Will some Bro. in this place write us a line, informing us where the meeting will be held. Direct to North Hermon.

J. BILLINGS.
J. HEMENWAY.

P. S. We shall look for letters at Frankfort, North Hermon, Bangor, Corinna and Augusta.

General Convention in Northern Indiana.

It is proposed to have a General Convention of churches and preachers at Union Mills, La Porte Co., Ind., commencing Thursday, Oct. 6th, and continue over the following Lord's day. The object of this meeting will be to determine upon a system, or plan of arrangements, by which the cause of our soon coming Lord may be more largely and effectually advanced in this region of the West. All such as are interested in an effort of this kind are specially requested to be present; preachers in person, and churches by their representatives—as it may be expected that important measures will be adopted at this meeting, in the carrying out of which there should be enlisted the largest possible interest of such as love the coming and reign of the Messiah.

Brethren, ye who desire to see something more accomplished for the advancement of our common cause than has yet been accomplished,—ye who believe it can be done, and that it should be done,—let us now arise, and in a united, intelligently-defined and systematic manner, undertake this effort, spreading far and wide a knowledge of "the faith once delivered to the saints."

The church at Union Mills has kindly offered their hospitalities to such as may attend the meeting, and will spare no pains to make the visit of delegates agreeable; but having recently incurred considerable expense in building a meeting-house and otherwise, it is deemed proper to say we could not presume further upon their liberalities, hence it is suggested churches see to it that their preachers are sent to this meeting without being embarrassed for want of means wherewith to go and come.

Friends coming via P. Ft. W. and C. R. R. will stop at Hannah Station. Those coming by the M. S. and N. I. R. R. will stop at La Porte. Those coming by the N. A. and S. R. R. will stop at Westville, where brethren will call for them upon the arrival of Thursday afternoon train.

For the Crisis.

Woman's Position in the Church. No. 5.

Mrs. Crosby, of Leeds, Eng., was an itinerant and field preacher. Wesley highly approved of her conduct, believing that a dispensation of the gospel had been committed unto her. But in these days, men, who might sit as disciples at the feet of this eminent servant of Jesus Christ, reject the idea of female preaching, and some, who call themselves ministers of Christ, make it a matter of ridicule. Would that the days of primitive simplicity and power might return, and woman, with her warm, loving heart, and persuasive words of sympathy, might labor as was wont in the great harvest field. She has talents, mighty in their influence, lying buried in a napkin, because public opinion, to a great extent, is against the public improvement of them.

Mrs. Fletcher was a faithful preacher of righteousness. Let me quote one brief extract from her journal:—"Glory be unto thee, oh Lord! Thou hast enabled me this year to ride nine hundred and sixty miles, to hold two hundred and twenty public meetings, about six hundred select meetings, and to write one hundred and sixteen letters, many of them long ones; besides many conversations in private with individuals who wished to consult me on the concerns of their souls, the effect of which, I trust, will be as 'bread cast upon the waters.'"

Mrs. Mary Taft, the wife of Dr. Taft, author of "Memoirs of Eminently Holy Women," was eminently successful as a preacher. One minister, formerly a resident in England, who was well acquainted with her, stated to one who has nobly defended woman's right to occupy upon the gifts imparted to her, that over two hundred, who had been brought to Christ by the instrumentality of this woman, became ministers of the gospel. But she was by no means exempt from persecution. Her success in attracting the people to meeting stirred up the jealousy of the superintendent preacher, at one time, and he threatened to put her out of the society, unless she would give up exhorting and praying in meetings. Perhaps, however, this was not so much on account of his own jealousy, as that of another minister, who had no congregation to hear him, because they had all gone after the female preacher, and he told the superintending preacher, that if he did not stop that woman, he should give up his place. Mr. O. told him that he would, but when he saw and heard for himself, he dare not oppose, but remarked that he should deem it an honor to sit behind her when speaking, in order to snuff the candle for her. When she heard that she was to be turned out of the synagogue for praying and preaching, she counted the cost, and decided to obey God, rather than man. She thought it of greater importance to have her name enrolled in the Book of Life, than on the church record, and she believed that [illegible] occupy upon the talent com[illegible] trust, God would blot her [illegible] of his book. She therefore prayerfully committed her cause to her Heavenly Father, and pursued her labor of love, and it was not long before that preacher was ordered from his circuit for immoral conduct.

At another time, a preacher requested her to give over her public labors, to which she replied, "I will, if you will answer for me at the day of judgment for the one talent God hath given me;" to which he replied, "That I cannot do." When reading the [illegible] would break into her [illegible] that the gospel? [illegible] with you, if that be your gospel."

Let me give you a copy of a letter sent to her by the Rev. Mr. Fenwick, or rather an extract from the letter:—"God himself has sent you, like the great Wesley and the great Whitefield, namely, as a blessing to the nation. Nevertheless, you will have great need of the faith of Abraham, the resolution of a Joshua, the meekness of a Moses, the strength of a Sampson, the patience of a Job, the head of a Solomon, the zeal of King David, the love of St. John, the determination of St. Paul. My prayer is that God may put on you his whole armor, causing you to comprehend, with all saints, what is the length, breadth, depth and height of the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, and to be filled with all the fulness of God. Remember not a few eyes are upon you, some for good, but not all. Let Christ be your all in all; and in one word, let him be your finished example. I remain your everlasting friend, brother and servant to command, in the peaceable gospel of the Son of God."

Thoughts on Fallen Man.

Ever since man fell from the state of innocence and obedience in which he was created and placed in the garden of Eden, he has been prone to hide from God and to cover iniquity in his bosom, rather than to confess his sins and forsake his transgressions, as the law of gratitude would dictate and the gospel of Jesus Christ require.—When man sinned, all the malignant passions of evil entered his heart, and reigned predominant over his soul. Hatred, which like a goad urges him to his own destruction, is ever rankling in his breast, and mad with rage, he plunges forward like an angry horse in the day of battle, to trample under foot the Being he abhors, the law he dislikes, and even the offers of mercy and peace which he detests. Malice deliberately influencing his mind, like a deep, flowing river, presses him onward to plot all kinds of mischief against Him, whom he ought in his soul to admire and respect, and also against those who may love, or be loved by the object of his malicious spite.

This can only account for the ferocious persecution which has followed the people of God in all ages, and among all nations, from the days of Cain and Abel to the present time. If man had been possessed of hatred without malice, he would not have persecuted, he would only have shunned the society of him he detested; but malice pursues the object with an untiring zeal, which will never yield, even in death itself.

Show me a man or woman, if you please, who has malice against a neighbor, and I will show you one whose tongue will never tire, whose feet will never weary. Neither the torrents nor the blasts, the rains nor the snows, darkness nor light, will ever prevent them from spreading their malicious lies to injure their neighbor's character. They will visit the couch of the sick or the bed of the dying to whisper the oft-told tale. They will put on the visage of sanctity itself, and visit the sanctuary of God where holy men and women meet to praise and pray in order to drop their poison into the ear of some unwary listener. They will creep into houses to lead captive silly women, as says the apostle. They will separate very friends—they will destroy the peace of families—the prosperity of Zion. Such are the servants of Satan.

Envy is another base and sordid passion of fallen man. How mean, how selfish, how despicable is that soul that looks with contempt on those below it, that cannot be at ease when others are blessed, that rests only in the woes of others. Vexation and disappointment are the lot of its inheritance. "Envy," says Solomon, "is the rottenness of the bones." The envious man is his own tormentor. Job says, "Envy slayeth the silly one."

Correspondence.

From Eld. W. Sheldon.

Dear Bro. Grant:—The cause of Christ is on the advance in some portions of Minnesota. I have just returned from a four days meeting in Cleaveland, some sixty miles from this place, whither I went at the solicitation of Eld. G. L. Teeple, who has been laboring with success in that new field. Our meeting commenced on the first day of September. The brethren have erected a house of worship in that place, and though it was not finished, our meetings were held in it. The ministering brethren in attendance were Eld. Teeple of Arlington, Eld Hall of Ottawa, and Eld. Scott of the same place. Bro. Scott was for many years a preacher in the "Christian denomination," but has of late seen the truth upon the state of the dead, and now fully identifies himself with us. The Lord prosper him.

Our meeting, increased in interest from its commencement to its close. On week days we had two sermons and one prayer-meeting a day. On Sunday at half-past nine o'clock, [illegible] the number of communicants [illegible] hindered; but as it was, twenty-two sat down to the table. It was a very solemn time, and will not soon be forgotten by those who were present.

At the close of the meeting we performed the reluctant task of giving the parting hand to the friends of Jesus, while many eyes were bathed with burning tears, and others gave vent to weeping. It was hard parting—very hard, and the congregation lingered long. It forcibly reminded me of the time when Paul parted from the disciples, and they fell on his neck and wept.

During the meeting seven sermons were preached by the writer, and one by Bro. Hall. Also one soul was baptized by Bro. Teeple, and I learn that several others will soon go forward in the same ordinance—some would have done so then if they had not lacked a change of raiment. I traveled to and from this meeting on foot, which badly blistered my feet. Brethren in Cleveland are poor, yet they did what they could to relieve my temporal wants; their hearts are larger than their purses. They live in the forest, and their meeting-house is built of logs—a very commodious building. May God prosper them. Amen.

Castle Rock, Minn., Sept. 6th, 1859.

From Clara R. Adams.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Do not our hearts burn within us when we read of the glories that shall fill the New Earth? Does not the intervening time seem long? But Jesus hath said, "If I go away I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also." These are truly words of comfort to the children of God. May we all have courage, go forward, and fight the good fight of faith; for such there is a crown of righteousness laid up, which God, the righteous Judge shall give us at that day; yea, and unto all that shall love his appearing. But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. May we never get weary in well doing, for the promise is to him that endureth to the end.

"Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Oh, may we all have a home in that happy land, where the inhabitants shall no more say I am sick; and all share an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God, is the prayer of your sister in tribulation.

From "The Gift of Power."

How shall this Gift be Obtained?

BY REV. S. H. PLATT.

The question admits of two answers, according to the character of the inquirer.

If you are a faithful, zealous christian, claim it by an act of appropriating faith. It is yours by promise. For he is "more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him," etc. Yours by implication. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." Yours by design and duty. It is your duty to glorify God, and fulfill his will concerning you. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bring forth much fruit," and "I have chosen you and ordained you to bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain."

If you are merely a professor, or one who has not habitually performed every known duty, your course is, first of all, to follow the intimations of the Spirit. He may suggest a closet forsaken, a class neglected, a friend unwarned, a difficulty with a fellow-christian unsettled, an enemy unforgiven, a hard speech unrepented of, a wrong not atoned for, an injury improperly resented, an appetite unwarrantably indulged, a family altar in ruins, some vow unpaid, a prohibited indulgence, an undue deference to the opinions of the world, a forbidden conformity with the fashions and spirit of the world, some interdicted amusement, the good old Bible all dust-covered and neglected, some demand of benevolence unhonored, etc.

I repeat, follow the intimations of the Spirit. Wherever they may lead you, follow them; whatever self-denial it may demand, make it; to whatever ridicule, or persecution, or inconvenience it may subject you, welcome it. But everywhere, at all times, under all circumstances, as you value your peace, your life, your eternal all, go where the Spirit leads, do what the Spirit bids you. And never falter; for "unstable as water, thou shalt not excel;" and "he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed."

The Holy Spirit is the efficient agent in man's salvation, and all the means to it. In humanity's name, then, cherish it; in humanity's name, then, go on. A world of human intelligences groan in sin—[illegible] it a-bleed, and heaven urges the up[illegible] hosts triumphantly crowned, and robed, and palmed. Up, then, christian! up! gird thyself for life's stern conflicts!

The sound of conflict is abroad; haste, then, to mingle in the strife! Let no mere earthly motive chain thee now! Spurn from you the glittering seductions of sordid vanity, and the beseeching tones of slothful ease frown down, and away to the battle-field. It is no time to parley. While you deliberate the devil will have circumvented your desires, and blasted your hopes, and wrought out the ruin of a soul. He is not omniscient, but is too sagacious not to profit by your hesitancy. While you falter, and estimate probabilities, and calculate results, he will have fortified his position, and be fully provided against your attempt. But if to conviction you add instant and decided action, you may take the enemy by surprise, and gain much, before he can rally his influences to oppose you successfully. Some may think that this is viewing the matter too much in a human light; but I answer, if we would treat the devil as a great finite intelligence, instead of investing him with attributes of infinity, and then would bring the philosophy of human life to bear upon the subject, we would find encouragement many times, while now we only find despair.

Heed not the deceitful sophism that assures you that you would do if you were in a sphere of enlarged opportunities and extended usefulness. Remember that an ardent and glowing piety will wear its own channels, and define its own courses. Secure the piety, and the usefulness will follow. In the words of Steward, "The charter of conquest belongs only to an earnest christianity." Be in earnest where you are.

The coral mountains never would have been formed, had not each little insect worked away in his humble sphere, and toiled earnestly at his task. What if each little one had said, "We are away down here, 1,500 feet below the surface of the water; surely we can never lift our coral home up yonder"—would those rocks and islands ever have had a being? No, no; they toiled on, and, though generations lived and worked and died, the work went on, till hundreds of miles of towering reefs attested their success. So we may live and die, but we are each adding our cell to the glorious mountain, which is to fill the whole earth. * * * * * *

Scientific truths have become so familiar, and withal its skepticism is so bold, that we must go with the scientific investigator into every field of experiment, to turn every new fact toward Calvary; or, at least, to preserve it from the warping power of a doubting speculativeness, or a fraudulent philosophy.

Added to all this is the fearful fact, that the time to labor for any one given case is fearfully curtailed. Men live so fast, that the time of their impressibility is short. We live down more privileges, and abuse more grace now in ten years, than our fathers did in thirty. Hence, we grow old in unbelief, and callous in feeling, almost with the glow of youth upon our cheek. Hence, he who would win souls to Christ must labor faithfully. One hour's delay, and the favorable moment may be past; one day's procrastination, and the promising conjunction of circumstances is gone, and away in the whirl of life goes the object of our solicitude, and leaves us to the painful contemplation of our recreancy and his doom. O, if ever God's ministers needed to be endowed with a tireless spirit and an unflagging energy, it is now.

Would that the earnest cry might go up from the Church of Christ. "O Lord, revive thy work!" "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

"We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost!" Come then, O God, and breathe upon thy Church, and say, Receive ye the Holy Ghost.

It must be sought in the use of all the means. No degree of desire for this will atone for neglect of the means of grace. All must be attended, faithfully, cheerfully, prayerfully!

It must be sought expectantly! O how God-dishonoring is our unbelief!

What! Dare to question the faithfulness of our heavenly Father? A faithfulness, too, which stands pledged to accomplish the purposes of infinite love and compassion! No—No—No! "Let my right hand forget her cunning, and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth," but never never, let me doubt the promises of God! But, remember, a "clean heart" is its prerequisite! "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Think you that they were not justified when this promise was made? And what did the "coming of the Holy Ghost upon them" import, but the sanctification of their natures by his power? This was his first work, followed by his extraordinary and miraculous influences.

The Bright Side.

Look on the bright side. It is the right side. The times may be hard, but it will make them no easier to wear a gloomy and sad countenance. It is the sunshine, and not the cloud, that makes a flower. There is always that before or around us which should cheer and fill the heart with warmth. The sky is blue ten times where it is black once. You have troubles, it may be. So have others. None are free from them. Perhaps it is as well that none should be. They give sinew and tone to life—fortitude and courage to man. That would be a dull sea, and the sailor would never get skill where there was nothing to disturb the surface of the ocean. It is the duty of every one to extract all the happiness and enjoyment he can without and within him; and, above all, he should look on the bright side of things. What though things do look a little dark? The lane will turn, and the night will end in broad day. In the long run the great balance rights itself. What is ill becomes well—what is wrong, right. Men are not made to hang down either heads or lips, and those who do only show that they are departing from the paths of true common sense and right. There is more virtue in one sunbeam than a whole hemisphere of clouds and gloom. Therefore, we repeat, look on the bright side of things. Cultivate what is warm and genial—not the cold and repulsive, the dark and morose.—Anon.

The Soul Waiting.

I am footsore and very weary,
But I travel to meet a friend;
The way is long and dreary,
But I know that it soon must end.

He is traveling fast, like the whirlwind,
And though I creep slowly on,
We are drawing nearer, nearer,
And the journey is almost done!

Through the heat of many summers,
Through many a spring-time rain,
Through long autumns and weary winters,
I have hoped to meet him, in vain.

On the day of my birth he plighted
His kingly word to me;
I have seen him in dreams so often,
That I know what his smile must be.

I have toiled through the sunny woodland,
Through fields that basked in the light,
And through the lone paths in the forest
I crept in the dead of night.

I will not fear at his coming,
Although I must meet him alone;
He will look in my eyes so gently,
And take my hand in his own.

Like a dream all my toil will vanish,
When I lay my head on his breast,
But the journey is very weary,
And he only can give me rest!

—Adelaide Proctor.

Three Fools.

I will show you three fools. One is yonder soldier, who has been wounded on the field of battle—grievously wounded, well-nigh unto death. The surgeon is by his side, and the soldier asks him a question. Listen, and judge of his folly! What question does he ask? Does he raise his eyes with eager anxiety and inquire if the wound be mortal, if the practitioner's skill can suggest the means of healing, or if the remedies are within reach and the medicine at hand? No, nothing of the sort. Strange to tell, he asks, "Can you inform me with what sword I was wounded, and by what Russian I have been thus grievously mauled? I want," he adds, "to learn every minute particular respecting the origin of my wound." The man is delirious—his head is affected! Surely such questions at such a time are proof enough that he is bereft of his senses.

There is another fool. The storm is raging, the ship is flying impetuously before the gale, the scud moves swiftly overhead, the masts are creaking, the sails are rent to rags, and still the gathering tempest grows more fierce. Where is the captain? Is he busily engaged on the deck, is he manfully suggesting means to avert it? No, sir, he has retired to his cabin; and there, with studious thoughts and crazy fancies, he is speculating on the place where this storm took its rise. "It is mysterious this wind; no one ever yet," he says, "has been able to discover it." And so, reckless of the vessel, the lives of the passengers, and his own life, he is careful only to solve his curious question. The man is mad, sir; take the rudder from his hand; he is clean gone mad!

The third fool I shall doubtless find among yourselves. You are sick and wounded with sin, you are in the storm and hurricane of Almighty vengeance, and yet the question which you would ask of me this morning would be, "Sir, what is the origin of this evil?" You are mad, sir, spiritually mad; that is not the question you would ask if you were in a sane and healthy state of mind. Your question would be, "How can I get rid of the evil?" Not, "How did it come into the world?" but, "How am I to escape from it?" Not, "How is it that fire descended from heaven upon Sodom?" but, "How may I, like Lot, escape out of the city to a Zoar?" Not, "How is it that I am sick?" but, "Are there medicines that will heal me? Is there a physician to be found that can restore my soul to health?" Ah! you trifle with subtleties while you neglect certainties.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Trouble.

As the sun converts clouds into a glorious drapery firing them with gorgeous hues, and draping the whole horizon with its glorious costume, and writing in fiery colors along the vanquished front of every cloud, so sometimes a radiant heart lets forth its hope upon its sorrow, and all the blackness dies; and troubles, trooped to appall, seem to crowd around as a triumphal procession, following in the steps of a victor.—Henry Ward Beecher.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

"Our Home."

In Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y., is a health institution, appropriately denominated, "Our Home." We very much doubt whether there is another Water Cure establishment, or any other, in our land where a sick man, or one in the bloom of health, will feel more at home, and so well satisfied with the kindness, skill and management of the conductors, as at Dansville.

Dr. James C. Jackson, the Physician-in-chief, has had great experience and success in treating the various diseases common to our race. So far as our information extends, we do not hesitate to say that he is second to none in our country. He is a man who dares to tell the truth at the expense of his reputation, and defend the right if friends all forsake.

Miss H. N. Austin, M. D., his associate in the medical department, has also had extensive practice and is justly noted, not only for her most brilliant success in directing the sick in the road to health, but for amiable kindness toward those who come to "Our Home" to enjoy the benefits of the skill and friendship there exhibited. Besides these eminent physicians, they have three assistants who have had much experience;—F. Wilson Hurd, Miss A. P. Dewey and Eli P. Miller.

We know of no place we can recommend so highly to those who are sick, and wish to be permanently cured, as "Our Home" at Dansville. It is said none are cured who are given up by Dr. Jackson, while large numbers are here restored to health who are given up by other physicians. For several years, we have heard but one voice from those who place themselves under the care of Dr. J. and his associates. All speak in the highest terms of commendation; but we were unwilling to speak boldly till we had seen for ourselves. Having seen as well as heard, we take pleasure in recommending "Our Home" to all who need medical aid. If you wish to know the Dr.'s opinion before you visit him, write and tell him the particulars in your case, and if he thinks he cannot help you, he is honest enough to say so; besides, it will be best to write and learn if he has room, as his institution is quite full at present. If for no other object, it will pay one for a long journey there to learn how to live.

The Seeds of Consumption.

The terrible mortality caused by bronchitis, pnuemonia, and consumption, which together kill—in England and Wales only—a hundred thousand people, (being one-fourth of the entire mortality from more than a hundred other causes in addition to to themselves,) should make us think a little seriously of many things, and most seriously of the freaks of fashion, which set climate at defiance. Why do we send children abroad in damp and cold weather, with their legs bare, submitted, as their bodies are, to risks that even strong adults could not brave with impunity? Custom has made this matter appear familiar and trifling, but it is not out of place to say, at the beginning of winter, that the denial to young children of proper skirts to their clothes, and warm coverings to their legs, has sown the seeds of consumption in thousands and thousands, and is, of the many dangerous things done in obedience to the laws of fashion, the one that is most thoughtless and most cruel. It is in the child that consumption can most readily be planted—in the child, that when the tendency exists, it can be conquered, if at all. It is to be fought against by protecting the body with sufficient clothing against chill and damp, by securing it plenty of wholesome sleep—not suffocative sleep among feathers and curtains—plenty of free ablution without prejudices on behalf of cold water, plenty of cheerful exercise short of fatigue, plenty of meat and bread and wholesome pudding. Those, indeed, are the things wanted by all children. Many a child pines in health upon a diet, stinted with the best intentions. But the truth is that it is not possible to overfeed a child with simple wholesome eatables. It can be stimulated to excess in the demolishing of sickly dainties; and, with a stomach once fairly depraved, may be made incompetent to say when it has had too much. But a child fed only upon wholesome things, knows better than any mama can tell when it wants more; it can eat a great deal; it has not only to maintain life, but to add height and breadth to stature. Fortify it, then, against variations of climate by meeting freely the demands of the body; give it full animal vigor to resist unwholesome impressions. Especially let the good house-wife, who has a young family to feed, think it to be utterly reckless of her milk score. Somebody has declared a pint of milk to contain as much nourishment as half a pound of meat. Be that as it may, it is the right food for little ones to thrive upon, and may save much subsequent expenditure for cod-liver oil.

☞ When I reflect on the many causes of death latent within and around me; on the many avenues by which the breath of life may at any moment be expelled; on the frailty of every part of this complex frame; on its thousand strings, not one of which can be broken without the harp becoming a tuneless ruin; on the numberless conditions which must all be fulfilled in order to keep the spring of being in motion for a single moment—I am a wonder to myself; life becomes the mystery of mysteries, and God's guardian care an incessant miracle.—Rev. Dr. Peabody.

[illegible]

To Clergymen.

BY JAMES C. JACKSON, M. D.*

If there is a sight good to see, it is that of a man foregoing those pursuits whose chief end is to benefit him only, and turning himself heroically and calmly to an avocation whose chief merit is, that it will enable him to do good to others.

Such, gentlemen, is your calling. You can never rise above the dignity of it, nor the excellence which belongs to it. It is a noble calling—that of a minister of Him who was known pre-eminently for His love of Man. As you honor your profession, from my inmost soul I honor you. For I also am a minister, whose business it is as well to serve my patients spiritually as physically, to preach the gospel as well as to practice it, and though hands have never been laid on me, yet none the less am I ordained to speak the truth, when to do so is comely and profitable.

Will you pardon me, therefore, if I venture to call your attention to some considerations, heed to which, in my judgment, will largely add to your capacities for usefulness not only, but to your personal comfort.

1. One obstacle to your success as preachers and pastors is your sedentariness. This you indulge in excessively. Students, by the necessities of your profession, you must be sedentary. But to push the matter to extremes is unwise, and results in prostration of muscular force, and muscular weakness is a great cause of disease. By reason of it, Digestion, Circulation, Secretion and Excretion are made faulty. For want of a healthful performance of these and other functions, power to think, and especially power to think logically and truthfully, as well as continuously and profoundly, is lost. Thus weakness of body induces weakness of mind. And your minds being unhealthy, their processes are unhealthy, and of necessity their products are unhealthy. There is an immense amount of error afloat, having its origin in abnormal conditions of man's physical frame, and which no preaching nor praying can overthrow unless directed to the source from which it springs. You are in part responsible for this, because, as a general fact, you are feeble men, being neither what you ought to be, nor what your congregations expect you to be, nor what the cause you represent demands you should be, nor what you would be, if a fair proportion of your time was spent in active bodily employment.

Let me trace this out a little more minutely; for though it be admitted that you are good theologists, I can not admit that you are good physiologists, and Physiology necessarily serves as a substratum for Theology. Nature always paves the way for grace. Humanity precedes christianity, and those are always the poorest christians—the most imperfect representatives of Christ's life—who, other things being equal, are the sickest in body.

On what depends one's power to think? To think usefully, I mean. Given a good brain, a fine temperament, excellent culture, does it not depend on the state of the physical organization? As the brain depends for its power on the quality and quantity of blood which flows to it, and as the circulation of the blood for its evenness and energy rests in good measure on the vigor of muscular contractions which in a given instance can be put forth, so it is mathematically certain that the man who is the most muscularly developed—other things being equal—will be, must be, the best thinker. He will not only think the most deeply, but the most earnestly; not only the longest, but the most correctly. He will be the best man, and so the best christian, and so the best minister. Want of thought, viewed from this point, is owing to lack of muscular strength; and want of this to your close confinement. As a natural result of this absence of physical vigor, this almost effeminate delicacy of men of your calling, your characters fail to show massiveness—a quality very much to be desired in christian ministers. The servants of the greatest of men, the subjects of a real King, the ambassadors of the mightiest of Potentates, greatness becomes you. It belongs to you, and so far as it is or may be yours by nature, it seems to me that you should take great pains to incorporate it into your frame-work of character, and let it be seen in your personal appearance as well as in your ideas and principles. A delicate, narrow-mouth-shaven, white-faced, highly-sensitive person, who looks as if he would dissolve in a rain storm, or blow away in a high wind, is not the best type of a class of men whose avowed and public pursuit is to subdue kingdoms, work righteousness, obtain promises, stop the mouths of lions, and bring this horribly depraved and godless world into subjection to their Master.

The Balm of Gilead.

When the startled soul, long careless,
Feels within his inmost heart
Deep conviction's burning arrow,
With its keen, awakening smart;
How he cries in bitter anguish,
With the accent of despair,
"Is there no balm in Gilead,—
Is there no physician there?"

Every sin, long since forgotten,
Starts to life in dread array,
And he shudders as he contemplates
Their ranks in pale dismay;
Every hiding place is gone,
And he cries, and rends his hair—
"Is there no balm in Gilead,—
Is there no physician there?"

Lowly prone upon the ground,
Scarce to heaven he lifts his eye,
When a blessed beam of hope
Penetrates the darkened sky;
And he hears the voice of mercy
Thro' the wailing of his prayer,—
"There is a balm in Gilead,
There is a physician there."

My Thoughts.

What a vast array of biographies have been written, from Adam's until the present time! who can number them? and as various in their character as in feature. Many of them seem as perfect models to posterity in forming character; and yet all who have attempted to copy have invariably failed. The reason is very simple; the pattern was imperfect.

In looking over the Old Testament, we find many very lovely in their lives, and some there were pronounced by God himself as perfect. The same may be said of the New Testament. Yet as star after star rises and sets, one stands forth, bright, beautiful, eclipsing all others in the excellency of its perfectness. Well might His advent be proclaimed by the heavenly host,—and the birth-song—"Glory to God in the highest, peace and good will toward men"—might justly have been prolonged from Bethlehem to Calvary. From Calvary until now multitudes have caught the triumphal heralding, echoing back to Him the glorious tidings. Here we have a perfect pattern,—no sin,—all purity. Even the infidel is constrained to say, "He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."

What a touching legacy of love, meekness and humility has he left to his children! Always firm, yet gentle; dignified, yet familiar; ever forgetful of self in his labors of love; healing, strengthening, restoring while with his disciples, and leaving many promises of his continuing care while absent; which have never failed, as a multitude of witnesses have testified. Although his whole life was marked by a succession of acts, no one of which but would have been sufficient to have shown his power and authority; yet never anything but the same spirit of meekness and gentleness was manifested by him.

How affecting his prayer to his Father for his enemies while suffering the most cruel and agonizing of tortures, conscious at the same time of his innocence and holiness. No wonder the lookers-on were astonished in beholding the sympathy of heaven and earth in such a sacrifice, and the exclamation,—"Truly this was the Son of God." Three days of darkness and soul-sorrowing of his friends passed by, and what a change! Methinks I see them now, with joy-beaming faces, proclaiming the tidings of a restored, living Savior.

Thanks be to God for the simple, soul-stirring records of such a birth, life, death, resurrection and ascension of our future King! And who in reading these records, but feels his or her faith and love raised, strengthened and purified by the living example of One who never exacted from his followers what he himself shrank from. Master, friend, servant, all combined in one and each character—perfect.

Father, forgive, and grant my daily life may be more Christ-like, that when [illegible] [illegible] his kingdom and subjects, I [illegible] ALVIRA M. L.

Christian Obligations.

BY REV. S. H. PLATT.

"In like manner, also, that the women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array. But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works.—1 Tim. 2: 9, 10.

"Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel: but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God, of great price." —1 Pet. 3: 3, 4.

The foundation of man's obligations to love and serve his Creator, was, in the first place, found in the facts of creation and preservation. In view of these, God claimed all that he was, and all that he possessed. The great law—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," etc., though not formally declared, was the summary of his obligations, and the extent of his duties. But after his fall, the great plan of recovery, devised and promised by the Father, contemplated man in new and singular relations. The obligations growing out of creation and preservation were still binding; but, in addition to their claims, another was laid, in the fact of redemption, which demanded some peculiar and specific recognition. That recognition we find in the minor laws which characterize the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Not that they contain anything essentially different from the first great commandment, but are more properly express statutes, regulating the observance of that, in particular respects. They all rest upon the common basis—the right of God, as our Redeemer, to institute such regulations as He may think proper, for the government of his blood-bought creatures. Thus, says the Apostle: "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price;" revealing, in this single sentence, the great reason of the gospel administration, and its justification.

"Shall He not do what he will with His own?" has now an essential propriety, which is heightened by all the immense considerations of redemption. The passages at the commencement of this article are of the class to which we refer; and with the basis, which we have claimed for such minor laws, that cannot be unimportant. Their demands are designed to meet an important principle of our nature. Selfishness and pride, in their various forms, are the besetting sins of mankind, and of the church at the present time, and these demands strike at their very roots. While their prohibitions forbid their external development, their positive injunctions require a disposition which will effectually exclude their existence.

The love of dress and display has reached a point of ruinous extravagance, which threatens totally to annihilate the simplicity of gospel life. So gigantic has the evil become, that it has enthroned itself in the hearts of the children of God, and converted the domestic altar and the public sanctuary into shrines for its own offerings. Its despotic power has sealed the pulpit and the press; and he who dares to denounce its unhallowed usurpation, is sure to meet an anathema more to be dreaded than to the ignorant Catholic is that which issues from the papal throne. So sensitive is the public mind, that upon the first mention of the subject, preparation is instantly made to treat it with ridicule, or indignantly to repel it as an encroachment upon the sacred rights of christian liberty. But why is this? Such conduct usually presupposes something wrong. Let us, then, lay aside all prejudice, and examine the subject with the candor which its importance merits.

Let me here be distinctly understood as disclaiming all desire to banish all those distinctions in the external appearance which the conventionalities of social life have created; on the contrary, I admire the inventions of art, and the decorations of a pure taste, but it is the excessive exhibition of those particular developments of pride and selfishness, prohibited in the Scriptures referred to, to which I object, and against which is directed the present effort.

I object to this exhibition:

1st. Because it is irrational, and a remnant of barbarism! All uncivilized tribes exhibit the passion in its excessive development. We, the boasting lords and ladies of this brightest era of the world's history, and the period of man's highest exaltation, yet servilely imitate their example, daguerreotype their passion, and vie with them in their extravagance of folly. What more humiliating spectacle than to see the fairest of God's creation endeavoring to increase their charms by the borrowed lustre of the trinkets of barbarians! Looking at the rationality of the thing, I hardly know which could claim the preference, the ridiculous custom of the South Sea Islanders, of hanging large pieces of bone by an aperture in the nose, or the more refined one of our own fair damsels, of boring the ears in order to suspend weights of shining gold.

2d. Because it is only a perverted taste that commends them! I know that it is said, "God has given us the beautiful to enjoy, and since these things are beautiful we may enjoy them." I answer everything, beautiful in a certain sense, may not be enjoyed.

An obscene picture may be beautiful as a picture, but shall we therefore adorn our walls with it? There is a moral element in all true beauty, and when that element is wanting, or is wrong, there is no true beauty in the thing; and none that may be enjoyed. In jewelry, as such, there is not one particle of beauty! The material of which it is composed may be beautiful, the artistic skill displayed in its construction may be beautiful, but the article as an instrument of adornment is not, because the moral element is wholly wanting or totally wrong! There may be a kind of intellectual beauty in it, it is true; but as the intellectual is only made for the moral, so intellectual beauty is only preparatory to moral beauty, and considered alone as imperfect, and not true beauty. The taste is adapted and designed by the Creator to view the first only in and for the last; and therefore it is, in a certain sense, a vitiated taste that will approve of that which is only intellectually beautiful. In view of this we may lay this down as an axiom. The truly beautiful is always useful! The illustration already used will serve to make this subject still clearer. An obscene book or painting, may be intellectually beautiful, i. e., the paper may be of the finest quality, the binding superb, the canvass may be fine, and the colors rich and mellow, and laid on with perfect precision, and this is pleasing or intellectually beautiful, then, but is the picture or the book as such beautiful? No! Why? Because its moral tendency is bad. It is not really beautiful, then, because it is not useful, or, in other words, the moral element is wanting. For further proof, look at the sculptures of the best artists that the world has ever seen, which stand confessedly as the models of a pure taste, and specimens of genuine beauty. Do we find them enveloped in such meretricious aids to beauty? Never! Every one feels as he gazes upon them that such trappings would mar the whole. No! the statuary which enchains a world's admiration is adorned in the glittering gew-gaws of modern sentimentalism! Besides, and as a fact, in striking contrast with this, and one, too, which speaks volumes—how are the figures adorned in those paintings which are hung up in certain places, which shall be nameless, on purpose to excite the passions, and inflame the imagination of the unwary? Yes, and how are the living originals of those pictures attired when they issue forth to consummate their deeds of darkness? A word to the wise is sufficient. When angels are depicted, it is always in the modest sweetness of female attractiveness, or in the noble beauty of manhood in its purity, but never adorned with the glittering tinsel of imaginary beauty. Again, God never prohibits the truly beautiful to man. Throughout the whole gospel, not an instance can be named where He has forbidden the useful or the beautiful, yet these are forbidden; the conclusion then is irresistible, they are neither useful nor beautiful.

3d. Because an habitual attention to them enervates the mind, and unfits it for life's stern responsibilities. We need not here enlarge upon the principles upon which this proposition is founded, but make our appeal to general facts, within the compass of every person's observation. It is well known that those most addicted to the use of ornaments are of a light and airy turn of mind, and are too much engrossed with such trifles to regard as they ought the more serious concerns of life. The last plays, or the opera, or the cotillion party, or the levee, or the fashions, or the last novel, form the substance of their conversation and their thoughts. Nor from the principles of mind can it well be otherwise; for the passion, naturally strong enough, has been fostered by indulgence, till it sways the mind with a species of intoxicating power, almost perfect in its control. To this it will not do to reply that, "they are thought so little of, they cannot produce such effects;" for stubborn fact still testifies against them. If they are such slight objects of thought, why spend so much time in arranging them? Why always be so very sure, before appearing in the street, parlor, or church, to bring the ear-rings forward, so that the head-dress may not conceal them? And why be so very particular to adjust the bracelet, so as to have it seen to the best advantage? And why so very careful (carelessly) to place the [illegible] in the most conspicuous position? These are not evidences of a want of thought, and any person who thinks enough of them to do so to any extent, regards them sufficiently to insure the mental consequences stated.

4th. It tends directly to engender vanity, and deprave the heart! The tendency of anything may be best understood by considering an extreme case as an illustration. Dress up a little girl for he first time in fine attire, and adorn her with all the ornaments of our grown-up daughters, and you will have a specimen of the ridiculous pomposity of childish vanity. But why are the affected strut, and labored gait, and fulsome airs so ridiculous? Simply because it is native vanity, acting itself out, without the restraints which social life throws around those of more mature years. But in either case, the vanity is there, as the endless twists, and turns, and adjustments which the mirror of the dressing-chamber beholds, can testify. As truly as indulgence feeds desire, does this practice increase the native vanity that first prompted to it. But serious in the light of the future as is this consideration, is it also true that it depraves the heart? It must, as a natural consequence of the foregoing. But there is another and more direct way in which it accomplishes the same result, viz., by stooping so low as to attempt to seduce the admiration, which, perhaps, personal charms might not win, or to point and render more fatal those at present sufficiently dangerous. When vice allures most successfully, it is when decorated with the trappings of luxurious vanity; and when virtue is most strongly tempted, it is when its outward semblance takes its hue from the same medium. To be at so much pains to court the empty adulation of fops or fools, is, in itself, degrading enough, but when its influence is an offering upon the shrine of lustful pride, it becomes all to consider it well. Again, unfounded contempt, or unmerited scorn is always depraving. But nothing tends more than the use of these adornments to engender such feelings in the soul, when brought in contact with those who cannot, or will not do the same.

5th. It creates a spirit of extravagance which must, sooner or later, prove ruinous! If jewelry is worn, the whole dress must correspond. If the decorations are expensive, the fabric must be on an equality. No sooner is an addition made to the ornaments than a corresponding advance upon the value of the whole attire must ensue. The consequence is, many ladies wear a small fortune upon their persons. This stimulates the less wealthy to imitate their example, in order to be eligible to the same society; and thus on, down through all ranks, spreads the destructive influence; and the result is seen in the discouraged fathers, care-worn or bankrupt husbands, speculating beaux, and the general monetary pressure of the times. To the patriot and philanthropist, these are considerations of fearful moment. If the past has lessons of instruction for us, we may find, in the close connection existing between opulence, the love of display and extravagance, and the rapid decline of national character and strength, in Babylon, Tyre, Sparta, Rome, Spain, etc., the beacon which would warn us of the reefs upon which they were wrecked. This single evil is doing more to undermine our institutions, curtail our benevolence, and limit the salvation of the gospel, than all other causes combined. Thus far, we have only urged reasons which naturally occur to the mere moralist. It becomes us now to press home the subject to the christian conscience, by stating others of peculiar significance to that character. The christian should abandon or avoid the practice. 1st. Because it is inconsistent with his progression. The child of God professes to have "come out from the world," crucified "its affections and desires," "put off the old man with his deeds;" that he is "dead to the world," and that he has "put on the new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness." Now, what greater inconsistency can there be, than for one who makes such a profession to exhibit every mark of the basest subjection to the god of this world. "But those who make the highest professions practice it, and why may not I?" Ah! the withering curse of such examples! I know they do it, and I know, too, that by doing it, they are laying up for themselves bitter pangs of sorrow, when they learn the truth. Sin is sin, though it be surrounded by every virtue; and inconsistency is marked, though it be veiled by a thousand graces. Who has not heard utterances of astonishment from those who have listened to such high professors, as they have proclaimed the simple and humbling truths of gospel salvation, while decked in their livery of gold, and gems, and costly array? I have known those who stood as confessed ornaments of the church, and who loved to proclaim the glorious doctrine of christian holiness, to labor to persuade others to strive for higher attainments. And I have heard such whispered exclamations from those who listened, as totally annihilated all good impressions, and evidenced the power with which the conviction of their inconsistency was forced upon the mind. "Why, she thinks just as much of dress as any one else," has been the death-knell of all hope of good from such efforts. Never! and I would utter it with all possible emphasis, never will that heaven-sent doctrine accomplish its glorious work, till its own professors shall disrobe themselves of the whole paraphernalia of earth's adornments, and permit holy principle to be exemplified by pure example.

A Leaf from Early Christian Experience.

Shall earth forever my affections hold,
Stern disappointments blight their richest bloom?
Sorrow and care have made me early old,
Seek, oh, my soul, a fairer, better home!

I do believe Christ is the Son of God,
That o'er the sons of men his soul did grieve,
That for our sins was shed his precious blood,
And yet, and yet, why do I disbelieve?

There is a something, what, I do not know,
Which leads me further from the Shepherd's fold,
Which keeps my heart still fixed on things below,
And makes my prayers to Heaven dull and cold.

I sit beside thy grave, mine early friend,
Thou diedst a christian, and thou art at rest;
For thou hast solved life's problem, and its end
Has given to thee a still and pulseless breast.

And when that last trump sounds, thou wilt awake,
Eternal life will Jesus give to thee;
Millions will then rejoice and millions quake,—
Alas! my friend, what will become of me?

Cheering Thoughts.

When weary with the cares of this life we love to turn our thoughts to our blessed Savior, and think of him, an innocent babe, reposing in a manger. We love to trace his life as he grew to manhood, and began to perform his "Father's business,"—began to teach men the way of life. We love to meditate upon his precious precepts, and his example of meekness and humility; we love to dwell upon his heart-cheering promises to fallen man: "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy-laden, and I will give you rest."—"For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, sister, and mother." Cheering thought! that we now stand in such close relationship to him who is continually interceding with God in our behalf. Then, if we add another declaration that fell from his lips—"It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," we have no further excuse for lack of faith to believe that if we give ourselves to Christ we are accepted of God and heirs to the kingdom.

As we kneel to ask God to give us those things which are needful for us, we seem again to hear Jesus say, "What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." Then, we think of his agony in Gethsemane, and realize that he was willing to be accused of evil, to be numbered with transgressors, to have his blessed hands and feet pierced with cruel nails; to wear a crown of thorns upon his pure brow; to spill his blood, and, in excruciating torture, to give his life as a ransom for our sins. He could even beseech God for those who were reviling and tormenting him: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!"

Again, how consoling the words, "I go to prepare a place for you; and, if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you to myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." Precious promise! that we shall be with Jesus. Even if he were to be the meek, despised, being he was while upon earth, it would be glorious to be with him; but it will not be so.—When he comes again, he will come as a King, to conquer and to reign. Myriads of happy angels will be his escort; he will bring with him a glorious city, the place of our future abode. Then shall we behold such beauty, grandeur and glory, as our mortal minds are not capable of comprehending, or our longing hearts anticipating.

No mortal eye hath ever seen,
No mortal ear hath heard;
No mortal heart can ever know,
What He's for us prepared.

☞ It would be a poor result of all our anguish and wrestling, if we won nothing but our old selves at the end of it—if we could return to the same blind loves, the same self-confident blame, the same light thoughts of human suffering, the same frivolous gossip over blighted human lives, the same feeble sense of that unknown toward which we have sent forth irrepressible cries in our loneliness.—Adam Bede.

Everyday Duties.

Have faith in God.

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.

Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. Pray without ceasing.

Praise the Lord, for the Lord is good: sing praises unto his name, for it is pleasant. Keep thine heart with all diligence for out of it are the issues of life.

Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. Mortify your members which are upon the earth—uncleanness, inordinate affection—and covetousness which is idolatry.

Put on, therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

Be diligent in business. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. Say not unto thy neighbor, Go and come again, and to-morrow I will give, when thou hast it by thee. As ye would that men should do unto you do ye also unto them.

Do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith. Love your enemies; bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. If a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

Husbands, love your wives and be not bitter against them. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands as it is fit in the Lord. Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged. Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh. Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven. Let the oppressed go free.

Set a watch at the door of thy lips. Let your speech be always with grace. If any man among you seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.

Beware of covetousness. Give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven. It is more blessed to give than to receive. Give alms of such things as ye have. Distributing to the necessity of the saints; given to hospitality. Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him. Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. Forgiving one another. Exhort one another daily—lest any be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from DEATH (not eternal misery) and shall hide a multitude of sins.

Be patient in tribulation. Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. Be still and know that I am God. Be careful (over anxious) for nothing, but in every thing, by prayer and supplication, and thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God, and the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. Rejoice in the Lord always. Commit thy way unto the Lord and he will bring it to pass. Trust in the Lord and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed. Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord—establish your hearts (in the holy truth) for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then (not at death) shall we appear with him in glory.

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest. And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as unto the Lord. Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil. H. G.

Progress of Truth in Wisconsin.

BRO. GRANT:—Having lately returned from Wisconsin, where I have spent the last ten months, and, in the time, more especially this spring, visited the brethren in several localities in the state; I thought some notice of the progress of the truth among them might, perhaps, be interesting and encouraging to those of like precious faith.

During last fall I stopped in Township No 14, Range 1 West, in the eastern part of Badax Co. I labored some on Sundays during the fall, in the place; but without any apparent success. In the winter I taught school on the southern line of the same Township; where I labored once in two weeks during the school, and spoke to them also several times this spring. Several embraced the truth, and I trust will hold on, and be found waiting when Jesus comes, ready to share in the riches and glories of the "Marriage Supper of the Lamb." Three of them subscribe for the Crisis.

I was at the Quarterly Conference held at Russell's Corners, Sauk Co., last March. Bro. G. W. Barnes (formerly of N. H.) lives here; and during the last year or more has started a good interest in this and adjoining localities. Several have embraced the truth, and are strong in the faith. Others are convinced that these things are so, and often contend for the faith, but do not take upon themselves the responsibilities of christians, and reckon themselves on the Lord's side. The Conference was attended by Bro. Y. Higgins, Evangelist, who preached the word to us every evening, and the two Sundays in the time. The attendance was fair, but not large. The roads were extremely bad; which probably accounted, in part, for the small attendance. Bro. Barnes was ordained, and a church organized.

After the Conference, I went to Sauk Prairie with Bro. Bush (formerly of Massena, N. Y.), and spoke to them five times in his vicinity. Had as good attendance as could be expected, the roads being so poor. I here found much encouragement and consolation in talking over the events of our past history as a people, and our strong ground of hope for the future. They had stood up for the truth without any apparent success, till they were almost discouraged; but the Quarterly Conference in their vicinity (about fifteen miles), and the opportunity of hearing and conversing with one of "like precious faith," after hearing error presented for truth, and darkness for light so long, gave them much encouragement to strive on and hold out firm in defence of the truth.

After spending a week or more with them and Bro. Hines, also from N. Y., whose kindness I would remember, I went to West Point, Columbia Co. I there found Brn. Stone and Polly (formerly of Massena, N. Y.) Sent out an appointment, spoke to them once, and had good attention. Conversed much on the present condition of the church, in reference to spirituality, and measuring ourselves by the word, and not by ourselves. I trust the conversation was not in vain. We engaged in prayer, and parted reluctantly, but hope to meet again in the kingdom. On my way to Bro. Barnes', I stopped all night with one who has lately taken a stand for the truth through the labors of Bro. B. He told me that he had been a believer in the "life and death" view as taught by us, for twenty years, having heard it preached about that time since in Nova Scotia, by an old acquaintance of his, who had been educated for a Catholic Priest; but had found, in studying the Greek and Hebrew [illegible] readings, that the popular doctrine of an "immortal soul," "endless misery," etc., were not found in the Bible; and he ran away from Rome, determined never to preach what he knew to be a lie. He was compelled to go under an assumed name, lest the Catholics should take his life [illegible].

Leaving Bro. Barnes, I went to see Bro. G. W. Turner, [illegible] of [illegible], formerly of Syracuse, N. Y., [illegible] Eld. C. B. Turner. [illegible] since last fall, [illegible] of life, an opportunity [illegible] [illegible]. Assisted by [illegible] awakened a good interest, and [illegible]

[illegible] went to Wonewoc, led there by frequent requests from persons wishing to hear on the Advent faith. Was received and well entertained by a Mormon. Spoke on Spiritualism as a sign of the times. The [illegible] of this place are infidels; but they turned out well, and listened with attention. They have no place suitable for meetings at present. An old grocery was obtained for this occasion. They design to build a school-house this season, and wished to have a course of lectures on the Advent truths, as soon as they could then provide a convenient place to assemble.

Leaving with them some tracts and books on our faith, (silent but effective preachers,) I went to Viroqua in Badax Co., where Bro. T. Higgins has labored the past year or so with fair success, and also in the vicinity. Found Bro H. absent with his wife attending an appointment in Seneca. Went to Springville (about three miles), and introduced myself to Bro. Morse, formerly of N. Y. State, and found a "pilgrim's home" with them. They were believers before they came West, but hearing no Advent preaching, they had almost forgotten how it relished, till they found "a feast of fat things" in hearing Bro. Higgins. I found other good and interesting brethren here, the fruits of Bro. H.'s labors. Among them a Bro. and Sr. Dodgeson, who, it seems, have meditated much on the doctrine of future punishment, but have, as they affirm, found themselves utterly unable to reconcile the doctrine as they have heard it preached, with the character of God as presented in his word. But hearing the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked, and life only through Christ, they immediately became interested, and searched the word gladly, to know whether these things were so. They have become firmly established in the truth, and are able to give a reason for their hope.

Bro. H. having returned, I went back to Viroqua, and found him somewhat afflicted in body; nor was sister H.'s health excellent, but they were both strong in the faith, looking for that blessed hope. Although they have been "disappointed" with others, and have long fought the battles of the Lord, in trials oft, and beginning to feel the infirmities of age creeping on; yet having watched with anxious solicitude the tarrying of the Bridegroom, they await the cry, "Behold he cometh!" ready to trim their lamps and go out to meet him.

A few weeks after leaving here, I visited Appleton, on Fox river, where I found several brethren, some of them from Homer, N. Y. I spoke to them several times; first on Spiritualism, and followed on the coming of Christ and the saints' inheritance, and closed with the destiny of the wicked. In speaking on Spiritualism, I gave the Spiritualists an invitation to attend; and at the close of my remarks each evening, gave liberty to reply. As I took the position that these miracles were performed by demons (Rev. 16 : 16), and that Spiritualism was a counterfeit of christianity got up by the evil one to deceive, and finally destroy those who follow it; and that these miracles were calculated only to confirm and establish them in their delusion; they were not a little irritated with the support which the Bible gave to my position. Like most other Spiritualists, they had become so used to "blowing hot and cold with the same breath," in reference to the Bible, that to overthrow the arguments I had drawn from it against them, the speaker condemned it as "the work of knaves," saying also, that any doctrine could be supported by it; and yet, when he came to speak in favor of his position, alluding to various facts and phenomena as arguments for Spiritualism, he did not hesitate to affirm that the "Bible supported Spiritualism;" and he said more: that, "Spiritualism supported the Bible." He said that the Bible was written by mediums, and that all the angelic communications recorded in it, as the appearance of angels to Mary at the conception of Christ; to the shepherds at the birth of Christ; to his disciples at his resurrection; and to John on the Isle of Patmos; were but "spirit manifestations," such as we now have among Spiritualists. I showed the audience that, in each of the cases cited, "angels" communicated and not "spirits;" and that the Scriptures hold out to the believer a hope of being made equal to the angels, and not angels in truth; that an equality demands two identities—the angels, and those who are made equal to them. That the office of angels is to "minister to those who should be heirs of salvation;" but the office of glorified saints, to "judge angels." That "the spirits of just men made perfect" are not included in the "innumerable company of angels" to which we shall attain.

The gentleman then wished to know what evidence I had that angels existed before man had died. I called his attention to Job 38 : 7, asking him who the "sons of God" were, that "shouted for joy" when the "foundations of the earth were laid?" He seemed unable to meet it to his own satisfaction; and every attempt to patch up his defeated theory only made it look [illegible]

[illegible] Spiritualism [illegible] the [illegible] church [illegible] interested in the truths we advocate [illegible] under the direction of the Methodists. But the Spiritualists evidently maintain an equally strong front. A professor in the College has been lecturing in favor of Spiritualism, which has caused the officers much annoyance. They appointed several meetings to consider his case; but he still holds his professor's chair, without (as I am told) yielding his inclinations to Spiritualism. The President, also, (Dr. Cook,) seems determined to keep up with orthodoxy, if he has to follow it into Spiritualism; for I am credibly informed that, in a conversation on future punishment, not long since, with a gentleman in the vicinity, he stated that, if it was true that there is no place of punishment now in existence, it was not time to preach it yet.

I scattered tracts at the various places visited, and here among others; but I have just received a letter stating that the tracts left are all scattered. I would commend this place to those who have the disposal of "free tracts for the West." Send to John Griswold, Appleton, Wis.

I have learned that Brn. Stephenson, Reed and others, are having good success in this State; and also that some of the Sabbath brethren are spreading the life and death truths with energy; but as these are all the places I have visited, I cannot speak particularly of others. I think on the whole, that Wisconsin is as promising a field for laborers as I have found in the West.

For the Crisis.

Conference in Reading, Mich.

Agreeable to appointment, the church of God in this section of country assembled in the flourishing village of Reading, Mich., and listened with much interest to the proclamation of the gospel by our dear Bro. and Sr. Mansfield who are worthy luminaries of the cross of Christ. Their discourses were good, well adjusted, and timely; and doubtless will secure a lively interest among the people to the faith and hope we cherish; and trust that the meeting will also serve to arouse all of our brethren and sisters to renewed energy in laboring effectually to carry forward the best and holiest of all causes among men.

There have been some trials and disaffections among us for a time past; but I trust that the darkness is receding. Already there are omens of better days. O Lord, hasten it in thine own appointed time! is our fervent, daily prayer. When the church occupies that prominence which the gospel affords them, no human influence can withstand their burning testimony, without feeling that they are fighting against God and the salvation of their own souls. We occupied the Freewill Baptist meeting-house—a commodious place, during the meeting. Our Baptist friends truly deserve praise for their liberality; and may their liberality lead them to understand, receive and acknowledge the truth presented on that occasion. The Methodist friends were out, notwithstanding their minister in his announcement of our meeting made remarks, the tendency of which was to prejudice more than enlighten his hearers relative to our true position upon the subject of Spiritualism; but his congregation gave us a respectful hearing; and I feel confident it was not altogether a lost opportunity to them. May they always find it a pleasure to "live not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," irrespective of party interest.

It is in this connection that I would in behalf of our friends who reside some two and three miles away, tender to Sr. Turner (a member of the Methodist church, and wife of one of our merchants) our grateful acknowledgements for her spontaneous and polite invitation to Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, to partake of their hospitality during the meeting, which they did; and may the manifold blessings of that God who remembers all benevolence bestowed upon his servants, rest upon them here and hereafter. We remember Bro. and Sr. Wigent, and others, who kindly cared for our friends during the meeting. May the blessings of Abraham be theirs in this life, and a rich reward at the resurrection of the just.

The meeting closed with a discourse on Spiritualism by Sr. Mansfield. Spiritualism for the last few months has found some converts here. Some ministers have endeavored to meet it; but, as Sr. Mansfield said in her discourse, "Not having the right tools," of course no advantage was gained over the enemy, but rather they rejoiced over all efforts to destroy them. But when the word of God was unsheathed and applied in a proper manner, it dwindled into insignificance. The discourse was appreciated by nearly all of the congregation, and none, I think, can fail to discover the power of truth as presented on that occasion. It was mighty to the pulling down of this satanic delusion; and I trust that Spiritualists themselves, after more mature reflection and investigation, will abandon it, as unworthy of their sympathy and support. I can not censure and condemn, as some orthodox ministers do, that class of people; from the fact they have all been nurtured and trained in the school of [illegible] mortal soulism, till they have ripened into modern Spiritualism, which is the legitimate fruit of that doctrine.

Viewing this phenomenon as we do, the doctrine of no immortality only through Christ, and the unconscious state of the dead, holds a very prominent place in our preaching; and I hope all of our ministering brethren, lay members, and all who sympathise with us, will keep these truths before the people; for if any thing will save people from that delusion which is swallowing up its thousands, this will do it.

A short time since, a minister not far from here preached a scorching discourse against Spiritualism; and then two weeks after, preached a sermon on the immortality of the soul—consciousness of the dead—going into the spirit land at death,—and even went so far as to say that the spirits of the dead did communicate with the friends they had left! Can such ministers be any thing but Spiritualists themselves? I leave the candid and unprejudiced to judge.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 5, 1859.

Queries.

A correspondent asks the following questions:—

1. Will the wicked endure as long as the righteous?
2. Did God breathe into man a part of himself?
3. If there is a part of God in man, will it die? if not, what is the soul of man?
4. Is man, or a part of man, sensible after death, before the resurrection?

1. "Will the wicked endure as long as the righteous?"

This question is very easily answered, if we adhere to the Bible. David says, "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Ps. 37: 10. This shows that after a while the wicked will not exist; and consequently will need no place for a residence; hence the declaration, "Thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." There is no place provided for them. Why not? Because they are not to be destroyed and need none. "He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." Prov. 29: 1. If the time could ever come when they would be restored to life again, after their destruction, such restoration would be a remedy. "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed forever." Ps. 92: 7. Paul says, when speaking of "the enemies of the cross of Christ," that their "end is destruction." Phil. 3: 18, 19. And to settle the matter forever, beyond all dispute, he says of those who "obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction." 2 Thess. 1: 8, 9. The word aionion, here rendered everlasting, is the same one that is rendered eternal. Hence we find it most clearly taught in the Scriptures that the wicked will cease to exist as conscious beings. When speaking of the Savior's future work, John the Baptist says:—"Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat [the righteous] into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff [wicked] with unquenchable fire." Matt. 3: 12. If the fire could be quenched, a portion might be saved, but as it is unquenchable, it must utterly consume the burning object. Says David, "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Ps. 37: 20. When they have consumed away, are they living in full strength and vigor? The absurdity of such an idea is too palpable to need a moment's time to make it plain to the unprejudiced.

In the parable of the tares and the wheat, the Savior tells us, the tares represent "the children of the wicked one;" and then says, "As the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world." Matt. 13: 40. Admitting the wicked are to be burned up and be no more, how could the fact be more plainly expressed than in the Scripture language already quoted? If the Bible writers do not mean what they say, how can we tell what they do mean? Another says, "Behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. 4: 1.

Without quoting the multitude of other plain Scriptures on the point, corresponding with those already adduced, we submit these in answer to the question,—"Will the wicked endure as long as the righteous?"

We have found it declared, "Yet a little while and the wicked shall not be;" "his place . . . shall not be;" "they shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy;" "they shall be destroyed forever;" [illegible] in destruction;" "everlasting destruction;" "he will burn up the chaff;" "they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away;" "as the tares are gathered and burned in the fire;" "burn them up." We do not see how language can make the subject plainer.

2. "Did God breathe into man a part of himself?"

We find no Bible proof that he did. The record of creation reads, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Gen. 2: 7. We are taught to cease "from man, whose breath is in his nostrils." Isa. 2: 22. When Solomon is comparing man and beast, he says, "They have all one breath." If this "breath of life" "is a part of God," it would make him partly a beast; as we have found this breath of life common to men and animals. If such a monstrous doctrine could be believed for a moment, the believers would have a God at war with himself, whenever two men or beasts happened to get mad at each other. If men are a part of God, then he drowned a part of himself at the flood, and burned a part of himself at Sodom. Does a part of God prompt another part of himself to get drunk, swear, cheat, lie, and murder? We will trust the reader to come to his own conclusion.

3. "If there is a part of God in man, will it die? if not, what is the soul of man?"

From this question we draw the inference, that it is believed that the soul is a part of God. Will God destroy a part of himself? "Fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. 10: 28. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezk. 18: 4. Does a part of God sin? Have we a sinful God? If the soul is a part of God, then a part of him sins and "shall die." Without pursuing this abominable doctrine further, we think it settled forever that the soul is not a part of God. In answer to the question what is the soul of man? we would say, the word rendered soul is translated life one hundred and forty times in the Bible, and might be thus rendered in many other places. By the soul of man, we mean his life, or "animated principle." When used in this sense, it is applied in common to man and beast. The following are a few examples where the words rendered soul are translated life. "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath (nephesh) life." Gen. 1: 20. "Every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is (nephesh) life." Gen. 1: 30. "Prolong my (nephesh) life." Job 6: 11. "If thou save not thy (nephesh) life to-night, to-morrow thou shalt be slain." 1 Sam. 19: 11. "A righteous man regardeth the (nephesh) life of his beast." Prov. 12: 10. These may suffice for the O. T.—"They are dead which sought the young child's (psuche) life." Matt. 2: 20. "For whosoever will save his (psuche) life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his (psuche) life for my sake, shall find it." Matt. 16: 25. "The creatures which were in the sea and had (psuche) life, died." Rev. 8: 9.

We have now found that the soul of man is not a man inside of man, but the "animated principle," common to man and beast. The primary use of soul represents the whole being.

4. "Is man, or a part of man, sensible after death, before the resurrection?"

The Scriptures settle this question at once. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10. "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything." Eccl. 9: 5.

Christ's Kingdom.

A correspondent inquires:

1. "Do the Scriptures teach that Christ has, or that there is a spiritual kingdom set up on the earth at this present time?

2. What shall we understand by the kingdom being peace and righteousness?"

To the first inquiry, we would say, we know of no plain scripture that teaches such a doctrine. We do not find one word in the Bible about a spiritual kingdom, or a kingdom of grace; but we read of a kingdom "under the whole heaven," which "shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." Again, we read, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." If the kingdom is one of grace, as many believe, and is in christians' hearts, then "flesh and blood" has inherited it; then it would follow that Paul's statement is not true.

There is one passage, which, at first sight, seems to sustain the idea of a spiritual kingdom, set up in the heart. It is found in Luke 17: 21, "Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for behold the kingdom of God is within you." The preceding verse introduces the subject as follows:—"And when he was demanded of the Pharisees when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say," &c. In the sermon on the Mount, the Savior said to his disciples "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Very strange that he should then tell the Pharisees themselves, that the kingdom was already in them, when we can [illegible] no where find [illegible] his disciples that the kingdom was in them. Observe, the Savior informs his followers, that except their "righteousness shall exceed" that of the Pharisees, "in no case" shall they "enter into the kingdom,"—not the kingdom into them. There is a wide difference between going into the ocean, and having the ocean go into us. And, again, it is very singular that those wicked Pharisees should be the only people that had the kingdom in them; a people who hated Christ and his teachings. If this remark in Luke 17: 21, had been made to Jesus' disciples, there would have been some more plausibility in the position. But what does he mean? The word basileia, rendered kingdom in Luke 17: 21, may also be correctly translated "Royal Dignity, Royal Majesty," and is rendered in the latter way in the Emphatic Diaglott. By "Royal Majesty," we should mean the King, instead of the kingdom. In the margin of our reference Bibles, our translators have put the word among, as a substitute for within; thinking the passage would be properly translated if it read, "the kingdom of God is among you." We heard Prof. Whiting* preach on this subject, in New York, who said this clause should be rendered, "The King is among you." This makes the passage plain and harmonious with the context and all the rest of the Bible.

2. "What shall we understand by the kingdom being peace and righteousness?"

The text referred to is in Rom. 14: 17. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." We understand the apostle to mean that the kingdom of God does not consist in eating and drinking, or merely gratifying the lower passions and animal appetites, but a world where no unrighteousness is found, but all are peaceable, and joyful in the Holy Spirit. We learn that in the "new earth,"—the kingdom,—which the saints are to inherit "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." When "the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom," [not the kingdom take them] then will they possess a land noted, not for gluttony and drunkenness, like the present world, but for righteousness, peace and joy.

Campmeeting Item.

In our report of the Wilbraham campmeeting, we omitted to state that Sr. M. S. Mansfield, Buchanan, Mich.; and Sr. Elvira Fenn, Brookfield, Ct., were commended to the churches of Christ, as faithful laborers in his vineyard. They have proved themselves worthy the confidence and support of those where they may labor.

The reason of the omission was because we expected Bro. H. L. Hastings would prepare a report of this interesting part of our exercises; as he has the recommendation which was unanimously adopted by the church at this meeting.

Tracts for our Sailors.

While the noble appeal in behalf of sending books to the far West, has been as nobly responded to, there is considerable interest being manifested in another direction, the object of which is the scattering of tracts among seamen. There has already been much done it this way, and doubtless good accomplished; but the major part of the theology thus disseminated is not in strict accordance with the Bible.

In view of this, it is suggested by a number of brethren residing in the various seaports, that a tract be written for GRATUITOUS circulation among sailors; which, by its style, will arrest their attention, and, having done so, make them acquainted with some of the prominent truths by which we are distinguished. The importance of this step is obvious, as every ship, thereby, might be made to contain one or more missionaries, to carry the glad tidings of a Savior's coming to every nation and kingdom under the whole heavens. The generous tar will at once take hold of the life and death doctrine, and with as much earnestness as he has often rejected the "hell-fire code" of popular belief. Gross superstition, which once prevailed among this noble race, I may say no longer exists; although some old "salt" may still insist upon the existence of mermaids and the "flying Dutchman."

I have been asked to write such a tract. I will do so, with God's assistance, to the best of my ability, provided I get enough to publish it. The distribution among sailors must be gratuitous; for however ready they are to "shell out" for what suits their taste, you cannot find one in an hundred to pay for a tract.

I know the Adventists have many calls upon their liberality, yet I would make an earnest appeal in behalf of the "blue jackets." My profoundest sympathy is with them; for I know that they are, as a whole, the most generous and honest-hearted men. Being associated with them from my boyhood, I feel deeply upon this subject. Isolated as they are so much from the world, their vagaries mainly arise from the novelty of being at liberty; and I never knew a truly-bred seaman who was proof against [illegible] the tale of sorrow [illegible] handed the supplicant [illegible] a sailor [illegible] Israelite [illegible] no guile; and it is marvelous, the salutary influence which such an one exercises among a ship's company. He has to put up with "considerable" at first; but, having once established a character, he is ever after honored.

Now fifty or sixty dollars will set this work a going, and those who aid have the privilege of partaking in the distribution. Dear brethren, and sisters, too, the object is surely worth an effort; and I feel assured that I do not make this appeal to you in vain.

For the Crisis.

"In Union there is Strength."

To the brethren scattered throughout the eastern portion of Pa., "of like precious faith":—As I know of no united action on the part of the brethren of eastern Pa., or of church order for the spread of the gospel as we believe it, I may ask how can much good be accomplished? "In union there is strength." Dear brethren, is it not high time that we, as a people, (who are looking for the soon coming of the Savior to give eternal life to all his believing ones,) should be up and doing? The brethren east and west are proclaiming life only through Christ, and his speedy coming, and much good is being done, the Lord is blessing their labors (as the Wilbraham campmeeting testifies); and shall we remain inactive, while thousands of our fellow men are perishing for lack of God's truth, and a money-loving ministry are dealing out fables for filthy lucre? Dear brethren, let us try some plan whereby we may act in concert, that we may do some good, and be the means under God of saving souls. "Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Jas. 5: 20. Can we not have a conference meeting sometime this autumn, to devise means whereby we may assist each other in preaching the word of life to dying men, and in spreading the glorious truths of the gospel of the "Son of God?"

Could not the following plan be adopted? Let the preachers meet, say in November, in some central place, as Lancaster, Reading, or any other place between Philadelphia and Harrisburg, as a majority of the brethren may select, and an invitation given to the brethren and sisters to meet with us on a Thursday or Friday, and hold over the Lord's day; evenings and Lord's day for preaching, etc., and the intermediate time for business. If such a plan can be adopted, and I think it can, I pledge myself to do all in my power for the cause we so dearly love. If brethren will communicate with me and enter into the above plan, or suggest any other so the cause of Christ may be advanced, I will do all I can.

Yours, brethren, in hope of eternal life through Christ alone.

A Call For Help.

What think you of this? I speak to those who are looking for the Lord soon to come, and who enjoy the blessed hope of entering the kingdom then. Can we not get this precious truth before many others, and be instrumental of awakening and leading some more of our fellow men to Christ, that they with us may reign on the new earth? I think so, you think so, too; then let us rally, and do all we can to fill this part of the land with the good news of a coming Savior. Christian charity not only works at home, but goes abroad to do something for the perishing. Let us send the word into new places where they call for it, and also strengthen the things that remain in old places.

You see by the report of our late State Conference in Maine, that an evangelizing system was adopted, a treasurer, and committee of three chosen, to act and send aid to new and destitute fields as means shall be furnished. We want to aid the preachers, that they may spend all their time in the field, and also sustain one or two evangelists who would like to come among us from abroad. Shall we do so? It is for you to say. Some of us will do all we can. Will all do so? It is to sustain God's men in leading sinners to Christ. We earnestly solicit aid from all who will, in the state and out of it. Do not hesitate to give because you can do but little. "Two mites," or one, will be acceptable; anything from one cent to one hundred dollars to put into the treasury of the Lord will be used in his cause. Some can give $5, some $10, some $25, some $50, or $100, by a little sacrifice. One of our preachers gave $10, and another $5, for this work. Can we not raise $1000 to be used in this work the coming year? By a little energetic activity, self-denial, sacrifice and devotedness to the cause of Christ and his kingdom, it can be done. Book publishers, who will, may donate books and tracts, and we will gladly use them.

Come, brethren and sisters, the end will soon be here. Let us work while we can. Begin to "lay by as the Lord has prospered you." All our ministers will act as agents.

There are some scattering ones all over the state, who wish the Advent ministers would visit them. Send in your mite to help them and [illegible] also. Some can send pledges to do when their money comes in, within the year. We wish to know on what to depend, and how fast to proceed in the work. You can correspond with Geo. Humphrey, of Yarmouth; Ralph Harley, of Sheepscot Bridge; or with I. C. Wellcome, the treasurer, at Richmond, Maine.

Ralph Heeley,

The Christian's Standard.

BY H. L. H.

Every system must have its nucleus—every army its standard; and, in order to a proper understanding of any system, we must possess a knowledge of its central point. Astronomers were for a long time sorely perplexed in their investigations, because they believed that this globe was the centre of the universe, and consequently they expected the sun, moon and stars to move merely as the attendants of this world. They, of course, found everything in inextricable confusion, until at length some one unlocked the mystery by showing the sun to be the common centre, around which the earth and other planets must revolve.

A similar difficulty would seem to exist in the minds of believers in christian doctrine, who have taken anything but the true gospel centre as the centre of their respective systems. Some persons have done this. Seizing upon some glorious doctrine which may have been by others too much neglected, they have presently and often ignorantly attached to it an undue importance, and have made it the central point of their system of truth—the one object that, gaze from which side they will, they seem always to have in full view.

The result of a course like this, is like that produced by placing the shaft of a heavy wheel anywhere but in its centre. In turning the wheel under these circumstances, it describes, what is called an "eccentric circle;" it is varied in its movements, and if ever suffered to regulate its own position, will always stop with the heavy side down.

Seeing that there must be a centre to the christian system, we inquire, what is it? We answer:—

First: it is no man, or class of men. The gospel of Christ revolves upon no such axis as this. Popedom with its countless abuses, evils, and absurdities, is an example of an experiment of this description, and the result has shown how one-sided was the nucleus proposed by those that have upheld it.

Again, the centre of christianity is no doctrine or class of doctrines. Doctrines occupy their appropriate and important position, but they are not the centre. The evils resulting from disregarding this principle, are apparent in the numerous one-sided and proscriptive systems of the present day. Some doctrine is selected as the true centre; but an observer will soon understand, by the jolting of the chariot, that the axles are anywhere but in the centre of the wheels.

What, then, is the centre of the christian system? We answer, a living, personal, Jesus Christ. Nothing else can fill, or should be allowed to usurp, the place of "Christ who is all and in all."

The systems of men leave Christ in a great measure out of the account. He may be a skilled practicer of cunning arts—he may be a profound philosopher—he may be a good man—he may be a great prophet—he may be anything or everything but the only begotten of God, the light, the hope and the Savior of the world. Others, while they grant all that the Scripture teaches with regard to the character, power, and office of Christ, yet they seem practically to leave him, to a great extent, out of the calculation. This class, while they think much of salvation, seem to forget the Savior; while they think much of rewards, they forget the Rewarder; they think much of the kingdom, but forget the King; and, while the mighty work of redemption attracts their thoughts, and calls forth their admiration, they seem to forget the glory that is due to the wondrous Redeemer who hath devised and accomplished all this mighty work. This should not be so. No doctrine, however important, no truth, however dear, can supply the lack of this chief corner-stone.

The position that Jesus Christ was to occupy in the economy of grace, seems to be intimated by the prophet Isaiah, who describes him under the figure of a rod or scion, out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch that should grow out of his roots, which he also characterizes as a root of Jesse. These two characteristics are found in but one personage, and the two ideas are beautifully connected by one who said, I am the root and the offspring of David. This linking together of ideas, answers the question that so often puzzled the Jews—"how is he then his Son?" For we are as the root of David, David called him Lord; as the offspring of David, "he is his Son."

In the first, this personage appeared. Not in kings' palaces; not, [illegible] by [illegible] circumstances of earthly glory [illegible]. But a Jewish couple were traveling by the way; night overtakes them at Bethlehem; there is no room in the inn; beneath the shelter of the stable, the mother brings forth her first-born and lays him in a manger—the prophecy is fulfilled—he is a rod out of Jesse, and to human appearance a root out of dry ground.

But this same personage was to stand for an ensign to the people. This babe, that drew its first breath within the humble walls of Bethlehem's stable, was to be a rallying point for the world—an ensign for the people.

The uses of an ensign are various, and vary with circumstances. In the camp, it is used as a central token around which men can congregate. To it, all who desire to enlist and engage in the warfare, gather themselves together. Under its flowing folds the gathering hosts are disciplined and marshaled for the conflict.

While marching, the utility of the ensign is obvious. Every army has one. While the Israelites were passing from Egypt to Palestine, they had their standard. It was that glorious pillar that loomed up before them—by day a cloud—by night a flaming fire. Throughout their weary journeyings it maintained its position, leading and guiding the wandering hosts amid all the perils of the wilderness, until at last they reached the borders of the goodly country for which they had so long sought.

In battle also, the ensign is always visible. It is found in the point of the fiercest conflict—while it floats, the conflict is still undecided, and gathering under it and trying to maintain its honor, soldiers fight as they fight no where else.

Beyond the conflict, when the victory's gained, the ensign is never forgotten. Wreathed with garlands—borne on amid bursting acclamations of the victorious warriors, it waves in beauty alike above the victors and the vanquished.

Two objects amid these varied scenes are attained by the use of the ensign. First: it indicates the rallying point or place of authority—the centre of the army. Second: it shows to every beholder the character of the army that rallies beneath it.—each nation possessing its peculiar standard. Whenever it is unfurled, all who behold it are instantly informed who those are that follow in its train.

Christ is the christian's ensign. He is the one object to which every eye should turn; not by constraint, as the finger of Baalam was turned towards the star of Bethlehem; but with earnest, humble and inquiring disposition, like that of the angels who "desire to look into" redemption's glorious mysteries. Toward this standard, everything that is of God seems to turn our gaze. To this everything else, both of law or gospel, converges. Types and shadows find their substance here. The slain sacrifice, the passover, the first fruits, the law with its sanctions, the priests with their sanctity, the prophets with their prophecies, and even the burning and shining light, the prophet, and "more than a prophet," all seem to come and present their commissions and their followers to him who stands as an ensign of the people. The apostles also determined to preach not themselves, but Jesus Christ the Lord—to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified; and, awed by their presence, it was not till after their "departure" that men dared to "arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them."

Here, then, is the christian's ensign, and under it christians should rally. The importance of what we come together on, compared to what we come together under, is inconsiderable. Let our platform be as good as it may be, our camp as correctly arranged as it can be, if we are not under this ensign "we are at fault."

Not only should the christian rally under this standard, but he should always march beneath it throughout all his pilgrimage. If any man serve me let him follow me, is the direction given by Jesus and reiterated by Paul and every other minister, be ye followers of me even as I also am of Christ.

In the battle also, they should ever gather around this ensign. Here, amidst the smoke of constant conflict, they should fight the good fight of faith. Here should they wrestle against principalities and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world. Here should they resist unto blood, striving against sin. Here should they resist the devil until he flees from before them. Here should they war a good warfare, until the herald's voice is heard proclaiming the warfare accomplished and the victory gained.

In connection with the announcement of the uplifting of this ensign, two other features are declared.

First: to it shall the Gentiles seek. The Jews had their standards. Professedly they were Moses and the prophets, really they were the doctors, and traditions of the elders. A few of them followed Christ, but the majority refused to rally beneath this humble ensign. But if we look at the Gentiles, we see a Syrophenecian approach, we see a Samaritan drawing near, we hear Jesus saying, "go ye into all the world," we behold Cornelius sending to Joppa [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ing our eye along the world, we behold [illegible] rallying to the ensign, serving the one Lord," confessing the "one faith," being buried in the "one baptism," and rolling on like rivers from the far-scattered mountains, to mingle in the one "family" that says to God, "our Father which art in heaven"!

What has produced this result? What has gathered together these incongruous materials and blent them in one perfect mass? What has gathered delegates to "the church of the first-born" out of every kindred, nation, tongue and people? Was it a doctrine? Was it a man? It was a LIVING CHRIST. One who had died for their sins—had risen for their justification—who ever liveth to make intercession for them, and who shall come again to redeem his people and exalt them to his own right hand.

This was the ensign around which they rallied, and this glorious gathering beneath it was foreseen by the prophet, who said, "to it shall the Gentiles seek."

Second: "And his rest shall be GLORY" (margin.) The soldiers of Alexander, after following him till he had conquered the Persian Empire, and overrun India so far as the river Ganges, seeing no prospect of a termination of their toils, refused to follow him across the vast deserts that lay beyond. They feared no foe, but they desired a rest after having so faithfully served their king; but in following him, they saw nothing but a prospect of interminable toil before them.

Not so with the christian's condition. Those who march beneath this standard, have in prospect a peaceful rest. But what is this rest? Shall it be mid scenes of sorrow? Shall it be idleness? Shall it be decrepitude? Shall it be insensibility? Shall it be death? Oh no! Such rest is afforded by this world—this shall be all unlike it, for "THIS REST SHALL BE GLORY." There is the end. "Salvation with eternal glory." Sweet conclusion of the sad scenes of earth. The storm is past and sunlight gilds the world. The din of battle's past, and blending with, and swallowing up, its closing cry, is heard the holy song of peace. Bliss smiles from shore to shore. Joy fills a ransomed world. The ransomed ones are there, and their sweet songs are borne on Eden's gales. Crowns of glory are bestowed upon them. Saints and angels walk in harmony, for they are "equal." Purity and peace are conjoined; for God hath made the world "first pure and then peaceable." The ENSIGN, too, is there planted in glorious and everlasting triumph on Zion's sacred heights, and beneath it the war-worn saints repose in endless peace.

Brethren! you see the ENSIGN, will you "seek it?" Now is the hour of conflict. A little before you is the eternal rest. God help us to gather round the "ensign." God help us to march under it, to fight under it, to conquer under it and to rest under it; for HIS REST SHALL BE GLORY!—Selected.

Correspondence.

From E. Macomber.

BRO. GRANT:—When I read letters from brethren and sisters in the Lord, my mind is strengthened. In this hour of temptation, besetments and false accusers, we should endeavor to comfort one another with the words of faith. "That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may lack of nothing." Here we notice that, having faith in the Lord and fullfilling his requirements, we may lack nothing. Thank the Lord for this promise! These words, and their context, surely are a comfort to the children of the Lord.

As we look abroad, we may not doubt the Lord's near approach; we can see fulfilled many things spoken of in his word, being positive evidence of his immediate advent.

Sunday Eve, Aug. 28th, after being in a meeting with unbelievers, trying to awaken them to a sense of their condition, and opening the word of the Lord to them, speaking of things to come, and being filled with the spirit of the living God, we saw Satan's kingdom tremble; and, thank the good Lord, I expect to see it fall very soon. You, my dear brethren, that have faith, pray for Block Island, that it may be visited with the power of God, and that some of the Lord's servants may be compelled to come over and help us; that the Lord may have a company of jewels on this island of the ocean at his coming.

I believe in days gone by, the seed has been abundantly sown here, and some of it fell on good ground; but now it wants watering and nourishing, to spring forth to everlasting life. Oh! may the Lord water it from the wells of salvation, and vivify it by the warming influence of his Holy Spirit. For this I pray.

New Shoreham, R. I.

From Wm. H. Shackford.

BRO. GRANT:—It affords me great pleasure to receive the Crisis. It is an oasis in this desert of sin and sorrow,—a mentor, pointing out the path of truth. As often as I receive it I am reminded of the pleasant hours I have spent with the brethren in that "upper room," speaking of the [illegible] [illegible] And often, on [illegible] to Chapman Hall, where I heard the words of life and truth from the lips of Brn. Burnham, Hastings, and Moncrieff. I feel thankful that I ever heard the truth, and have been set free from some of the errors that bind me here in this world.

Go on, dear brother, in the good and noble work; and may we all be found among those who shall sing the "song of Moses and the Lamb!"

South Windham, Me.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Plymouth Hollow, Ct., Sept 20th, 1859, EMILY A., the beloved daughter of Elam and Mary E. Potter, aged ten years, one month and ten days.

Her disease was dysentery. Emily was a child much beloved by all with whom she had been acquainted; but few of her age ever command the affections of all as did she. Her sickness, although of but four days duration, was severe; but she was patient in affliction; and as Death laid his icy grasp upon her, the family came around her bed. She raised her eyes to them and saw them weeping. She told them not to weep for her, "for" said she, "I shall come up again in the morning, when Jesus comes!" She did not seem to have any fears of death; but when asked if she had any thing to say to her friends, her reply to each of them was, "You must be good." She leaves a sister to mourn the loss of a faithful companion. May He, who has said, "I will be a present help in every time of need," stand by her in this trying hour, and bring her safely home at last, where she will meet the sleeping one to part no more.

Our brother and sister sorrow not as those who have no hope, for they believe little Emily will come again from the land of the enemy, and they hope to meet her in a land where the inhabitants will never say, I am sick. The funeral was attended by J. W. Crabtree. W. B.

LYDIA, wife of Bro. John Flood, calmly fell asleep on the morning of Sept. 2nd, to rest from her sufferings till all the believers in Christ shall be called forth to receive their promised, eternal rest.

Sister Flood has for some years past been troubled with a cancer in the breast, which caused her death. Her sufferings, though great, were patiently endured. She was a believer in the speedy return of the Savior, to give life to all his believing children. May the blessing of God rest on the bereaved.

W. H. MITCHELL.

Kennebunk, Me., Sept. 26.

Died, in Windsor, Me., June 8th, 1859, Sister ARLETTA M TIBBETTS, wife of Sam Tibbets, aged sixty years.

Sister Tibbets made a profession of religion among, and joined, the Methodists, but, upon hearing of the Savior's coming, she embraced the Advent faith. Since that time she has been identified with those who look for the Lord's return. Her disease was consumption; and although a great sufferer, she endured with christian resignation, and quietly fell asleep in hope of a better life in the world to come. Bro. Tibbets greatly feels his loss, but the hope of the gospel comforts him. Funeral attended by the writer; discourse from Isaiah 25: 8.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Per steamship Asia from Liverpool the 18th.]

It is officially announced that the Great Eastern will leave Portland, Weymouth, on her trial trip, on the 8th of October, instead of the 17th of September, and finally sail from Holyhead for Portland, Me., on the 20th of October, instead of the 29th of September. This delay of three weeks is the time in which Mr. Scott Russell contracts to repair the damage occasioned by the explosion, and to put the vessel in the same condition that she was in when she sailed from the Thames.

The contract, however, does not include any repairs which the boilers may be found to require, and although they apparently sustained no damage, an investigation is said to have shown that the internal stays of the boiler most directly exposed to the shock have either been displaced or greatly weakened, so that the boiler cannot be safely used in the present state.

The decease of Mr. Brunel, the eminent engineer, occurred at his residence in London on the 15th inst., at the comparatively early age of fifty-four years. His last great work was the Great Eastern. On the 5th he was carried from the Great Eastern to his residence in a very dangerous and alarming condition, having been seized with paralysis, induced, it was believed, by over mental anxiety. In spite of the most skilful medical attention he continued to sink, and expired at half past ten o'clock on Thursday night.

The Moniteur published an address to the Emperor, signed by above ten thousand burgomasters. This address expresses a hope that the conditions of peace which his majesty is about to dictate, will be calculated to alleviate the sufferings which appear to threaten the future of Venetia. The address is silent respecting the return of the Arch-Dukes.

The Austrian Gazette, in remarking on the recent article in the Moniteur, argues as the restoration of the Italian Princes has not been effected, chiefly owing to the influence of Sardinia, Austria consequently is not bound to carry out the concessions she has made, including the cession of Lombardy.

The Austrian party is represented as triumphant in Naples, and no reforms are to be expected.

The Paris papers almost without an exception express satisfaction at the announcement of an Anglo French expedition against China, and several of them add a hope that the union of the two flags against a common enemy will strengthen the alliance between the two countries and dispel the recent rumors of a rupture.

The London Daily News states that the government have decided on despatching several steam frigates and corvettes, together with a sufficient number of sailing frigates, to augment the squadron in China. It is also expected that a force of one thousand additional marines will be despatched to China.

The London Times Paris correspondent says it was stated that twelve thousand French troops had been ordered to be held in readiness to depart for China.

The latest news from Italy leaves little doubt of the determination of the Italians to rally on this ensign. Garibaldi was preparing for a general concentration of troops on any given point.

Gen. Fanti, commander-in-chief of the troops of the Italian League, had fixed his headquarters at Bologna. The soldiers disbanded by Victor Emmanuel were flocking around him.

Letters from Rome state that the health of the Pope was almost entirely restored.

SPAIN.

The Spanish forces intended to act against the Moors of the Riff will consist of 12,000 men. A large number of men-of-war have been assembled at Algesiras, sufficient to transport in one day the whole corps d'armee, with its necessary materiel of war. All the artillery is to be composed of rifled cannon.

AUSTRIA.

It is said that the state of siege in Venetia will very soon be abolished.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times says it is evident that Prince Metternich's mission led to the recent note in the Paris Moniteur, but it will hardly lead to a recall of the sovereigns of Modena and Tuscany. At the same time, Austria continues to increase her military strength in Italy, where there are now probably 80,000 or 100,000 French troops.

RUSSIA.

The Emperor Alexander has decided that libraries shall be formed in all the vessels of the Russian navy which make long voyages; and he has ordered that a sum of 300 roubles shall be at once given for the purpose from his private purse, and that an annual allowance of 60 roubles shall be made to every ship of the line and every frigate from the same source.

The Russian government has authorized the Journal de St. Petersburg to declare that the Russian journals only represent the opinions of their respective writers, and that the government, which "is not in a position either to approve or disapprove them," is nowise responsible for them.

[Three days later.]

GREAT BRITAIN.

The British Government, it is said, have made a contract for a cable of twelve hundred miles, to be laid from Falmouth to Gibralter, in June next. This is to be succeeded by a cable to Malta and Alexandria, thus giving England an independent line, free from continental difficulties. The speedy completion of the Indian line, and its extension to China, is loudly called for, in view of the new Chinese difficulties.

The Independence Belge says that Lord Cowley and Count Walewski had been commissioned to arrange the bases of co-operation between England and France in prosecuting the Chinese war.

Three 91-gun ships were under orders for foreign service at Portsmouth, and four gun-boats were being prepared with all haste for China. The utmost activity prevailed at Woolwich and elsewhere, in getting off ammunition, etc.

FRANCE.

The Times Paris correspondence says if the reports of the day may be credited, there is a possibility of a settlement of the Italian question which should satisfy all parties, and the general impression was that the political horizon was likely soon to be clearer than for some time past.

The Constitutionnel had given prominence to an editorial in which it calls on England to side with France on the Italian question, and the article was regarded as an appeal to England to assist diplomatically in extricating the Emperor from difficulties engendered at Villafranca.

A ship of the line, steel-plated, to be called the Magenta, and the largest vessel in the French Navy, had been commenced at Brest.

The Moniteur contains the following announcements in regard to the rumors of modification in the press law: "Several newspapers have alluded to a decree which it was supposed would appear to modify the laws of the press. This news is without foundation. In France the press is free to discuss all acts of the government, and by so doing enlighten the public mind. Certain papers, in becoming without their knowledge organs of hostile parties, claim a large amount of freedom, which would have no other object than facilitating that attacks against the constitution and fundamental laws of social order. The government of the Emperor will not deviate from the established system, which, in allowing a field sufficiently large for discussion, controversy and analysis, prevents, on the other hand, the disastrous effects of falsehood, calumny and error."

It was reported at Paris that France will co-operate with Spain in the expedition against the Moors.

Forts were being armed in the bays of St. Malo and of Cancale, and a plan had been prepared for arming the coast from Antwerp to Port Vendres.

The French outposts on the frontiers of Morocco had been several times fiercely attacked by the native tribes, but they had been repulsed. The government of Morocco is not implicated in those attacks.

THE ZURICH CONFERENCE.

There had been a complete suspension of intercourse between the Plenipotentiaries for several days, but on the 19th, after the arrival of a French courier, the representatives of France and Austria held a conference, lasting three hours.

ITALY.

The government of Tuscany had notified the Plenipotentiaries of the Grand Duke to evacuate the palace within three days. In case of noncompliance, the property of the Grand Duke will be sequestered.

Garibaldi had issued a letter publicly acknowledging his admiring gratitude to the patriotic population of the Italian Tyrol for the heroism of their services during the war.

TURKEY.

The Times publishes the following special telegram from its correspondent:

Constantinople, Sept. 18. A conspiracy to assassinate the Sultan has been discovered. Two hundred persons have been arrested here—among them the Pasha of Albania, who was apparently the chief. Some troops are suspected of participation. The affair originated with a fanatical party.

The Revival in Ireland.

The following extract is from a letter from Mrs. Phebe Palmer, who is now laboring in Ireland, which we take from the Guardian.

"No place, I presume, has been more gloriously visited than this, your native place—Coleraine. No church is large enough to contain the people. Open air meetings are held, at which thousands attend. Wesleyan, Presbyterian and Church of England ministers all unite at these meetings.

"At one of those open air services the church of England minister had been requested to address the audience, which consisted of thousands. Every thing went on quietly for a short time. But the Spirit was mightily at work—presently they began to fall down on all sides—all attempts to preserve order were unavailing—the field was strewn all around with men and women, and the moans and cries were such as to remind one forcibly of descriptions of a field of battle; a field of battle it surely was—though a bloodless one. The meeting was then broken up into sections, and every little group was addressed by a lay brother or minister. The meeting was adjourned into the Town hall where many remained until five in the morning. I could write of several other scenes equally wonderful, but time will not admit.

Yet, I cannot desist without glancing at [illegible]. It was that of the children in a large school [illegible] the children, about one hundred and [illegible] all arrested by the Holy Spirit, the whole hundred on their knees, and beside them, ladies and gentlemen, who were too excited to attend extraordinary meetings, the godless, and worldly men of business, and the professional men of the place, here they were, old and young, all crying for mercy. The larger portion of them I believe went away rejoicing."

THE LATE PROFESSOR BUSH.—" * * * For several years he occupied a very small room in the fourth or fifth story of a building on the corner of Beekman and Nassau streets in New York, the walls of which were lined with old books, Hebrew, Greek, Latin and German preponderating. On the floor, too, were piles of huge volumes in vellum; Bibles, commentaries, and lexicons in the Oriental languages. A pine table, two or three wooden chairs, a small stove which retained its place the year round, and a cot bed constituted his furniture. For years, neither brush or broom disturbed the accumulated dust of this secluded retreat, and here the professor wrote those translations of, and learned commentaries on, several books of the Old Testament, which have made his name widely known among theologians of Europe and America. On his second marriage this sanctum was abandoned, and he removed his books to his dwelling house in Howard street, where he lived many years.

Prof. Bush was particularly fond of attending book auctions. It gave him a little harmless excitement, brought him in contact with literary men, who, like himself, were ever mousing about for rare and choice books, and enabled him to procure the books he wanted at low prices. Indeed it may be said that nine-tenths of his books were purchased at auction; besides, as there were few competitors for the literature he sought, he often got old Latin, Hebrew, German, and various Oriental books for a mere song. After using his books a few years, and getting from them all be required, he would send them again to auction to make way for others."—Prov. Journal.

For the Crisis.

"The servant is now above his Lord."

I see my Lord and Savior crowned with thorns,
[illegible] upon his holy form adorn'd;
[illegible] wicked mortals bow,
[illegible] those thorns upon his brow.

I see the apostles, naked, cold and faint,
[illegible], yet murmuring no complaint;
They pass earth's gayest fashion halls along,—
"[illegible] my Lord" is their united song.

I see the virgins of the midnight hour
Go forth with all their hallowed ransomed power;
Seal lands and gold are scattered far and wide,
That each the oil of Love may well provide.

To-day—great God, forgive! the saint (?) is seen
Dress'd gayer than earth's most illustrious queen;
Rich wreaths of flowers, all the work of art,
Now deck the "servant's" very head and heart.

Buried in smoke, unnerved by deadly weed,—
A "smoking incense" to our God indeed;
Or, robed in jeweled silk and bagied lace,
They wait to meet their Savior face to face.

The merchant's garb is "tow and linen," mix'd,—
The chief without best broadcloth's never "fixed;"
And strangers to the black coat humbly bow,
But pass the plainer one—no matter how.

So may the heavenly harvesters mistake,
And Jesus for the humble servant take;
At least they'll sing, "How man's improved thy word,—
For now the servant is above the Lord."

Woman's Position in the Church. No. 6.

Mrs. Taft traveled and labored extensively, and gathered in a goodly harvest of souls. She was sustained by the approbation and sympathies of many eminent ministers, among whom are found the names of Bramwell, Pawson, Heywood and Mather. Bramwell thus writes to her: "Your way is open. Numbers receive the power. O, go on as your strength will permit, and the Lord Jesus be with you."

One more letter in reference to this useful lady, and I leave her and refer to others. The following note is from the Rev. J. S. Pipe: "From a long acquaintance with Mrs. Taft, I most heartily unite with our honored father, Mr. Pawson, in beseeching you not to hinder her exercising her talents among you; for I most assuredly believe that God has called her to declare the glad tidings of salvation to the world, and that He has already honored her in the conversion of multitudes.

Mr. Taft sympathized fully with his wife in her public labor, and encouraged her greatly therein. So did Fletcher, although a clergyman of the Church of England; and how strengthening it must have been to those devoted women to have had the approbation of their noble-hearted husbands, while engaged in a work that rendered them odious in the eyes of many who professed the name of Christ. Hard indeed must it be for that wife who has not only to struggle against the pleadings of self—the frowns of the world—the persecution of the Pharisaical christian, the sneers of the cold-hearted, and the opposition of a husband. If all the world look coldly on her, if she can but find refuge in his great heart of love, and have his supporting arms of sympathy thrown around her, she can endure, knowing that all heaven approves.

We envy not the feelings of that man's heart, who can trample on those emotions of love—those yearnings of soul—those gushing thoughts that struggle for expression, and would fain lead that modest, retiring, sensitive woman to meet the world's cold scorn—to combat the prejudices of a proud, and pleasure-loving church—to endure the persecution of the self-righteous Pharisee, in order to win souls to Christ. Methinks scarcely a devoted, christian woman would take a public position, and endure all the hardships and reproaches connected therewith, unless she felt in her very soul, that for her there was no salvation without it. All the sensibilities of her nature are against it.

I am acquainted with one, who for many years resisted the call of the Spirit to public labor, and God afflicted her with confinement to her bed for many years, and when at last she consented to obey God, he restored her to health, and for several years she has been a useful christian. But many who have had the Spirit's call, have rejected it, and deemed it all illusive, because deemed so strange and out-of-the-way a course. We know one who could never read the experience of a christian minister, without finding a response in her own experience to those impressions and evidences that led them to go forth into the vineyard of the Lord; and indeed hers were beyond many which she read, and often had she said to herself, "If I were a man, I should know that it was my duty to preach the gospel." But why, if not called, did she have those convictions?

[illegible] the Rev. Alexander Mather, a minister of the Wesleyan Church, to a female laborer: "Your call is of God; I would have you go in at every open door, but do not [illegible] the door is thrown wide open; [illegible]."

Dr. Taft says: "The fruit which has followed woman's preaching, if not a positive, it is at least a presumptive, proof that those [illegible]

now are such instruments, I assert in the name and fear of God, and if required, can produce a cloud of signatures and witnesses." Writing to one of them he says; "Multitudes of souls have been given you, and not a few in this place; your life of public labor is nearly over; and yet I trust it will still be said of you, as it was of another of your sex, 'she hath done what she could.' The encouragement you have had in your work from many eminent ministers of the gospel, must be to you a source of high gratification." Speaking of another female laborer, who traveled through many countries in England, winning many souls to Christ, but afterward abandoned the work, he says; "It is very much to be lamented that she ever relaxed, or in any measure buried that extraordinary talent which God had committed to her; but such was the fact. It has been supposed that she sunk beneath the heavy cross connected with the public ministrations of females, especially a female of such tender and delicate feelings as she possessed. But whether she turned aside from the path of duty to avoid suffering, or through the power of temptation, or from whatever cause, she deeply lamented the course she had taken, when death and eternity appeared in view. 'I am going to die,' said she, I am entering the eternal world; but all is dark before me; neither sun, moon, nor stars appear. O, that I had my time to live again! I would not bury my talent as I have done.' It pleased the Lord, however, before she departed hence to lift upon her the light of his countenance. He saw the genuineness of her repentance; he healed all her backslidings, and enabled her to bear ample testimony to his almighty power to save to the uttermost."

O, ye ministers and lay-members of the church of Christ! beware how you place a stumbling-block in the way of any one of God's little ones, who feels the Spirit's urgings, impelling her to open her mouth in behalf of perishing souls. God will require it at your hand! Rather encourage the trembling one, and call forth all the latent talents and energies of the membership into active operation for the advancement of truth.

Sisters, give utterance to those burning thoughts which struggle within you. Scatter broadcast those scintillations of light received from the study of the word of God. Give vent to those yearnings, those deep, heartfelt emotions of love for dying souls. "Stand up for Jesus!" Let no man take thy crown!

The City and Tower of Babel.

The time was, subsequent to the Deluge, when the whole earth was of one language and of one speech. But as the children of men journeyed from the east, they found a plain in the land of Shinar, and dwelt there. And they said one to another, Let us make brick. And they had brick for stone and slime for mortar. And they said, Let us build us a city, and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven. And the Lord came down to see the city and the tower which the children of men builded; and he saw they would succeed in what they had imagined to do. So the Lord confounded their language, that they should not understand one another's speech. So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth; and they left off building the city. Therefore, is the name of it called Babel.

These persons desired to build a tower to the heavens, and a city that should render their memory immortal. This foolish design being defeated by such an astonishing prodigy as none could be the author of but God himself, everybody abandoned the place which had given him such offence. And it came to pass a few years afterwards, that a man by the name of Nimrod encompassed this tower with walls, settled therein his friends and confederates, and subdued those who lived round him, beginning his empire in that place. The holy Scriptures inform us that Nimrod was a great grandson of Noah, and that he began to be a mighty one in the earth. "He was a mighty hunter before the Lord. And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel, (Babylon) . . . in the land of Shinar." From the foregoing we see that Nimrod commenced the building of Babel in the same place where the children of men did the Tower of Babel, namely, in the land of Shinar. Nimrod builded other cities in the land of Shinar—Erech—Accad—and Calneh. He extended his conquests far and wide, and was the most ancient of the Assyrian kings. The capital of his kingdom was Babylon.

We wish for a while to treat upon the city, before we return to the tower of Babel. How far Nimrod had advanced with the city of Babylon before his death, I do not know; but his successor, Semiramis, came to the throne. This Princess applied all her energies to the immortalizing of her name. She proposed to herself to surpass all that had been done in magnificence; and to that end she undertook the building of the mighty Babylon, in which she employed two millions of men, who were collected out of all the provinces of her vast empire. Some of her successors endeavored to adorn that city with new works and embellishments.

The city stood on a large flat or plain, in [illegible]

They were eighty-seven feet thick, three hundred and fifty feet in height, and sixty miles in circumference. The walls were drawn around the city in an exact square, each side being just fifteen miles in length. On each side of this great square were twenty-five gates—one hundred in all—which were all made of solid brass; and hence it is that, when God promised to Cyrus the conquest of Babylon, he tells him, that he would break in pieces before him the gates of brass. From the twenty-five gates on each side extended twenty-five streets, in straight lines, to the gates opposite; so that the whole number of streets was fifty, each fifteen miles long, twenty-five passing one way, and twenty-five the other. By these streets thus crossing each other, the whole city was divided into six hundred and seventy-six squares, each of which was two miles and a quarter in circumference. Round these squares, on every side towards the streets, stood the houses. The space within was for yards and gardens. A branch of the river Euphrates ran quite across the city, from the north to the south side; on each side of the river was a high wall built of brick, the same thickness as the walls that went around the city. In these walls, opposite to every street that led to the river, were gates of brass, which were always open in the day-time, and shut in the night. There was the bridge that crossed this river; the loch, for the draining of the river; the palaces, and the hanging gardens; and many other great and wonderful works which we have not time nor space to explain. Thus this was one of the most magnificent of all cities in the world.

Nimrod is the same with Belus, who was afterwards worshiped as a god under that appellation. In this vast and rich city stood the Temple of Belus, one of the great works of Babylon. It was most remarkable for a prodigious tower that stood in the middle of it. At the foundation, according to the historian, it was half a mile in the whole compass, and one eighth of a mile in height. It consisted of eight towers, built one above the other, and decreased gradually in size to the top; so that it looked like a pyramid. It is not only asserted, but proven, that this tower far exceeded the greatest of the pyramids of Egypt in height. Therefore we have good reason to believe that this is the very same tower which was built there at the confusion of languages; because it is attested by several profound writers, that this tower was entirely built of bricks, and bitumen, as the Scripture says the tower of Babel was. The ascent to the top was by stairs round the outside of it. In the different stories were many large rooms with arched roofs supported by pillars. Over the whole, on the top of the tower, was an observatory, by means of which the Babylonians became more expert in astronomy than all other nations.

But the chief use to which this tower was designed, was the worship of the god Belus, or Baal, as also that of several other deities; for which reason there was a multitude of chapels in the different parts of the tower. The riches of this Temple in statues, tables, censers, cups and other sacred vessels, all of which were made of gold, were immense. Among other images, there was one of forty feet high, which weighed a thousand Babylonish talents. According to the calculation of Diodorus, the riches contained in this temple—the sum total—amounted to six thousand, three hundred Babylonish talents of gold; which is more than twenty-one millions sterling.

This temple stood till the time of Xerxes, but he, on his return from his Grecian expedition, demolished it entirely, after having first plundered it of all its enormous riches. Alexander the Great purposed to rebuild it, and in order thereto, set ten thousand to work, to rid the place of its rubbish; but, after they had labored therein two months, Alexander died, and that put an end to the undertaking.

The tower and temple of Belus, or Baal, came to its end with none to help it; even an Alexander was not permitted to rebuild it. There it is, a mass of ruins. God's displeasure was upon it and upon the city; for he pronounced against the city of Babylon its utter destruction. What kindled the wrath of God against Babylon was, her insupportable pride, her inhuman cruelty towards the Jews, and the impiety of her kings. She believed herself to be invincible. She says in her heart, "I am the queen of nations and shall remain so forever. There is no power equal to mine. All other powers are subjected to me. I shall never know either barrenness or widowhood. Eternity is written in my destiny, according to the observation of all those that have consulted the stars to know it." It is God himself that complains of her cruelty. I was willing, says he, to punish my people, in such a manner as a father chastiseth his children. I sent them for a time into banishment at Babylon, with a design to recall them as soon as they were become more thankful and more faithful. But Babylon and her prince have converted my parental chastisement into a cruel and inhuman treatment, such as my clemency abhors. Their design was to destroy; mine was to save.

The impiety of their kings, not to speak of Belshazzar, who added an impiety that was peculiar to himself. He did not only prefer his false divinities to the true and only God, but imagined himself likewise to have vanquished his power, because he was in possession of the vessels which belonged to his worship; and, as if he meant to affront him, he affected to apply these holy vessels to profane uses. This was the time that Cyrus took the city and slew the king Belshazzar, and the kingdom was given to the Medes and Persians.

Note the predictions of the utter destruction of Babylon by the holy prophets:—"Make bright the arrows, gather the shields; it is the prophet that speaks to the Medes and Persians. The Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes; for his devise is against Babylon to destroy it, because it is the vengeance of the Lord, the vengeance of his temple. Howl ye, for the day of the Lord is at hand; a day cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate. Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land. And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, and the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah; it shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in, from generation to generation; neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; but wild beasts of the desert shall lie there, and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and dragons in their pleasant palaces. The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed, so shall it stand."

The word of God has been fulfilled to the letter, and Babylon, with its glory, riches, temples, towers, palaces, high and wide walls, its vast population, the glory of kingdoms and the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency,—all, all have long since sunk into oblivion, and cannot be found. His word has been fulfilled, and his wrath satisfied.

Lines,

On hearing Rev. M. D. Conway's Sermon, "Nothing but Leaves."—MARK 11: 13.

Nothing but leaves; the Spirit grieves
Over a wasted life;
Sin committed while conscience slept,
Promises made but never kept,
Hatred, battle and strife;
Nothing but leaves!

Nothing but leaves; no garnered sheaves
Of life's fair ripened grain;
Words, idle words, for earnest deeds;
We sow our seeds—lo! tares and weeds;
We reap with toil and pain
Nothing but leaves.

Nothing but leaves; memory weaves
No vail to screen the past;
As we retrace our weary way,
Counting each lost and misspent day,
We find sadly at last
Nothing but leaves.

And shall we go meet the Master so,
Bearing our withered leaves?
The Savior looks for perfect fruit—
We stand before him, humbled, mute;
Waiting the words he breathes—
"Nothing but leaves."

Extracts from a Sermon

On 1 PET. 2: 4–8; by H. W. Beecher.

"Having spoken of Christ as being a corner-stone, the apostle, with a truly Oriental imagination, sees christians as 'lively' stones; that is, as living stones. 'Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house.' Of course a living stone means a human being. But the figure takes its origin from the seeming life of radiant stones, whose gleams and flashes have the seeming, at times, of will and life. When John described the New Jerusalem, he saw the courses of the walls to be made up of all the rare and precious stones. 'The building of the walls of it,' he says, 'was of jasper, and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass. And the foundations of the walls of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second sapphire; the third a chalcedony; the fourth an emerald; the fifth sardonyx; the sixth sardius; the seventh chrysolite; the eighth beryl; the ninth a topaz; the tenth a chrysoprasus; the eleventh a jacinth; the twelfth an amethyst. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.'

A man is said in the Bible to be more precious than the gold of Ophir; and of a woman it is said, 'Her price is far above rubies.' These were common comparisons. There is something in the glow of precious stones that peculiarly fits them to serve for such spiritual figures. There is about them a subtle light, a brilliancy, that burns without fire; that consumes nothing, and requires no supply; that forever shines without oil; that is ever living, unwasting, unchanged by any of the natural elements. A diamond that glows in the sunlight, flashes yet more beautifully in the night. No mould can get root upon it; no rust can tarnish it; no decay can waste it. The jewels that were buried two thousand years ago, if now dug up from royal and priestly tombs, would come forth as fair and fresh as they were when the proud wearer first carried them in his diadem. Such stones seemed to the ancients, and are, fit emblems by which to represent spiritual qualities, and the beauty and imperishableness of christian virtue. And a company of holy men, resting upon the Lord Jesus Christ, may well be compared to a palace built upon broad foundations, and sparkling to the very summit with living stones which throw back to the sun a differing flash through every hour of his rise or fall, through the long day.

[illegible] higher than morality, higher than philanthropy, higher than worship, is the love of God. That is the [illegible] est thing! When we have that, we reach the very thing for which the New Testament scheme was administered. Love! it is that which brings forth out of obscurity the hidden God which we seek. Send forth all the powers of the soul to search for God, and there is not one of them which, making inquisition according to its own nature, can find him out and reveal him, except this divine spirit of Love! Put wings of imagination upon Conscience, and let it fly forth. Say to it, 'Go and find thy God!' Flying through night and through day; above and beneath; among clouds and thunder; through darkness and through light—it would return at length, wing-tired, only to say, 'I have found marks of God in law, in pain, and penalty; I have seen the traces of thunder, and the path of lightning, and the foundations of eternal power; but nowhere have I found the full God.'

Give the wings of faith to Reason, and send it, in turn, forth from east to west, around the earth, and through the heavens, to see if by searching it can find out God; and it shall say, 'I have seen the curious work of his hand, and have marked the treasures that he hath heaped up. The whole earth is full of his glory, and the heavens are unsearchable by us. What God hath done I have felt, but God himself is hidden from my sight.'

Let Fear, equipped with faith, pursue the same errand. It would not even know which way to fly, and turning downward, groping or flying directly amidst infernal things, it would rehearse a catalogue of terrors, of gloomy fears, or brooding superstitions; but the bright sun-clad God it could not see.

Let Reverence go forth. But what there is in Reverence can never interpret what there is in God. This feeling can touch the divine Orb but in a single point. And the heavens would say to Reverence, 'Such an one as you seek is not in me;' and hell would say, 'He is not in me;' and earth and time would repeat, 'He is not in us.'

It is only Love that can find out God without searching. Upon its eyes God dawns. Wherever it looks, and whatever it sees—that is God; for God is love. Love is that regent quality which was meant to reveal the divine to us. It carries its own light, and by its own secret nature, is drawn instantly toward God, and reflects the knowledge of him back upon us. When love hath brought forth its central vision of the divine, and interpreted it to all the other faculties, then they, in turn, become seers, and the soul is helped by every one of its faculties, as by so many eyes, to behold the fullness of God."

"Nor is any natural religion the same as, or a substitute for, that faith in Christ which works by love. I believe there is a great deal of good in natural religion. Here is a man who does not believe the Old or the New Testament; and yet his life is fertile with good deeds, and in many respects his character is more symmetrical than the character of those about him who do believe the Bible; and people come to me and say, 'Do you not believe that man is a christian?' I believe he is in many respects a good man, but I do not believe he is a christian. Whether a man belongs to me or not, does not depend upon whether he is a good business man, a good officer, or a good musician, but upon his personal relations to me; and a man, to be a christian, must believe in Christ not only, but must be elevated in his spiritual nature, and take hold of the personal life of Christ, so that the two lives shall be united together, as vines grow, branch taking hold of stem, and stem emitting branch—Christ being the vine, and he a branch. You are not christians merely because you are good in relations that do not touch Christ.

You may ask, 'What will become of those men who are so good, but whom you do not class among christians?' I do not know. Thank God, I am not God. Every man hears the drum-beat of the eternal world. Every man must stand for himself, and every man must answer for himself there. It is enough for me to bring myself and my own charge to God, without stopping to answer questions which belong to the future. One thing I know, and that is, that there is no other name but the name of Christ given under heaven, that we know anything about, whereby we can be saved. One thing I know, and that is, that he who trusts in the Lord Jesus Christ shall never be moved. One thing I know, that there is a power in Christ to translate a man above his sins, and almost above temptations, in this world. I believe there is a power in Christ to disfranchise a man, and take away from him the livery of hell; and to enfranchise a man, and give him the livery of heaven. I believe there is power in the faith of Christ Jesus to transform a man from evil to good, and from good to saintship, and bring him to the haven, to home at last. If there is any other way for a man to be saved except through this faith, I do not know what it is. But one thing I know, and that is, that the joy which I derive from faith in Christ, is ten thousand times greater than any of the other joys which greet my heart in this world. I know no other light. I will steer for that. I feel no other influence; I will be drawn by that. I have no other faith; I will trust in that. For he who lives and dies believing in Christ, shall not perish, but have everlasting life. Whether any others shall have everlasting life or not, is not for you nor me to say. I will not sit in judgment upon them; neither will I set up a judgment against them. If they take their own path, so they must take their own risk. I am not either to condemn them, or to insure them."

"I have seen the vision of Christ a thousand times as I wanted to see him. I have seen the vision of Christ bend over me with tenderness. I have seen the vision of Christ instruct me with divine wisdom and radiant knowledge. I have seen the vision of Christ standing up as the advocate of the poor, and the defender of the wronged. I have seen the vision of Christ clothed with clouds; and I have seen those clouds changed to gorgeous colors of glory. I have seen ten thousand visions pictured of Christ Jesus, but I have never yet seen him. There is a day coming when I shall see him as he is; not as I fain him to be; not as my heart paints him; not as my wants interpret him; but as he is! In that illustrious day I shall have no fear. Chief among ten thousand, he shall then be precious to me, and forever and forever my heart's treasure and my soul's delight. Even so, come, Lord Jesus—come quickly!"—Independent.

The Bible Confirmed by an Egyptian Seal at Nineveh.

On the temple walls of ancient Egypt, among the figures of men and gods and many historical records, there frequently occur certain oblong parallelograms with rounded corners, enclosing various hieroglyphics. These cartouches, as they are called, often stand over the image of some king, and being deciphered are found to contain his name, titles, etc., and seem to be somewhat like the coat of arms or the royal signet of modern princes. Each king has a cartouche of his own, and in some cases these kings are identified with kings known to us through history. Among these are Shishak, 2 Chron. 12: 1–9; Tirhakah, 2 Kings 19: 9; Pharaoh-necho, 2 Kings 23: 29–35; and Sabaco II. or So, 2 Kings 17: 4, mentioned in Bible history. This last king, So, was of the Ethiopian or twenty-fifth dynasty, and his cartouche is well known to the student of Egyptian antiquities.

Egypt lay at a distance from Assyria, and an army from the one country could not reach the other without going through the Jewish territory, or traversing vast and almost impassable deserts. Yet the Bible informs us that at one period these two nations were frequently in conflict with each other. Thus we find Assyrian armies in Egypt, Isa. 20, and an Egyptian army on the borders of Assyria, Jer. 46: 2; and the Jews were involved in the strifes of these powerful neighbors. King Josiah was defeated and slain by an Egyptian army on its march against Assyria. Hoshea king of Israel made a treaty with So king of Egypt to help him throw off the yoke of Shalmaneser king of Assyria; but the result was an Assyrian invasion and the first great captivity of the kingdom of Israel. This So, or Sabaco II., was succeeded by Tirhakah in Egypt; and Shalmaneser in Assyria by Sennacherib; and hostilities existed during both reigns, 2 Kings 19: 9, war alternating with peace—the campaign followed by the treaty. But who could have hoped to find any new verification of these statements of Scripture after the lapse of two thousand five hundred years!

Yet this has been done. In the mound of Kouyunjik recently explored, on the site of Nineveh, the ancient capital of Assyria, are found the remains of a palace built, as its own records inform us, by Sennacherib. One of its chambers would seem to have been a hall of records; for it contained a large number of pieces of fine clay, bearing the impression of seals. Such clay was used in those ages as sealing wax is used now, sealing important documents; and manuscripts have been found in Egypt with these clay seals still attached to them. One of these pieces of clay in Sennacherib's palace presents us with two seals, one a royal signet of Assyria, and the other the well known cartouche of Sabaco, or So king of Egypt, just as it stands on the Egyptian monuments; thus showing the probability that a treaty between the two monarchs had been deposited here, and furnishing an unexpected confirmation of the Bible history. The document itself, and the cord by which it was attached to the seal, have long since turned to dust; but the seal with its double impress, though buried for ages, has come to light, and is now in the British museum. The two kings affixed their seals to a document which has perished like themselves; but in their act the hand of the Most High affixed an additional seal to his holy word, which is true and abideth forever.

Speak Low to Me.

Speak low to me, my Savior, low and sweet
From out the hallelujahs, sweet and low,
Lest I should fear and fall, and miss thee so,
Who art not missed by any that entreat.
Speak to me as to Mary at thy feet—
And if no precious gems my hand bestow,
Let my tears drop like amber, while I go
In reach of thy divinest voice, complete
In humanest affection—thus, in sooth,
To lose the sense of losing! As a child
Whose song-bird seeks the wood for evermore,
Is sung to, in its stead, by mother's mouth,
Till, sinking on her breast, love-reconciled,
He sleeps the faster that he wept before.

Speaking well of Others.

If the disposition to speak well of others was universally prevalent, the world would become a comparative paradise. The opposite disposition is a Pandora-box, which, when opened, fills every neighborhood with pain and sorrow. How many enmities and heart-burnings flow from this source! How much happiness is interrupted and destroyed! Envy, jealousy, and the malignant spirit of evil, when they find vent by the lips, go forth on their mission like foul fiends, to blast the reputation and peace of others. Every one has imperfections, and in the conduct of the best there will be occasional faults which might seem to justify animadversion. It is a good rule, however, when there is occasion for fault finding, to do it privately to the erring one. This may prove salutary. It is a proof of interest in the individual, which will generally be taken kindly, if the manner of doing it be not offensive. The common and unchristian rule, on the contrary, is to proclaim the failings of others to all but themselves. This is unchristian, and shows a despicable heart.—Ex.

A TRUE FRIEND.—Thou mayest be sure that he that will in private tell thee thy faults, is thy friend, for he adventures thy dislike, and doth hazard thy hatred; for there are few men that can endure it—every man for the most part delighting in self-praise, which is one of the most universal follies that bewitcheth mankind.—Sir Walter Raleigh.

EXCELLENCE.—Excellence is never granted to man but as the reward of labor. It argues, indeed, no small strength of mind to persevere in habits of industry without the pleasure of perceiving those advantages which, like the hands of a clock, whilst they make hourly approaches to their point, yet proceed so slowly as to escape observation.—Sir Joshua Reynolds.

☞ In the winter men gird their clothes closely about them, but in the summer they let them hang loose; in the winter of adversity, many a christian girds his heart closely to God, to Christ, to the Gospel, to godliness, to ordinances, to duties, who, in [illegible]

☞ Moralities are mere day-laborers, who dig out the roots, and clear off the weeds, and get the ground ready for something else. Morals do but plow the soil—piety is the fruitful stem, and love the fair flower which springs from the soil. Good morals are indispensable to piety; and piety, to a certain extent, is gauged by its sweet reaction upon morals; but morality does not constitute piety.

Coming to Jesus.

"In Jesus' words, 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not,' does 'come unto me' mean dying, mamma," asked a little child—"dying, leaving you, and going away?"

"Don't you love and think a great deal about your papa when he is away?" asked her mother.

"Yes, mamma; I feel full of papa sometimes," answered Jessie, "I love him so dearly."

"It is not necessary to see him and be with him to love him."

"No, mamma, for he is in my heart really," said the little girl.

"That is what the Lord Jesus means when he asks you to come to him. It is not to go where he is, in body, but it is to love him, to have your heart full of him, that makes him near to you and you near to him. And it is so sweet to come to him, for he forgives our sins, and takes away our naughty willfulness, and helps us to correct our faults, and makes us love to do right, and love each other and everybody."

"Then I want to come to Jesus; I wasn't quite ready to leave you and papa," whispered the child.

"If Jessie finds Jesus, Jessie will be willing to do his will, whatever it may be," said the mother, with a prayer in her heart that hers might be one of the little ones in the kingdom of heaven.

The Lamb and the Dove.

The lamb and the dove are chosen types and emblems of Christ Jesus our Lord, and the Holy Spirit, throughout the New Testament. John the Baptist called the Savior the Lamb of God, and the book of Revelation constantly gives him this title. In the only visible descent of the Spirit, it came as a dove at the baptism of Jesus. Christ called his followers his lambs, and exhorted them to be as "harmless as doves."

Why were these two selected from the host of God's beautiful creatures for such honor?

The lamb is the gentlest of animals. It never shows temper or deceit, but is always happy and kind. It does not resent injury, but licks the hand raised to slay it, and follows meekly and lovingly to its death. So Christ "was oppressed and afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth."

The dove is fairest and purest among birds. It flutters its white wings and soars aloft in the sunlight, and enjoys the air and brightness, and then comes faithfully and fondly back to watch its brood. Because it never deserts its home, or wanders, or forgets, some species are used as messengers to fly between distant places and carry letters between friends. So the Holy Spirit flies between earth and heaven, and carries up the prayers and messages of God's children, and comes back laden with blessings. It brings the light of God's countenance and the peace of forgiven sin, and broods tenderly over their hearts; and if they do not sin and grieve it away, it faithfully watches and keeps them through life.

Can we not learn some sweet and good lessons from the lamb and the dove?

Influence of Kind Words.

The use of kind words is what we should strictly observe, for if we form a habit of speaking kindly to those with whom we associate, they will think a great deal more of us than if we should speak cross and unkindly to them. When you are with your schoolmates in or out of school, always treat you kindly. If at any time one of them should hurt you in any way reprove them kindly, and it will generally have a good influence over him, and he will see that you want to treat him kindly, and he will treat you in the same way.

If we form the habit of speaking kindly, we will have the good will of our associates. There are a great many persons who do not think when they speak unkindly, that they would get along a great deal better by using kind words. Kind words very often have a good influence. Let us remember the old adage: "Kindness wins where severity cannot compel."

Be Zealous.

Be not over zealous, the wise should have fear,
These words of kind warning fall oft on the ear;
'Tis well, but methinks there would not come amiss
An advice that's more needed, less spoken than this:
Be wise and be zealous, fight well while you may,
For soon the night cometh, then work in the day;
Add zeal to thy knowledge, e'en though it may be
But a grain 'mid the sands on the shore of life's sea.
With your neighbor's five talents you've nothing to do,
'Tis the care of your one that devolves upon you.
If you've lit but a taper, and dim be its light,
Let it shine on the gloom and darkness of night,
Perchance some poor soul who's mistaken the way,
May be guided aright by its flickering ray;
Perchance to the sailor his danger 't will show,
And he'll guide his frail bark where the still waters flow.
For the loan of one talent the interest is due,
And the Master who loaned it will ask it of you.

If wise, then be zealous, be valiant for right,
A warrior well armed should be first in the fight;
But despise not your brother who fights in the rear,
Though he bears not your sword, nor your shield, nor your spear.
If with plenty of shot you refuse to take aim,
You may lower your banners, they wave but for shame.
For the vict'ry is won not by armor alone,
And Goliath was slain with a sling and a stone.

I'd wish for my life to be wise, to be true,
To have plenty of zeal that could carry me through;
No clog, and no burden, no dead weight for me,
But a spirit intelligent, generous, free.
For certainly wisdom, enclosed in a case,
Is a burden, a useless infringer of space;
And knowledge whose good you may never impart,
Is a blight and a curse to the self-loving heart;
So burdened by knowledge, but powerless to feel,
Oh, save me from ballast without any zeal!
It would sink me far down in the depths of the sea,
And oblivion's waters would roll over me.

The Sonship.

Extract of a dialogue between an Orthodox minister and a Bible Reader.

B. R. The Psalmist says (16 : 10,) "For thou wilt not leave my soul in (sheol) hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption." Peter by the pen of inspiration renders sheol in this passage by the word hades.—(Acts 2 : 27.) Do you believe, sir, that Christ at death went into a place of torment?

O. M. "Certainly not."

B. R. Not even when he went and preached to the spirits in prison—hell as some say?

O. M. "No sir."

B. R. Then you do not believe sheol or hades means hell in this place?

O. M. "No. I think it means the grave."

B. R. You must then believe the soul of Christ went into the grave.

O. M. "It would seem so."

B. R. It was not in heaven then as you claim. And if his soul went into the grave, it must have died.

O. M. "Not necessarily."

B. R. But Isaiah says, "he poured out his soul unto death." And Christ himself said, "my soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Now, if the soul of Christ died as the Scriptures affirm, then he must have been unconscious in hades, and if CHRIST was unconscious in death, it is folly to deny the unconsciousness of man in death. Solomon says, "The dead know not anything." But there are some men who think they know more than the wise man.

O. M. "But if the soul of Christ which is the divine part, died, then divinity died—God can suffer, and God can die. You do not surely believe this?"

B. R. God cannot suffer and cannot die, but the inspired man informs us that CHRIST died according to the Scriptures, i. e., soul and body, and in the manner foretold. Do you believe it?

O. M. "I believe his body died—nothing more."

B. R. You do not then believe the inspired testimony, "he poured out his soul unto death." Your serpentine theory compels you to disbelieve a plain Bible statement. You are thus at issue with the eternal word of God, and you cannot extricate yourself. And no other man, however able, can help you. God's word is [illegible] as his own infinite mind; men may change, and say yea and nay, but the Bible never; it is yea, yea, and nay, nay. But was the body of Christ divine, or only human?

O. M. "Only human."

B. R. Then you must believe that humanity can atone for sin. I know the common view is that a mere human sacrifice cannot atone for sin.

O. M. "It cannot. It must be a divine sacrifice."

B. R. But you say, all of Christ that died was human; yet a divine sacrifice is required to atone for sin. On your hypothesis then, there has been no atonement made for the sins of the world, and man is irrecoverably lost? Behold! into what a strait you are driven by your erroneous and most absurd system.

O. M. "Sir, you are in as strait a place as I am; for you do not believe, if I understand you, that divinity can die: consequently you do not believe in the divinity of Christ, as you say he died soul and body, and was unconscious in hades. Hence with your view there is nothing but a human sacrifice, and therefore no atonement."

B. R. You misunderstand me. I said GOD cannot suffer and cannot die. I do believe in the divinity of Christ, and that CHRIST died for the whole world. Hence we have a divine sacrifice and of course an atonement for sin. It is you who deny the divinity of Christ and not me. For you say, it was a human Savior who died, which death cannot atone for sin; but I believe it was a divine Savior that died, which death can atone for sin.

O. M. "How do you make Christ divine, if he, soul and body died? Certainly then, he was not God!"

B. R. I will inform you. He was conceived by the Holy Ghost, and was the Son of God. Therefore he was divine.

O. M. "Then you do not believe he was verily God?"

B. R. No. God was his Father; and Christ could not be the Father and Son too.

O. M. "But does not Christ say, 'I and my Father are one?'"

B. R. Yes. And he also prayed to his FATHER in heaven (not to himself), "that they all (his people) may be ONE"—how one? "as thou Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe thou hast sent me." John 17 : 21. Thus is explained how the Father and Son are one. Not one being, but one in mind and purpose, each acting in harmonious concert.

O. M. "But Christ said to Philip, 'He that hath seen me hath seen the Father.' How do you explain this?"

B. R. I will let CHRIST explain. He says,—continuing your quotation—"and how sayest thou then show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words [he that hath seen me hath seen the Father] that I speak unto you I speak not of myself [for I am not the Father] but of the Father that DWELLETH in me, HE doeth the works" [through me]. Here then we have a striking explanation of the oft quoted words you present.

O. M. "But how do you reconcile with your views those Scriptures where Christ is called God, Lord, etc.? For instance, Isa. 9 : 6, 7; 'For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.' Again, John 1 : 1, 'In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God.' It seems to me that these passages prove very plainly that Christ is the infinite Jehovah."

B. R. No sir. The text first quoted is a prophecy which is fulfilled in Christ. "Unto us a Son (not Father) is given;" and he is verily CALLED the Mighty God, the everlasting Father. The text says, "his NAME shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor," etc. Not that he is verily God, but his name shall thus be CALLED. So that wherever Christ is called God, if ever, it must be in a qualified sense. This is evident from the fact that he is the Son of God and that his Father has conferred upon him all power and authority, and, being in the place of God, that he is thus called. Christ says, (Matt. 18 : 18,) "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth." By whom was it given? By God, "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is [verily God? no, but] the IMAGE of the invisible God, the first BORN of every creature." (Col. 1 : 15.) "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." (v. 19.) "For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the God-head bodily." (Col. 2 : 9.) We see from these scriptures that all power and authority were CONFERRED upon the Son of God. God's power is not derived, but is inherent. So Christ cannot be God. And this is further evident from the fact that God has ever lived and always existed; while Christ was born into the world—was flesh, and not spirit. The apostle says, (Gal 4 : 4,) "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law." Christ was MADE then, by the interposition and power of God. The Evangelist says, "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Jesus himself says, (Matt. 11 : 27,) "All things are delivered unto me of my Father." "My Father is greater than I." (John 14 : 28.) How can this be, if Christ is the Father, as is asserted? Again, John 5 : 26, "For as the Father hath life [inherent] in himself, so hath he GIVEN to the Son to have life in himself; and hath GIVEN him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of Man." "The Father loveth the Son, and hath GIVEN all things into his hands." "I live by the Father." "My doctrine is not mine, but is his that sent me." And when Christ says, "I have power to lay down my life and . . . to take it again," he also says, "This commandment I have received of my Father." I will quote one more text on this point, and then proceed to notice John 1 : 1. Phil. 2 : 5—11, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. And that every tongue should confess that JESUS CHRIST is Lord [not Jehovah] to the glory of GOD THE FATHER." Now in regard to this passage, you must take one of two positions. 1st: You must believe that this language has reference only to the mere human flesh of Christ, which in itself, according to the common theory, has no life, the immortal spirit being the life thereof; or 2d: you must believe with me that it refers to the divine Son of God, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the virgin Mary, suffered and died under Pontius Pilate, and whom God hath raised from the dead and highly exalted at his own right hand as a Prince and Savior. If you believe the first, then the human flesh of Christ is your God. If the latter, then you cannot believe that Christ is the infinite Jehovah.

O. M. "I confess there is something very mysterious and incomprehensible connected with the doctrine of the trinity; but I think we ought not to reject it because we do not understand it. There are many facts in nature that we know exist, yet we cannot comprehend them."

B. R. True. The doctrine as held by most christians, is so incomprehensible, and, I may add, so contradictory and absurd, that its influence on the minds of men is most pernicious, and is doubtless a fruitful source of infidelity. I agree with you that we ought not to reject facts because we may not understand them; but we ought always to reject doctrines that do not harmonize with the Bible, and which are palpably absurd.

Having already in my argument, virtually explained John 1 : 14 I shall only give my view of it in paraphrase. "In the beginning was the word [which is God] and the word ["which was made flesh and dwelt among us," v. 14,] was [before thus being manifested] with God, [not however as a distinct personage] and the word [which was "in the beginning"] was God. The same [though not manifested] was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, [God, Gen. 1 : 1,] and without him was not anything made that was made. In him [God] was life; [as distinguished from heathen gods which had no life] and the life [as revealed in the Bible, (O. T.) and manifested in the works of nature] was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness [heathenism] comprehended it not." Now that the time had come when this light [which before had been shed through the prophets and through nature] was to be exhibited more conspicuously through God's dear Son—"There was a man sent from God, whose name was John, the same came for a witness, to bear witness of the [new] Light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that Light, but was sent [by God] to bear witness of that Light. That was the true Light, which lighteth [or who is to enlighten] every man that cometh into the world, [or every man who heareth the gospel.] He [Christ who was the true, i. e., the best, or most excellent Light] was in the world, and the world was made (dia) for him, [not "by" him, "for whom (Christ) are all things," Heb. 2 : 10.] and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power [privilege] to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And the word [God] was made [or manifested (1 Tim. 3 : 16) in the] flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth. John bear witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before [or more exalted than] me. And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace. For the law was given by Moses, [under God] but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." And now the Evangelist—in the next verse, lest he should be misunderstood, and men should suppose—as they have—that he had here taught that Jesus Christ, the SON, was the true God, the Creator of all things, says, "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom [or affection and confidence] of the Father, he [the Son] hath declared." This then settles the question—however much this chapter seems to favor the doctrine of the trinity as held—that Christ the Son who has been seen is not the God whom the beloved disciple says, has not been seen, or whom "no man hath seen." But admitting that Christ is called God here and elsewhere; it can only be in a qualified sense as before shown. Christ did not exist as a personal being, only in the purpose and plan of God, until he was born into the world. Before that he was in the bosom of the Father, not as a distinct personage, but in the plan of salvation, as "a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

O. M. "Your paraphrase may be considered plausible, but it is certainly untenable. One fact settles this point. And that is your referring the language of the third verse to God and not to Christ."

B. R. Do you not then believe the testimony of Moses, Gen. 1 : 1, "In the beginning GOD created the heavens and the earth?"

O. M. "I believe Christ made all things, and without him was not anything made that was made!"

B. R. I say Christ, possessing a divine and human nature—flesh and bones—(and it required all these to constitute Christ)—did not thus exist as a living being, until he was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born into the world. Hence Moses testifies truthfully—GOD created all things. Admit that the third verse does refer to Christ; then in order to harmonize the Bible, it must read as follows:—"All things were made for—because of, or on account of him; and without him [or independent of him in the plan of creation and plan of salvation] was not anything made that was made."

O. M. "Why do you take the liberty to insert 'for—because of—on account of' in the place of the particle by?"

B. R. 1. Because the translators have rendered dia in the same way over thirty times, thus giving their opinion of its correctness in certain connections. 2. Because, while it is correct in this connection, it harmonizes the Bible; but as it stands in our version, it contradicts, as we have seen, other scriptures. To show how dia is used, I will give a few examples. Persecution ariseth because of the word—And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief—Yet because of his importunity—More believed because of his own word—believe me for (dia) the very work sake—(dia) for this cause God gave them up—for his great love—for the exceeding grace of God—for the which cause I suffer—for this cause I obtained mercy—for whom are all things. In this last, dia is rendered for and refers to Christ; (Heb. 2 : 10) thus proving my position that all things were created FOR him and not by him.

O. M. "I think I can prove that all things were created by him and for him."

B. R. Did GOD create all things for himself? or were they not rather created for his only begotten Son, "the heir of all things?" Christ did not create the universe for himself, for how could he inherit all things?, if he made them, they are his without heirship. But as the Father hath given all things into his hands until his enemies are made his footstool, or as in the language of the apostle, (1 Cor. 15 : 25) "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he [the Father] hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith all things are put under him [the Son] it is manifest that he [the Father] is excepted, which did put all things under him [the Son]. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, [the Father] then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him [the Father] that put all things under him [the Son] that God may be all in all."—I say, as the Father has thus committed all things into his hands for a specified purpose and a specified time, as we see by Paul's language, and as the Son is again to be subject unto the Father that God may be all in all—it is perfectly evident that Christ is not the creator of the world. But I will hear your proof.

O. M. "The passage I wish to call your attention to is Col. 1 : 16, 'For by him [Christ] were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him and for him.' This text is so positive in its character that any argument on it would seem unnecessary. I am therefore willing, with this to submit the point."

B. R. The strength of this text as proof that Christ the Son of God is the creator of all things, is all in the preposition en here incorrectly rendered by, and the term dia also translated by. Having already shown that such a rendering of dia on this point is inadmissible, arraying as it does, one portion of the Bible against another, and to render it by other proper words does no violence to the rules of translating such words, as is clear from the translators having in many other places and similar connections, employed the same words and expressions that I have, and shall in this passage; it will only be necessary for me to give the proper rendering of en and dia in order to place the text in its true light and in accordance with the uniform teaching of the Scriptures.

It then stands thus,—"For (en) in him [i. e. in respect to, or in reference to him, Christ] were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created (dia) through [or on account of] him and for him: And he is before all things, [i. e. in the sense of his inseparable connection with the plan of salvation, as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, or, in the sense of pre-eminent excellence] and (en) in [or for] him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, [i. e. the chief corner stone] the first born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the FATHER that in HIM should all fulness dwell." Thus you see this strong and most reliable text, which is so frequently quoted to prove that Christ made the heavens and the earth, and all things, when properly translated and explained, affords no such proof; but on the contrary proves, what I have before shown by other scriptures, that God created the world for Christ and hath committed unto him all power, and authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man. I believe truly, then, in one God and his Son Jesus Christ, who suffered and died, and rose again, who hath ascended into the heavens, and now "sitteth at the right hand of GOD," (query,—how can God sit at the right hand of GOD?) where he maketh intercessions for his people, who is to come again the second time without a sin-offering unto salvation, in the clouds of heaven in the FATHER's glory, with all his holy angels, to judge the world in righteousness, and establish his kingdom—which God hath given him—in the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness—and who has said, (Rev. 3 : 21,) "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame and am set down with my FATHER in his throne." He that hath ears to hear let him hear. Now your view virtually is, that, there are three Gods—God the Father—God the Son—and God the Holy Ghost. Then to cap the climax of orthodox absurdity, you claim that these three distinct persons are ONE GOD! Your theory requires you also to believe that "in the beginning GOD created the heavens and the earth," and that CHRIST the Son of God also created all things, and that "CHRIST died according to the Scriptures." Believing this, you must necessarily believe that God actually suffered and died, which, however, you deny—taking the position that it was only the human body of Christ, and not CHRIST himself that died—thus depending on a human sacrifice which you say cannot atone for sin. No marvel that thinking men stumble, and fall into infidelity, when [illegible] are presented to them, and they are told that they must believe and receive them as the teachings of the holy Scriptures, in order to become christians. May the Lord deliver the christian world from this pernicious teaching, [illegible] of the thinking and intelligent portion of mankind—who investigate for themselves and who cannot believe every absurdity because the preacher presents it,—may receive the pure gospel of Christ and become wise unto salvation.

Internal Evidence.

A man of subtle reasoning asked
A peasant if he knew
What is th' internal evidence
That proves his Bible true?
The terms of disputative art
Had never reached his ear;
He laid his hand upon his heart,
And only answered, "Here!"

A Question Answered.

Bro Jackman asks, "Can divinity, whether separate, or interwoven in humanity, die?"—I humbly conceive that this question is susceptible of a scriptural and rational answer.

The regenerated sons and daughters of our Father in heaven, are said to be made "partakers of the divine nature." 2 Peter 1 : 4. being begotten of God, of which their holy faith is the evidence, 1 John 5 1 : ; yet they can and do die. Whether or not divinity can die, depends on the nature of the divinity. If, as many believe, the divinity of the Son of God is eternal, immutable and self-existent, it cannot die. It is necessarily immortal. No divine sacrifice for sin has been offered to God for the sins of the world, if the divinity of our blessed Redeemer is (as Trinitarianism affirms) supreme and independent. The pretext that a union of immutable deity, with mutable humanity, constituting one person (were such a contradiction possible) renders the sacrifice divine, when in fact there was no real change, suffering, or death, on the part of the immutable divinity, is a manifest illusion.

The Grecian King Zaleucus, when his son was condemned to lose both his eyes for adultery, in order to save his son from the entire loss of sight, and also to honor the law, consented to lose one of his own eyes.

Suppose now, that instead of doing so, he had ordered that some person, vastly inferior to himself, should lose one of his eyes. Would he not have violated his engagement? Would the law have been honored, even if that inferior person had borne some relation to the King?

The plain revelation of our Father's infinite wisdom and love is, that he has given his own Son, who was with him "before the world was," John 17 : 5; that very Son, who is the "brightness of his glory and the express image of his person," Heb. 1 : 3, to die for us. He made the soul, or life of this matchless Son, "made better than the angels," Heb. 1 : 4, a sacrifice or "offering for sin;" Isa. 53 : 10, and not simply a human body, united to that soul of exceeding glory. There was no illusion or deception in this wondrous manifestation of love to a perishing world, either on the part of the Father or the Son. The Father gave his Son to die, "that he might be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. 3 : 26; John 3 : 16. (Would the death of a mere human body have answered this high purpose?) The Son of God gave his own life, and not simply the life of a human body taken into union with himself. He laid down the precious life he possessed for his sheep. John 10 : 15. This soul was in sheol until his resurrection, Acts 2 : 27; and we know from Eccl. 9 : 10, that in sheol "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom."

And now, what is the testimony of "the faithful witness" of the truth, concerning his divine nature? Is it, that it is independent or dependent? His plain and positive declaration is, "I live by the Father." John 6 : 57. When the Jews charged him, most illogically, (as some christians do now,) with making himself equal with God, because he said he was his Son; he settled the matter beyond all reasonable controversy, by the solemn asseveration, in honor of his Father (the only true God, John 17 : 3), —"Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself but what he seeth the Father do." Is the Almighty thus dependent on another? John 5 : 19.

However high the degree a created being may occupy in the scale of being, he is dependent on the Creator for that being, for life and every good. Our adorable Redeemer, the unspeakable gift of our Father's love, is the "FIRST-BEGOTTEN" of the Creator of all beings; a partaker of his divine nature, in a vastly higher degree than any other holy intelligence, "as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they." Heb. 1 : 4. [illegible] being "begotten" of the Father, [illegible]

Join the Church?

To be sure, friend, no difficulty or danger at all in uniting with the church. There was a time when it required self denial, a cross, the cutting off of right hands, plucking out right eyes, the forsaking of houses, brethren, sisters, fathers, mothers, wives, children, lands, all,—even life itself. "If any man will come after me," says Christ, "let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." But those days of cross-bearings have measurably ceased, gone by. We can now unite in a church organization with ease; secular profit and enjoyment walk in silver slippers—ride in a coach of six. To be connected with very many denominational sects is popular, the surest way to rise in the world, prosper in business, in trade, mercantile, mechanical and scientific. Merchants, mechanics, doctors, lawyers, pettifoggers, and the like, to rise in the world, succeed prosperously in their secular callings, unite with some popular church. Very many ride safely into lucrative offices in this way.

Novel writers, publishers, sellers and readers,—tobacco raisers, manufacturers, sellers and users of this vile drug, traffickers in liquid death and distilled damnation, can be church members in good and regular standing; meanwhile they are cursing themselves, their families, neighbors, and the world, with a bitter curse. We know of one novel publisher of a weekly sheet, who is doing more to curse the world—producing more domestic misery, more devastation and wretchedness over the human race, than the tyrannical, bloody Nero, or all the rumsellers in the nation! multitudes of precious souls will doubtless be ruined eternally through his satanic instrumentality,—and still we are informed that this same poisoner-general, this imp of the devil, is a church member, received with open arms—takes his seat regularly at the communion table unrebuked!!

Once, to unite with those professing godliness, required the presenting of the body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God—now we can chew and smoke, sell rum, drink rum, peddle rattlesnakes, live in lust, "scatter fire-brands, arrows and death."

"On with the dance! let joy be unconfined,
No sleep till morn, when youth and pleasure meet,
To chase the glowing hours with flying feet."

Attend the theatre, the ball-room, break the Sabbath, sell our brother on the auction block, invite the man-stealer into the pulpit, to a seat at the communion table, receive robbery for burnt offering; cheat, lie, swear falsely, steal, get drunk, despise the poor, become robbers of the poor. Not only slave-holders, men-stealers, baby-stealers, those who traffic in the bodies and souls of men, women and children, are received as acceptable church members, but dough-faces, apologizers for this dark and damning abomination! this sum of all villainies; and those who close their lips and steel their hearts in Tract Societies, Sunday School Unions, Missionary Boards, General Conferences and General Assemblies, are welcomed to the church and its ordinances with a hearty good grace!!

O! what a nest of unclean birds! Is it a marvel that infidelity grows bold—that iniquity, heaven-daring, stalks at noon-day! "Hear, oh heavens, and give ear oh earth! for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. . . . A sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters:—they have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward. . . . From the sole of the foot, even unto the head, there is no soundness in it—but wounds, and bruises and putrefying sores."—See Isaiah, chap. 1st.

Make a Beginning.

Remember, in all things, if you do not begin you will never come to an end. The first weed pulled up in a garden, the first seed set in the ground, the first shilling put in a savings bank, and the first mile travelled on a journey, are all important things; they make a beginning and thereby a hope, a promise, a pledge, an assurance, that you are in earnest with what you have undertaken. How many a [illegible] hesitating outcast [illegible] might have held up his head [illegible] if instead of putting off his [illegible] industry and amendment, [illegible] beginning.

Be Zealous.

Be not over zealous, the wise should have fear,
These words of kind warning fall oft on the ear;
'Tis well, but methinks there would not come amiss
An advice that 's more needed, less spoken than this:
Be wise and be zealous, fight well while you may,
For soon the night cometh, then work in the day;
Add zeal to thy knowledge, e'en though it may be
But a grain 'mid the sands on the shore of life's sea.
With your neighbor's few talents you've nothing to do,
'Tis the care of your one that devolves upon you.
If you've lit but a taper, and dim be its light,
Let it shine on the gloom and darkness of night,
Perchance some poor soul who's mistaken the way,
May be guided aright by its flickering ray;
Perchance to the sailor his danger 't will show,
And he 'll guide his frail bark where the still waters flow.
For the loan of one talent the interest is due,
And the Master who loaned it will ask it of you.

If wise, then be zealous, be valiant for right,
A warrior well armed should be first in the fight;
But despise not your brother who fights in the rear,
Though he bears not your sword, nor your shield, nor your spear.
If with plenty of shot you refuse to take aim,
You may lower your banners, they wave but for shame.
For the vict'ry is won not by armor alone,
And Goliath was slain with a sling and a stone.

I'd wish for my life to be wise, to be true,
To have plenty of zeal that could carry me through;
No clog, and no burden, no dead weight for me,
But a spirit intelligent, generous, free.
For certainly wisdom, enclosed in a case,
Is a burden, a useless infringer of space;
And knowledge whose good you may never impart,
Is a blight and a curse to the self-loving heart;
So burdened by knowledge, but powerless to feel,
Oh, save me from ballast without any zeal!
It would sink me far down in the depths of the sea,
And oblivion's waters would roll over me.

The Sonship.

Extract of a dialogue between an Orthodox minister and a Bible Reader.

B. R. The Psalmist says (16 : 10,) "For thou wilt not leave my soul in (sheol) hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption." Peter by the pen of inspiration renders sheol in this passage by the word hades.—(Acts 2 : 27.) Do you believe, sir, that Christ at death went into a place of torment?

O. M. "Certainly not."

B. R. Not even when he went and preached to the spirits in prison—hell as some say?

O. M. "No sir."

B. R. Then you do not believe sheol or hades means hell in this place?

O. M. "No. I think it means the grave."

B. R. You must then believe the soul of Christ went into the grave.

O. M. "It would seem so."

B. R. It was not in heaven then as you claim. And if his soul went into the grave, it must have died.

O. M. "Not necessarily."

B. R. But Isaiah says, "he poured out his soul unto death." And Christ himself said, "my soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Now, if the soul of Christ died as the Scriptures affirm, then he must have been unconscious in hades, and if CHRIST was unconscious in death, it is folly to deny the unconsciousness of man in death. Solomon says, "The dead know not anything." But there are some men who think they know more than the wise man.

O. M. "But if the soul of Christ which is the divine part, died, then divinity died—God can suffer, and God can die. You do not surely believe this?"

B. R. God cannot suffer and cannot die, but the inspired man informs us that CHRIST died according to the Scriptures, i. e., soul and body, and in the manner foretold. Do you believe it?

O. M. "I believe his body died—nothing more."

B. R. You do not then believe the inspired testimony, "he poured out his soul unto death." Your serpentine theory compels you to disbelieve a plain Bible statement. You are thus at issue with the eternal word of God, and you cannot extricate yourself. And no other man, however able, can help you. God's word is [illegible] as his own infinite mind; men may change, and say yea and nay, but the Bible never; it is yea, yea, and nay, nay. But was the body of Christ divine, or only human?

O. M. "Only human."

B. R. Then you must believe that humanity can atone for sin. I know the common view is that a mere human sacrifice cannot atone for sin.

O. M. "It cannot. It must be a divine sacrifice."

B. R. But you say, all of Christ that died was human; yet a divine sacrifice is required to atone for sin. On your hypothesis then, there has been no atonement made for the sins of the world, and man is irrecoverably lost! Behold! into what a strait you are driven by your erroneous and most absurd system.

O. M. "Sir, you are in as strait a place as I am; for you do not believe, if I understand you, that divinity can die: consequently you do not believe in the divinity of Christ, as you say he died soul and body, and was unconscious in hades. Hence with your view there is nothing but a human sacrifice, and therefore no atonement."

B. R. You misunderstand me. I said GOD cannot suffer and cannot die. I do believe in the divinity of Christ, and that CHRIST died for the whole world. Hence we have a divine sacrifice and of course an atonement for sin. It is you who deny the divinity of Christ and not me. For you say, it was a human Savior who died, which death cannot atone for sin; but I believe it was a divine Savior that died, which death can atone for sin.

O. M. "How do you make Christ divine, if he, soul and body died? Certainly then, he was not God!"

B. R. I will inform you. He was conceived by the Holy Ghost, and was the Son of God. Therefore he was divine.

O. M. "Then you do not believe he was verily God?"

B. R. No. God was his Father; and Christ could not be the Father and Son too.

O. M. "But does not Christ say, 'I and my Father are one?'"

B. R. Yes. And he also prayed to his FATHER in heaven (not to himself), "that they all (his people) may be ONE"—how one? "as thou Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe thou hast sent me." John 17 : 21. Thus is explained how the Father and Son are one. Not one being, but one in mind and purpose, each acting in harmonious concert.

O. M. "But Christ said to Philip, 'He that hath seen me hath seen the Father.' How do you explain this?"

B. R. I will let CHRIST explain. He says,—continuing your quotation—"and how sayest thou then show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words [he that hath seen me hath seen the Father] that I speak unto you I speak not of myself [for I am not the Father] but of the Father that DWELLETH IN me, HE doeth the works" [through me]. Here then we have a striking explanation of the oft quoted words you present.

O. M. "But how do you reconcile with your views those Scriptures where Christ is called God, Lord, etc.? For instance, Isa. 9 : 6, 7; 'For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.' Again, John 1 : 1, 'In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God.' It seems to me that these passages prove very plainly that Christ is the infinite Jehovah."

B. R. No sir. The text first quoted is a prophecy which is fulfilled in Christ. "Unto us a Son (not Father) is given;" and he is verily CALLED the Mighty God, the everlasting Father. The text says, "his NAME shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor," etc. Not that he is verily God, but his name shall thus be CALLED. So that wherever Christ is called God, if ever, it must be in a qualified sense. This is evident from the fact that he is the Son of God and that his Father has conferred upon him all power and authority, and being in the place of God, that he is thus called. Christ says, (Matt. 18 : 18,) "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth." By whom was it given? By God, "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is [verily God? no, but] the IMAGE of the invisible God, the first BORN of every creature." (Col. 1 : 15.) "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." (v. 19.) "For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the God-head bodily." (Col. 2 : 9.) We see from these scriptures that all power and authority were CONFERRED upon the Son of God. God's power is not derived, but is inherent. So Christ cannot be God. And this is further evident from the fact that God is [illegible] and always existed; while Christ was born into the world—was flesh, and not spirit. The apostle says, (Gal 4 : 4,) "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law." Christ was MADE then, by the interposition and power of God. The Evangelist says, "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Jesus himself says, (Matt. 11 : 27,) "All things are delivered unto me of my Father." "My Father is greater than I." (John 14 : 28.) How can this be, if Christ is the Father, as is asserted? Again, John 5 : 26, "For as the Father hath life [inherent] in himself, so hath he GIVEN to the Son to have life in himself; and hath GIVEN him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of Man." "The Father loveth the Son, and hath GIVEN all things into his hands." "I live by the Father." "My doctrine is not mine, but is his that sent me." And when Christ says, "I have power to lay down my life and . . . to take it again," he also says, "This commandment I have received of my Father." I will quote one more text on this point, and then proceed to notice John 1 : 1. Phil. 2 : 5—11, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. And that every tongue should confess that JESUS CHRIST is Lord [not Jehovah] to the glory of GOD THE FATHER." Now in regard to this passage, you must take one of two positions. 1st: You must believe that this language has reference only to the mere human flesh of Christ, which in itself, according to the common theory, has no life, the immortal spirit being the life thereof; or 2d: you must believe with me that it refers to the divine Son of God, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the virgin Mary, suffered and died under Pontius Pilate, and whom God hath raised from the dead and highly exalted at his own right hand as a Prince and Savior. If you believe the first, then the human flesh of Christ is your God. If the latter, then you cannot believe that Christ is the infinite Jehovah.

O. M. "I confess there is something very mysterious and incomprehensible connected with the doctrine of the trinity; but I think we ought not to reject it because we do not understand it. There are many facts in nature that we know exist, yet we cannot comprehend them."

B. R. True. The doctrine as held by most christians, is so incomprehensible, and, I may add, so contradictory and absurd, that its influence on the minds of men is most pernicious, and is doubtless a fruitful source of infidelity. I agree with you that we ought not to reject facts because we may not understand them; but we ought always to reject doctrines that do not harmonize with the Bible, and which are palpably absurd.

Having already in my argument, virtually explained John 1 : 1, I shall only give my view of it in paraphrase. "In the beginning was the word [which is God] and the word ["which was made flesh and dwelt among us," v. 14,] was [before thus being manifested] with God, [not however as a distinct personage] and the word [which was "in the beginning"] was God. The same [though not manifested] was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, [God, Gen. 1 : 1,] and without him was not anything made that was made. In him [God] was life; [as distinguished from heathen gods which had no life] and the life [as revealed in the Bible, (O. T.) and manifested in the works of nature] was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness [heathenism] comprehended it not." Now that the time had come when this light [which before had been shed through the prophets and through nature] was to be exhibited more conspicuously through God's dear Son—"There was a man sent from God, whose name was John, the same came for a witness, to bear witness of the [new] Light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that Light, but was sent [by God] to bear witness of that Light. That was the true Light, which lighteth [or who is to enlighten] every man that cometh into the world, [or every man that heareth the gospel.] He [Christ who was this true, i. e., the best, or most excellent Light] was in the world, and the world was made (dia) for him, [not "by" him. "for whom (Christ) are all things," Heb. 2 : 10] and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power [privilege] to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And the word [God] was made [or manifested (1 Tim. 3 : 16) in the] flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth. John bear witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before [or more exalted than] me. And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace. For the law was given by Moses, [under God] but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." And now the Evangelist—in the next verse, lest he should be misunderstood, and men should suppose—as they have—that he had here taught that Jesus Christ, the Son, was the true God, the Creator of all things, says, "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom [or affection and confidence] of the Father, he [the Son] hath declared." This then settles the question—however much this chapter seems to favor the doctrine of the trinity as held—that Christ the Son who has been seen is not the God whom the beloved disciple says, has not been seen, or whom "no man hath seen." But admitting that Christ is called God here and elsewhere; it can only be in a qualified sense as before shown. Christ did not exist as a personal being, only in the purpose and plan of God, until he was born into the world. Before that he was in the bosom of the Father, not as a distinct personage, but in the plan of salvation, as "a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

O. M. "Your paraphrase may be considered plausible, but it is certainly untenable. One fact settles this point. And that is your referring the language of the third verse to God and not to Christ."

B. R. Do you not then believe the testimony of Moses, Gen. 1 : 1, "In the beginning GOD created the heavens and the earth?"

O. M. "I believe Christ made all things, and without him was not anything made that was made!"

B. R. I say Christ, possessing a divine and human nature—flesh and bones—(and it required all these to constitute Christ)—did not thus exist as a living being, until he was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born into the world. Hence Moses testifies truthfully—GOD created all things. Admit that the third verse does refer to Christ; then in order to harmonize the Bible, it must read as follows.—"All things were made for—because of, or on account of him; and without him [or independent of him in the plan of creation and plan of salvation] was not anything made that was made."

O. M. "Why do you take the liberty to insert 'for—because of—on account of' in the place of the particle by?"

B. R. 1. Because the translators have rendered dia in the same way over thirty times, thus giving their opinion of its correctness in certain connections. 2. Because, while it is correct in this connection, it harmonizes the Bible; but as it stands in our version, it contradicts, as we have seen, other scriptures. To show how dia is used, I will give a few examples. Persecution ariseth because of the word—And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief—Yet because of his importunity—More believed because of his own word—believe me for (dia) the very work sake—(dia) for this cause God gave them up—for his great love—for the exceeding grace of God—for the which cause I suffer—for this cause I obtained mercy—for whom are all things. In this last, dia is rendered for and refers to Christ; (Heb. 2 : 10) thus proving my position that all things were created FOR him and not by him.

O. M. "I think I can prove that all things were created by him and for him."

B. R. Did GOD create all things for himself? or were they not rather created for his only begotten Son, "the heir of all things?" Christ did not create the universe for himself, for how could he inherit all things? if he made them, they are his without heirship. But as the Father hath given all things into his hands until his enemies are made his footstool, or as in the language of the apostle, (1 Cor. 15 : 25) "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he [the Father] hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith all things are put under him [the Son] it is manifest that he [the Father] is excepted, which did put all things under him [the Son]. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, [the Father] then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him [the Father] that put all things under him [the Son] that God may be all in all."—I say, as the Father has thus committed all things into his hands for a specified purpose and a specified time, as we see by Paul's language, and as the Son is again to be subject unto the Father that God may be all in all—it is perfectly evident that Christ is not the creator of the world. But I will hear your proof.

O. M. "The passage I wish to call your attention to is Col. 1 : 16, 'For by him [Christ] were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him and for him.' This text is so positive in its character that any argument on it would seem unnecessary. I am therefore willing, with this to submit the point."

B. R. The strength of this text as proof that Christ the Son of God is the creator of all things, is all in the preposition en here incorrectly rendered by, and the term dia also translated by. Having already shown that such a rendering of dia on this point is inadmissible, arraying as it does, one portion of the Bible against another, and to render it by other proper words does no violence to the rules of translating such words, as is clear from the translators having in many other places and similar connections, employed the same words and expressions that I have, and shall in this passage; it will only be necessary for me to give the proper rendering of en and dia in order to place the text in its true light and in accordance with the uniform teaching of the Scriptures.

It then stands thus,—"For (en) in him [i. e. in respect to, or in reference to him, Christ] were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created (dia) through [or on account of] him and for him: And he is before all things, [i. e. in the sense of his inseparable connection with the plan of salvation, as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, or, in the sense of pre-eminent excellence] and (en) in [or for] him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, [i. e. the chief corner stone] the first born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the FATHER that in HIM should all fulness dwell." Thus you see this strong and most reliable text, which is so frequently quoted to prove that Christ made the heavens and the earth, and all things, when properly translated and explained, affords no such proof; but on the contrary proves, what I have before shown by other scriptures, that God created the world for Christ and hath committed unto him all power, and authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man. I believe truly, then, in one God and his Son Jesus Christ, who suffered and died, and rose again, who hath ascended into the heavens, and now "sitteth at the right hand of GOD," (query,—how can God sit at the right hand of GOD?) where he maketh intercessions for his people, who is to come again the second time without a sin-offering unto salvation, in the clouds of heaven in the FATHER's glory, with all his holy angels, to judge the world in righteousness, and establish his kingdom—which God hath given him—in the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness—and who has said, (Rev. 3 : 21,) "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame and am set down with my FATHER in his throne." He that hath ears to hear let him hear. Now your view virtually is, that, there are three Gods—God the Father—God the Son—and God the Holy Ghost. Then to cap the climax of orthodox absurdity, you claim that these three distinct persons are ONE GOD! Your theory requires you also to believe that "in the beginning GOD created the heavens and the earth," and that CHRIST the SON of God also created all things, and that "CHRIST died according to the Scriptures." Believing this, you must necessarily believe that God actually suffered and died, which, however, you deny—taking the position that it was only the human body of Christ, and not CHRIST himself that died—thus depending on a human sacrifice which you say cannot atone for sin. No marvel that thinking men stumble, and fall into infidelity, when such absurdities are presented to them, and they are told that they must believe and receive them as the teachings of the holy Scriptures, in order to become christians. May the Lord deliver the christian world from this pernicious [illegible] and who cannot believe every absurdity because the preacher presents it,—may receive the pure gospel of Christ and become wise unto salvation.

Internal Evidence.

A man of subtle reasoning asked
A peasant if he knew
What is th' internal evidence
That proves his Bible true?
The terms of disputative art
Had never reached his ear;
He laid his hand upon his heart,
And only answered, "Here!"

A Question Answered.

Bro Jackman asks, "Can divinity, whether separate, or interwoven in humanity, die?"—I humbly conceive that this question is susceptible of a scriptural and rational answer.

The regenerated sons and daughters of our Father in heaven, are said to be made "partakers of the divine nature." 2 Peter 1 : 4. being begotten of God, of which their holy faith is the evidence, 1 John 5 1 :; yet they can and do die. Whether or not divinity can die, depends on the nature of the divinity. If, as many believe, the divinity of the Son of God is eternal, immutable and self-existent, it cannot die. It is necessarily immortal. No divine sacrifice for sin has been offered to God for the sins of the world, if the divinity of our blessed Redeemer is (as Trinitarianism affirms) supreme and independent. The pretext that a union of immutable deity, with mutable humanity, constituting one person (were such a contradiction possible) renders the sacrifice divine, when in fact there was no real change, suffering, or death, on the part of the immutable divinity, is a manifest illusion.

The Grecian King Zaleucus, when his son was condemned to lose both his eyes for adultery, in order to save his son from the entire loss of sight, and also to honor the law, consented to lose one of his own eyes.

Suppose now, that instead of doing so, he had ordered that some person, vastly inferior to himself, should lose one of his eyes. Would he not have violated his engagement? Would the law have been honored, even if that inferior person had borne some relation to the King?

The plain revelation of our Father's infinite wisdom and love is, that he has given his own Son, who was with him "before the world was," John 17 : 5; that very Son, who is the "brightness of his glory and the express image of his person," Heb. 1 : 3, to die for us. He made the soul, or life of this matchless Son, "made better than the angels," Heb. 1 : 4, a sacrifice or "offering for sin;" Isa. 53 : 10, and not simply a human body, united to that soul of exceeding glory. There was no illusion or deception in this wondrous manifestation of love to a perishing world, either on the part of the Father or the Son. The Father gave his Son to die, "that he might be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. 3 : 26; John 3 : 16. (Would the death of a mere human body have answered this high purpose?) The Son of God gave his own life, and not simply the life of a human body taken into union with himself. He laid down the precious life he possessed for his sheep. John 10 : 15. This soul was in sheol until his resurrection, Acts 2 : 27; and we know from Eccl. 9 : 10, that in sheol "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom."

And now, what is the testimony of "the faithful witness" of the truth, concerning his divine nature? Is it, that it is independent or dependent? His plain and positive declaration is, "I live by the Father." John 6 : 57. When the Jews charged him, most illogically, (as some christians do now,) with making himself equal with God, because he said he was his Son; he settled the matter beyond all reasonable controversy, by the solemn asseveration, in honor of his Father (the only true God, John 17 : 3), —"Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself but what he seeth the Father do." Is the Almighty thus dependent on another? John 5 : 19.

However high the degree a created being may occupy in the scale of being, he is dependent on the Creator for that being, for life and every good. Our adorable Redeemer, the unspeakable gift of our Father's love, is the "FIRST-BEGOTTEN" of the Creator of all beings; a partaker of his divine nature, in a vastly higher degree than any other holy intelligences, "as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they."—Heb. 1 : 4. His divinity, being "begotten" of the Father, [illegible]

Join the Church?

To be sure, friend, no difficulty or danger at all in uniting with the church. There was a time when it required self denial, a cross, the cutting off of right hands, plucking out right eyes, the forsaking of houses, brethren, sisters, fathers, mothers, wives, children, lands, all,—even life itself. "If any man will come after me," says Christ, "let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." But those days of cross-bearings have measurably ceased, gone by. We can now unite in a church organization with ease; secular profit and emolument walk in silver slippers—ride in a coach of six. To be connected with very many denominational sects is popular, the surest way to rise in the world, prosper in business, in trade, mercantile, mechanical and scientific. Merchants, mechanics, doctors, lawyers, pettifoggers, and the like, to rise in the world, succeed prosperously in their secular callings, unite with some popular church. Very many ride safely into lucrative offices in this way.

Novel writers, publishers, sellers and readers,—tobacco raisers, manufacturers, sellers and users of this vile drug, traffickers in liquid death and distilled damnation, can be church members in good and regular standing; meanwhile they are cursing themselves, their families, neighbors, and the world, with a bitter curse. We know of one novel publisher of a weekly sheet, who is doing more to curse the world—producing more domestic misery, more devastation and wretchedness over the human race, than the tyrannical, bloody Nero, or all the rumsellers in the nation! multitudes of precious souls will doubtless be ruined eternally through his satanic instrumentality,—and still we are informed that this same poisoner-general, this imp of the devil, is a church member, received with open arms—takes his seat regularly at the communion table unrebuked!!

Once, to unite with those professing godliness, required the presenting of the body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God—now we can chew and smoke, sell rum, drink rum, peddle rattlesnakes, live in lust, "scatter fire-brands, arrows and death."

"On with the dance! let joy be unconfined,
No sleep till morn, when youth and pleasure meet,
To chase the glowing hours with flying feet."

Attend the theatre, the ball-room, break the Sabbath, sell our brother on the auction block, invite the man-stealer into the pulpit, to a seat at the communion table, receive robbery for burnt offering; cheat, lie, swear falsely, steal, get drunk, despise the poor, become robbers of the poor. Not only slave-holders, men-stealers, baby-stealers, those who traffic in the bodies and souls of men, women and children, are received as acceptable church members, but dough-faces, apologizers for this dark and damning abomination! this sum of all villainies; and those who close their lips and steel their hearts in Tract Societies, Sunday School Unions, Missionary Boards, General Conferences and General Assemblies, are welcomed to the church and its ordinances with a hearty good grace!!

O! what a nest of unclean birds! Is it a marvel that infidelity grows bold—that iniquity, heaven-daring, stalks at noon-day! "Hear, oh heavens, and give ear oh earth! for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. . . . A sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters:—they have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward. . . . From the sole of the foot, even unto the head, there is no soundness in it—but wounds, and bruises and putrefying sores."—Isa. chap. 1st.

Make a Beginning.

Remember, in all things, if you do not begin you will never come to an end. The first weed pulled up in the garden, the first seed set in the ground, the first shilling put in a savings bank, and the first mile travelled on a journey, are all important things; they make a beginning and thereby a hope, a promise, a pledge, an assurance, that you are in earnest with what you have undertaken. How to Walk Worthy of God.

This was a subject that deeply impressed the mind of Paul; and when writing to the Thessalonians he exclaims, "Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves among you that believe; as ye know how we exhorted, and comforted, and charged every one of you as a father doth his children, that ye walk worthy of God, who hath called you to his kingdom and glory."—1 Thess. 2: 11, 12. He testifies the same God-like life at Miletus (Acts 20: 18) to the brethren from Ephesus. Thus: "Ye know, from the first day I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears."—Here we learn that the service of God requires humility, to be acceptable or worthy. This was his example. We next introduce his instructions concerning worthy walking, as we are assured that he has "kept back nothing that was profitable." To the Ephesians he says, "I beseech you that ye walk worthy of the calling wherewith ye are called, with all long-suffering, forbearing one another in love." In chap. 5: 15, he continues: "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, (fools have no oil,) but as wise, giving thanks always for all things unto God." Then it must certainly be unworthy walking for us to be unthankful because every thing comes not according to our own wishes. Phil. 2: 14.—"Do all things without murmurings." What! not complain when we get nothing for preaching? Not murmur in sickness, in trial, in afflictions, in distresses, in perils by sea, or land, yea, among false brethren; when you are not privileged to raise an objection against wrong, even such wrong as implicates the veracity of our blessed Jesus—makes his promise, "whatsoever is right I will give you," of none effect? No. For why? That ye may be blameless, the sons of God," and thereby "walk worthy of God who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory."

Again, our deportment should not only be such as becometh godliness, but our conversation should be worthy of our calling. Hence says Paul, "Let your conversation be such as becometh the gospel of Christ." Peter reminds us of the same when speaking of the expectant position of the church, thus: "Seeing ye look for such things what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness." Our former conversation and expressions are to be done away and a new language introduced—heavenly and uncorrupt. Thus says Paul in Eph. 4: 17—22: "This I say, therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other gentiles walk, in the vanity of their minds; but that ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man which is corrupt." Now if we still practice, or neglect to put off concerning the former conversation, the old man, then we may not put on the new man, and are walking unworthily.

We should walk in love. Not in word, neither in tongue, but in deed (acts) and in truth, and the apostle gives us the touchstone by which we may prove our love, thus: "Whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Let us walk worthily.

We should walk in the light. "He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even till now." He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, i. e., in Christ. He is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. Now if we abide in him—if we walk in the light while we have the light, then we are walking worthily. The light that has shone upon our pathway as Advent believers has been great, and now if this light becomes darkness, how great is that darkness.

To walk worthy of God we must "walk in the truth." Thy word is truth! Abraham believed God, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness. So we, if we would walk worthy, must walk in the footsteps of our father Abraham—we must believe God. If righteousness comes through faith in the word of God, then those who do not believe the word will fail of that righteousness which is by faith, and consequently will be walking unworthily. Noah had his truth, Abraham his, and we have ours, or rather God's truth, which is applicable to us; and as they became worthy by walking in the truths of their day, so we shall be worthy walkers only as we regard the truths for our day. Bickersteth remarks that Christ's speedy coming is "the generation truth;" then if we have reached "the generation" of which it is said, "this generation shall not pass away," then we should confess those events with which "the generation" should be identified. The darkening of the sun and moon and the falling stars were first to take place; then we [illegible] that the kingdom of heaven [illegible] nigh even at the doors." Now [illegible] to believe that he is nigh [illegible] at the doors, while we pretend to [illegible] [illegible] days of Noah, and thus it will be in the days of the Son of man. They knew not, and perished. We fail to understand, and like them perish. O that we may "walk worthy of God who has called us unto his kingdom and glory!" More anon.

The Great Trial.

Something more than eighteen hundred years ago, in the city of Jerusalem, was pending one of the most momentous trials ever recorded in history. Come, dear reader, and go with me, and we will follow with the pressing multitude, and endeavor to get into the great ecclesiastical court of the Jewish nation.

Do you see that stern looking man, sitting upon that elevation? That is Caiaphas, the highest in authority in all Jewry; and those men sitting around are the council; those on the left, are the witnesses, and that person who stands in the centre, whose eyes are so mild, whose soft hair is so wavy, and whose features are so much marred, so full of sorrow and love; that is Jesus of Nazareth, accused of blasphemy. But hush! look! the judge is about to speak. He is asking Jesus concerning "his disciples and of his doctrine." At the same time, darting a look of scorn, and awaiting an answer.

Jesus looks up so mild and with such an eloquent voice, replies: "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing. Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them." Oh! see that inhuman officer strike him with his rod, in his face, saying, "answerest thou the high priest so?" Jesus, looking with meekness and tenderness upon him, says, "If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil, but if well, why smitest thou me?" Now they all ask him, "Art thou the Christ? tell us. And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe, nor let me go." Again they ask, "Art thou the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am." Then they carry him to be tried for treason by the Roman Governor. He is now hurried through the streets of Jerusalem to the Judgment Hall of Pilate, mocked and insulted, till he stood in the presence of Pilate. And then they immediately began to accuse him, saying, "We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself is Christ a king."

Think for one moment of the corruption of his accusers. They say that he forbid to pay tribute to Cæsar. Was it the case? It was not. For says Christ, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's," he himself having paid his tax. Then think of these men so holy that they could not enter into the hall of Judgment; yet standing outside, hungering and thirsting after his blood. Oh! what hypocrites. But we will listen to the trial. Pilate asks, "Art thou the king of the Jews?" Christ answered, "Thou sayest it." Then after Pilate had conferred with him, and finding no fault in him, and had heard the message of his wife, "Have thou nothing to do with that just man," in connection with his own convictions of Christ's innocence, he sought to release him. Then from the outside arose a tremendous shout, "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend." This saying decided Pilate, and Christ was condemned to be crucified upon the accursed tree. His blood was shed for many. But Christ appealed to a higher court, the Spirit being his advocate, and gained his case. The fact was made public by raising him from the dead, and sending this Spirit into the world to reprove the world of sin and of judgment and of righteousness.

Now reader, how is it with you? Are you aware that there is a trial in the future, in which you must be an active member, where you will be called to plead your cause? O, that with me, you may be able to stand pleading the righteousness of Christ, being sprinkled with his blood and cleansed from all sin. Amen.

Ear Rings.

It is high time women of sense left the barbarous custom of mutilating their flesh, for the purpose of wearing jewelry. Why not pierce the nose and wear a ring in that also? It would be quite as becoming in the eyes of sensible and civilized individuals, as the horrid custom of piercing that exquisite organ, the ear. We may well wish for the reign of common sense; for then will be done away the many savage and barbarous modes of dress and ornament.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 12, 1859.

Preachers' Aid Society.

We are glad to see our brethren waking up to the importance of providing ways and means to sustain those who leave all—houses, lands, reputation, friends and home—to sound the last notes of warning to a dying world, remembering, "Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." Paul says:—"If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" Again he says, "He which soweth sparingly, shall also reap sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver." 2 Cor. 9: 6–7. The Bible abounds in recommendations of liberality, and the most awful denunciations against covetousness. Paul declares, "In the last days perilous times shall come." Why? "For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous."

Let us remember that we are subject to like passions as other men, and hence in danger of imbibing this anti-christian spirit of covetousness and self-loving, so common at the present day. Let us, you and I, dear reader, do all we can to forward the cause of Christ in every possible way.

What better disposition can we make of our property, than to use it in aiding those who are sacrificing every thing they have in this world, and wearing themselves out in toilsome labors, night and day, in warning men to flee from the destruction that awaits the finally impenitent? Gladly would those who have taken their lives in their hands, and are hastening to and fro, amid the scorn and slander of an unfriendly world, go to work with their hands, laboring earnestly, that they might help support others; but they dare not leave the field, lest they displease their heavenly Lord, and men be lost through their neglect; though some have concluded to run the risk, rather than to see their families suffer. At times the latter class are aroused to a sense of the awful state of things in the world, showing our nearness to the judgment, and they earnestly feel they must go and sound the alarm again, but when they think of the little ones at home and their past trials, they delay, and shrink back. Brn., shall we stay up the hands of those who are still in the field, fighting "the good fight of faith" with the great enemy of man, who is now making unparalleled efforts to drive the faithful few from their posts? Shall we suffer the arch enemy to accomplish his object for want of sympathy and support on our part? Let us prove, by noble deeds, as well as words, that we belong to Christ, and are willing to sacrifice for the sake of saving men from eternal death. Let us give cheerfully, and please the Lord. Now is the time for action. Let every church take up a collection for this noble object once a month. Every one can give something. Let us bear "one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." Some can give 5cts., some 50cts., others $1.00, $5, $10, $25, $50, or $100, and be the richer for it at last. There was much truth in the saying of him who remarked at the close of life,—"What I have given away, I have saved, and what I have kept I have lost." Come, let us make a deposit in the great savings bank, "where thieves do not break through nor steal."

At the Wilbraham campmeeting, between one and two hundred dollars were pledged for the aid of the poor and faithful preachers, of which the following has been paid into the hands of the Secretary and Treasurer. The following is his report:

Tendency of Spiritualism.

The following resolution, offered at the Utica convention of Spiritualists, by Warren Chase, shows the true tendency of Spiritualism; to wit, the subversion and abolition of christianity, and the substitution of infidelity and atheism.

"Resolved, That we will steadily resist the power and increase of existing religious societies, and the formation of all new ones on a similar, or any basis, that exclude any part of the human family from all its benefits and advantages of membership, and that we will steadily and persistently use our influence to relieve the social and educational institutions of our country from the influence and control of these societies, and to establish in these institutions natural law, intellectual direction and scientific [illegible]

Resolved, That as religious organizations have failed to save nations, societies, or members in this life or the next, and are sustained at a very great expense, we will steadily resist all efforts to build up such institutions among reformers for the future."

The following from the Christian Times, signed W. A. R., Burlington University, Iowa, sets forth the influence of Spiritualism in its real tendency. He says:—

"This child of Diabolus is now nearly eleven years of age, and though no older, is already one of the giant enemies of truth and righteousness. Its influence from the first has been evil and only evil continually. As a species of infidelity, it has proved itself the most subtle, corrupting and atheistic of all the various systems of false religion which have appeared in our fallen world to delude and debase mankind. Even the influence of Mormonism, with its abominable principles and practices, has been less harmful, and at present less to be feared, than Spiritualism. The hypocrisy of the latter is only equalled by the transparent folly and sensualism of the former. The Harmonial Philosophy, falsely so called, is composed of the essential principles of Deism, which it has taken and dressed up in the garb of mystery and pretended light from the Spirit-land, by which means it is made to appear but too successfully to the vain curiosity, blinded spirituality and depraved tendencies of fallen human nature. Its hostility to the Christian scheme is intense, and orthodoxy is the constant theme of its ridicule and opposition. It has seized the press, taken advantage of the popularity of periodical literature, and by this and other means is scattering far and wide over our land its "fire-brands, arrows and death." Its adherents are numbered by hundreds of thousands. Many have thought that so professedly licentious a system would not long endure the light of truth and civilization. But certainly its past history and present state of prosperity do not warrant so encouraging a conclusion. We should not be unaware of the danger, nor inactive."

Trance Speakers.

We copy the following from the Spiritual Age. The Editor of the Age thinks these claims are rather fanatical. He says: "It is not long since a lady of good breeding, high respectability and no inconsiderable share of smartness, called on us and gave us a long narrative of the tete a tetes which she had held with Jesus Christ, in the course of which narration she informed us that, at the commencement of her mediumship, she resolved never to receive any communications from the spirit-world, unless they came from one of the persons of the trinity. Hence it was that Jesus consented to be her tutelary spirit.

Still more recently, we had a trance-speaker, in our hall, through whom the same member of the trinity purported to speak, and declared that his medium was superior, in spiritual development and elevation, to all other mediums in the world, and gave notice that God would come, in the afternoon, and work the greatest miracle through him that ever had been witnessed on earth."

We have not yet heard anything concerning that "greatest miracle," although the promise was made more than a year since.

Endless Torment.

The following from Jonathan Edwards' will give the reader some idea of the popular theology of the day. After you have read this, meditate upon the saying of Jesus:—"Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful." Luke 6: 36.

"How dismal will it be when you are under these racking torments, to know assuredly that you never, never shall be delivered from them; to have no hope. When you shall wish that you might be turned into a toad or serpent, but shall have no hope of it; when you would rejoice if you might but have any relief, after you have endured these torments millions of ages, but shall have no hope of it; when after you have worn out the ages of the sun, moon and stars in your dolorous groans and lamentations, without rest day or night, or one minute's ease, yet you shall have no hope of ever being delivered; when after you have worn out a thousand more such ages, yet you shall have no hope, but shall know that you are not one whit nearer the end of your torments; but that still there are the same groans, the same shrieks, the same doleful cries incessantly to be made by you, and that the smoke of your torment shall still ascend for ever and ever; and that your souls which have been agitated by the wrath of God all this while, yet will still exist to bear more wrath; your bodies, which will have been burning and roasting all this while in these glowing flames, yet shall not have been consumed, but will remain to roast through an eternity yet, which will not have been at all shortened by what shall have been past. The sight of hell-torments will exalt the happiness of the saints forever. It will not only make them more sensible of the freeness and greatness of the grace of God in their happiness; but it will really make their happiness the greater, as it will make them more sensible of their own happiness; it will give them a more lively relish of it; it will make them prize it more. When they see others, who were of the same nature, and born under the same circumstances, plunged in such misery, and they so distinguished, O it will make them sensible how happy they are. A sense of the opposite misery in all cases greatly increases the relish of any joy or pleasure."

The Soul.

A popular writer in defining the soul, which he denominates "the real man," says:—

"The soul [illegible] is the essential substance of man, about which the corporeal structure forms itself, to be dispensed with and [illegible] [illegible] The soul, by its own inherent energy, triumphs over the decaying structure which it inhabits, and only seems to need a better mechanism to achieve nobler works than it ever did before. . . . In one sense, the body is a mere piece of mechanism, which in our present imperfect state, the spirit uses for the execution of its purposes: the arm, for instance, is a lever,—the muscles are the cords which move it, and through the nerves, what we call the will,—which is only the soul acting,—regulates their contraction and extension; so that when I overcome the natural law of gravity by lifting a weight, it is really my soul, and not my body, which lifts it."—T. M. Clarke, D. D.

At the close of his "discourse on the immortality of man," he quotes the following:—

"O, listen, man!
A voice within us speaks the startling word,
'Man, thou shalt never die!'"

Queries. 1. If it is the soul in man that lifts the weight, what is it in the beast?

2. If the soul "only seems to need a better mechanism to achieve nobler works than it ever did before," what can't it do without any mechanism at all?

3. In the early history of man after he had received the law of his Creator, the penalty for disobedience was expressed in the following language:—"Thou shalt surely die." A little time after, the great liar said,—"Ye shall not surely die." Which told the truth, the Lord or the devil?

4. The poet says: "Man, thou shalt never die." The devil says:—"Ye shall not surely die." What is the difference between the writings of the poet, and the sayings of the devil?

For the Crisis.

Financial Report.

Dear Bro. Grant:—Herewith, I hand you a true statement of the results of keeping the boarding table at our late campmeeting; as it is due to ourselves that we give the facts, that we may be cleared from any charges of making it a profitable operation, at the expense of our poor brethren and sisters.

EXPENSES.

For amount advanced by R. E. Ladd last year, 1858, above receipts	$42.15
For amount advanced this year by R. E. Ladd	$24.69
For amount advanced this year by H. Munger	$34.15
For Bills, Groceries, Provisions and Bread	231.17
Bills for sundry small items	$10.04
	$342.20

RECEIPTS.

By amount received for board and sales at the cake and fruit stand, after paying all expenses of help and other items	$271.68
By amount received for rent of stand, horse keeping, barber shop and confectionary	$39.73
Balance against us	$30.59
	$342.20

It will be seen that we have come out $11.56 better than we were last year, when there was a debt left on us of $42.15. Thus we have nothing for our labor and anxiety in the care of the boarding for the week; nothing to meet the depreciation, wear and tear, and breaking of crockery and furniture, and (what afflicts us most) nothing left to aid our poor preaching brethren in their labors and toils in the service of Christ; but we are still in debt for the services rendered to the church. It is strange that people have such ideas about the great profit of keeping a large number of boarders in the woods. They do not think that it costs much more to carry all our provisions out there, and prepare them for the people, than it would to do the same things at home, where every thing is handy and all conveniences around us.

It is proper to say here that the principal reason of our loss is, the large number of free boarders at the table. There were not less than seventy persons who sat at our table from whom nothing was received, and this was nearly or quite one-third of all who boarded with us. The number of free boarders has increased greatly every year, until it demands the attention of the brethren to provide a remedy. I still think that the preachers and the poor, that "we always have with us," should be boarded free, but it ought to be borne by all the body, and not by us alone, who try to serve you. Some one offered to Bro. Matthewson to give $50 for our privilege. If the good brother will take the things off our hands at a fair valuation, and release us from all further trouble and care in the matter, and do as we have done for the brethren, and as much better as he chooses, he can have the privilege gratis, and I will make a further discount. But if the church desire to have us serve them farther in this matter, they must indemnify us from loss, or adopt some measure which shall secure us from it.

If we had been so unfortunate as to have had one rainy and bad day, we must have lost $50 or $75; but with all the good favors of Providence, we barely escaped with the skin of our teeth.

Your servants in the Lord,
R. E. Ladd,
H. Munger.

☞ Man is like a snow ball. Leave him lying in idleness against the sunny face of prosperity, and all that's good in him melts like butter; but kick him around, and he gathers strength with every revolution, until he grows into an avalanche. To succeed you must keep moving.

[illegible] the West.

Aug. 10th.—Bro. F. sends $1 for the Tract cause in the West. "D" writes:—

"I am glad in my soul that God ever put it into your heart to start up such a machine, requiring in its operation so many "little wheels," rings and pins, which have been heretofore, and still are to a great extent, useless ornaments to the workmanship of God's own hands, but which can now so nicely and acceptably perform a part in carrying forward the great work of saving this workmanship from everlasting destruction. For several months I have felt an anxious desire to be doing something more for God than what I am now doing or can do in this place. While I read in the Crisis your soul-stirring letters, appeals and proposals, as well as Bro. Spaulding's and others, oh! how my anxious heart has desired to assist you, or engage in the same good work some way or other. At length the way is opened, where every little mite, every pin, ring, necklace, all the jewelry, and especially all that belongs to our believing sisters, can be made to work admirably in this blessed cause; and I hope and pray that everything of the kind may be brought along and placed in this glorious enterprise. Enclosed I send in postage stamps (24 cents) twice the value of my bosom pin. It is all the jewelry I have, ever had, or ever mean to have; although this is but a trifle, it will send several pages of tracts to Bro. Spaulding. The other mite ($1) is for the Western mission. Now while praying and laboring with might and main to gain a little time in which to do extra work, with which to get a little money occasionally for this cause, I shall be happy in the thought that I too, though not actually scattering these messengers of light and truth, yet am assisting to stay up the hands of those who are doing it, and who have so nobly consecrated their all and laid it upon the altar. God bless them and their labors abundantly, shall be my constant and earnest prayer. He will do it, Bro. Hastings, and give you and all the faithful ones an abundant entrance into his peaceable, glorious kingdom very soon. Amen."

Here comes another little letter on this wise.—"Aug. 9th, '59. Brother H.:—Enclosed please find $5 from a praying one, who for laudable motives withholds the name. It is to preach the gospel in the West. I see by the Crisis our prayers that your fund may be made up are being heard; but more praying must be done, so that the work may go on faster. Tell the flock to increase their prayers, and especially tell them to pray for more $50 contributions from the churches. I believe this is an especial call from God, affording the richest field of labor that is within our reach. Yours as ever, P. W."

Thank you, Bro. W. In some other churches they have larger purses than where you live; but—, well, he that soweth sparingly must reap accordingly. May God bless your "praying one," whose donation raises your total contribution above $50. You know in some places where religion is pretty scarce, they have to hire a preacher to do their worshiping God for them all the time. So they determine we must have preaching every Sunday if the rest of the world go to perdition around us. Then they come to meeting and find fault with what they do have, while the hungry sheep and lambs cry for food, and they have enough and to spare. Better go a week or two without preaching, and send the preacher into the regions beyond.

11th. Here is a letter—not a line written in it—blank paper—there is a new, cleaned dollar bill,—hold! what's on the back of it? "I go into the Tract fund for the West." Go ahead!

12th. Sr. E. sends $2 for tracts to be sent to Sr. M. in the wide West. They have been sent, and have found their way into church, Sunday school, etc. May God give them increase.

13th. Sr. B. sends 36 cts. to pay postage on tracts. She hath done what she could. A widow sends 24 cts. to pay postage on tracts to her son. A "widow's mite." God bless her and repay it.

16th. Sr. V., from N. H., sends $1. "My prayer is that the truth and light may spread." L. J. B. sends $1, to be added to the $25 already raised at N. B., and also $1 for tracts to scatter in N. B.

17th. Here comes "Pilgrim Brother's" letter again, with $2, his fifth instalment. "This week I have the pleasure of doubling "the mite," for which I desire to magnify the goodness of the Lord in blessing the labor of my hands in the past week. Faithfully yours, Pilgrim Brother."

18th. Sr. B. writes to Sr. H. Sends the regular monthly contribution, $3, of one church, a church that has contributed monthly for the Tract cause for a year or two past. Will others go and do likewise? She writes—"Give much love to Bro. H. It would have done him good, a short time ago, to have seen some eight or ten of us get together and talk, and cry, and say what can I do to send money to the west, or to Bro. H. for tracts for them? One little girl said to her mother, sit down here and hear me read. And she read to her the piece in the Crisis, and cried all the while; when she was done she said, 'now, mother, give me $— to send.' I am glad, Br. H., that the Lord knows our hearts and those of us who would do, but can't; he knows all about it. My prayer is, Lord, help Bro. H. in his undertakings for the dear brethren at the West." Well, the Lord bless you and the little ones that [illegible] in your kitchen to weep and pray over the Tract cause. God [illegible] money. Just keep praying. He will provide just enough for this work. We will trust in him.

20th. "Pilgrim Brother" again, with $2. Steady as the weeks roll, he lays by as the Lord prospers him.

23d. Away to New York, and then, on the 25th, round to Collinsville campmeeting. Sr. C. comes and meets me on the camp ground with her $1. Poor child, she has been walking amid the shadows, and the tears have dimmed her eyes. Well, the morning cometh! Bro. S. hands in $1 to be added to the $20 from the D—— church.

26th. Sr. M., of H., $1. Bro. C. Goodrich brings $1 for himself and others. Here comes a brother who earns his bread in the sweat of his face, and he gave $20; but I must not tell who he is. It is not the first sum he has devoted to God's cause, nor the last, nor the largest either. May God bless him, little, quiet man; who would think he had such a great heart thumping away under that plain, quiet looking garb?

27th. Bro. R. O. W. gives $1 for the Tract Fund. Sr. Ruth —— sends $1. Bro. G. S——, $2. G. L——, $1. Sr. A. and Mary, $1. A Friend, $1.

28th.—Bro. W., who has about three times as much land as he can ever cultivate, besides a hope of a patch on Abraham's farm, and is, of course, "hard up" for money, as everybody else is after they have spent all they had, comes along with $1 for the Tract Fund, and thinks he shall have to ask me to stop publishing any more letters from the West, for he is rather short of money, and his wife teases him so for some to give to the Tract Fund that he can't sleep nights. Very sorry, brother, that we can't oblige you, but the tract cause must go, and the folks all clamor for it through the Crisis; and if you have to sell one of your farms and use the money to scatter light, I don't see as I can help it. Perhaps you would sleep better if you should do so. I would n't do anything more than suggest the matter, and should n't care to have you sell all of them, for you do keep a first rate pilgrim tavern, and have the latch-string always out. God bless you, and keep you from killing yourself with hard work to take care of so much land.

Leaving Collinsville, I came to Wilbraham campmeeting on Wednesday. Arriving there Sept. 1st, Bro. G. T. A. handed me a letter which said: "I send you $2 to help spread the glorious truth in the far distant West. Press forward, dear Bro., in this good cause. Your sister M." The same envelope contained another letter with $3 from Sr. H. Through the Crisis office I also received $—from M. W. A.

Two brethren in Jersey City send $1. Bro P——, of S., gives $5 with hearty good will. Bro. S——, of H., $1. Bro. S. Cook brings $1 from two sisters. R. B. gives $3. A Sr. B. gives $50. Bro. S——, from Pa., $2.50. Bro. D—— gives $1. J. Couch brings $1 from Bro. R——. Bro. E—— hands in $4 to be used for tracts, or as the Lord may direct. I saw him a day or two after tucking a bank note into Bro. P.'s hand and saying, "Trust in God, Bro. P." Good, thought I, that's the way to learn folks how to trust in God! Such an exhortation will weigh something. But to have an old skinflint tell you, "you must trust in God" is worse than a cold shower bath!

Bro. A. D. S. gave $1. He scatters tracts around home, too. Sr. F. gives $1. A. F. S. from the west sends $1 for tracts. He wrote sometime since,—"I am preaching in different parts of O. and G. Co.'s, and there is an uncommon inquiry after the truth. I should like much to have a few books to circulate. I have disposed of all I had and received no money in return, but have the satisfaction of knowing that a number have embraced the truth thereby and feel amply paid. Most of those that have embraced the truth are interested enough to give something to spread it, but times are hard at present, and but few can raise money." I sent tracts as desired. He writes, Aug. 18th,—"I received two packages of tracts by yesterday's mail, and was doubly disappointed, for I did n't know positively that I should get any at all, and when I received many more than I could possibly have expected, my poor heart leaped for joy, feeling that I could now work more effectually in opening the eyes and hearts of many honest but mistaken souls, and lead them to a saving knowledge of the truth. I shall dispose of them to the best advantage possible—shall in all probability sell some of them, and, if so, will remit. I am so reduced in money just at present that I had much against my wishes concluded to postpone from necessity this acknowledgement of receipt of books for want of money to pay postage; but just at this moment a gentleman calls and buys some tracts, preferring to buy them. A good sister has just called and taken some of the smallest tracts promising to read and circulate them among her neighbors." Bro. S. gives cheering intelligence of interviews had with inquirers, etc., etc., which I have not time to transcribe, and in a later letter sends the $1 referred to above.

Sept. 22. Bro. C. B—— gives $5.00. Sr. B—— sends 50 cts. Her heart is just as white as a white person's. God bless her abundantly. Sr. E. P—— sends [illegible] Sr. C——, [illegible] N.

L——, $2. Mary, who has chosen the good part, brings a gold dollar—her "mite." The Lord give her a blessing! Sr. H——, $1.25. Tracts are sent as ordered. Levi A—— comes along—thinks he may want to get shouting happy by and by, and so hands over $2 for the Tract Fund,—like the sailor who never got shouting happy till after the hat went round. Well, did n't the old man shout, and jump too, in the love feast Sunday morning? Bro. H. brought some paper. $1 for the Tract Fund. That will do to write the letters on. Bro. H—— gave $1,—and this closes up the campmeeting account.

We had good times, of which you have heard accounts from other pens. One thing I did not observe in the report. In the evening, while several hundreds gathered around the table of the Lord, we gave the right hand of fellowship to Bro. and Sr. M. S. Mansfield, to go to the gentiles and preach salvation in the west. They take a deep interest in the Tract cause. The friends in the west are looking to us for help. We will not disappoint them, I trust. Let us be diligent. God bless you all, and preserve you unto eternal life, is the earnest prayer of your brother in Christ Jesus.

H. L. Hastings.

Correspondence.

From Benj. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—With gratitude to God, I wish to say, I still live, still enjoy health, although much worn down with continual hardship. For nine weeks I have been continually engaged from morning until night in visiting families and exhorting, giving lectures, three every Sabbath, and often on other days; distributing a great amount of tracts and children's papers. I have just left the Islands, for I found so much prejudice raised against the doctrines I hold forth, that I found it very hard to get sustained. Indeed, I did not get sustained by the people. God did sustain me. Praise to his name! And for nine weeks I received but $2,50, while I expended for fare, postage, and tracts, nearly $20 dollars. I impute the prejudice and coldness, with which I have been received this last tour, to the ministers. There are six on Mount Desert Island this year, where there was but one last year; and the difference in the people is plain to be seen; their hearts are closed against the truth; their minds prejudiced, their doors closed upon the humble servant of God who preaches without money or price, and they forget to entertain him.

These remarks apply only to that one Island—Mount Desert; the neighboring Islands, where there was no minister, were much more open-hearted and hospitable, and received me kindly, supplied my wants, heard me candidly and attentively. Thank the Lord, there are some yet who are not "forgetful to entertain strangers."

I have distributed tracts in every neighborhood, and in almost every house on twelve Islands, embracing five townships, and also in Millbridge and Jonesport; and the leaven is at work, which will leaven a part of the lump, at least, notwithstanding opposition. Thanks be to my heavenly Father, that he has given me a heart and strength of body to do this work; and the gates of hell cannot prevail against it. No, blessed be his name, it is the work of God; and though he has chosen a weak thing to confound the mighty, a foolish thing to confound the wise, a base thing, a thing set at naught, yet by such a feeble instrument he will carry on his work. It is not by might or by power, but by his Spirit he accomplishes the work, that no flesh should glory in his presence.

Let me say to all such brethren as sympathise with me and my mission, and who know me, and the temperament of my mind, and wish to share my sorrows as well as joys,—that they can communicate with me by directing letters to Bangor, Me., with comforting words, and I need such in my worn down state; they will be like cold water to a thirsty soul. I feel confident I shall recruit my wasted strength here in the company of the beloved ones in and around Bangor. O! it is so refreshing to my spirits, to get among those who love the appearing of the Lord, who look and wait for it! Thank God for this dear, uniting love, which will not let us part!

My faith is strong in the promises of God. Yes, brethren and sisters, we are on the right track, we are nearing the port, the port of endless rest; its glories already heave in view. Lift up your heads and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. Pray for me, that I may have strength of body, as well as force of mind to continue in this work.

I expect to be in the neighborhood of Bangor for two months to come, if the Lord will. Brethren and sisters, let me hear from you, it will be a cordial to my fainting body.

From E. J. Town.

Bro. Grant:—I have for the last four years been much interested in, edified and comforted by, the great and fundamental truths of life and immortality, only through Christ, his reign, and the saints' eternal inheritance,—not in skyey immateriality, but with resurrected and glorified bodies, in the [illegible] where there shall be no more death, where the proud blasphemer, the willingly ignorant, the caviler, and the finally incorrigible, who will turn away from the truth to fables, shall have been reduced to immateriality, and be as though they had not been.

I have been traveling some for a few days in Iowa and Jo Davis Co., Ill., and have spoken a few times by request at several places, and left the friends of truth strengthened and encouraged in the gospel hope. I am now waiting at this place to attend the contemplated annual conference of Iowa, Minnesota, and Wis. I found here a respectable church in numbers and talent, capable of defending and teaching the truth, and are rejoicing in the faith and hope of the gospel; and why should they not, since they have been blest with the labors of our efficient, energetic, and much esteemed Bro. Y. Higgins, who has been here about a year, planting and watering the church of God at this place? The opposition is very bitter against the truth in this vicinity; but notwithstanding the misrepresentation and falsehood reported to keep the people from hearing the truth, light is gaining ground, the gospel is being believed and obeyed by the most intelligent and respectable part of the community. I have spoken four times in this place on the state of the dead, the resurrection of the just and unjust, practical religion contrasted with that religion that is vain; and on faith and baptism; and, in spite of the opposition of doctors and high priests, there were two willing souls who determined that it was better to obey God rather than men; and repaired to the water, and by Bro. Higgins were planted in the likeness of the death of their Lord; and, as I trust, are risen with him to walk in newness of life, that they may be raised in the likeness of his resurrection. One more has since resolved to be baptized at the conference, and many more I trust will be made to rejoice in the "revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."

Springville, Wis.

From A. Clapp.

Bro. Grant:—It may be interesting to the friends, to hear of the interest of the Advent church in Hartford. For many years, a good number of brethren and sisters have unitedly been laboring and striving together, to maintain the cause of Christ in this place. By having different ministers to preach to us on Sundays, and continuing our Tuesday and Friday evening church prayer meetings, we have kept up a very good interest, although we did not increase in numbers very much. We also had a very interesting Sunday school and Bible class, which has been, by the blessing of God, a great help to us, and many of our brethren and sisters have enjoyed the seasons of the Sunday school very much.

Last winter, many of the brethren and sisters felt that we ought to make some extra effort to increase the interest among us, and, if possible, to have sinners converted. We first organized ourselves into a church of about fifty members, and then, in addition to the labors of Bro. W. S. Campbell and others, who had been preaching to us for sometime, we invited Bro. Himes to come and spend a few weeks with us. He came and preached three Sundays and most of the time week day afternoons and evenings, many were revived and blessed under his labors, and one precious soul hopefully converted. The meetings were followed up by Brn. Litch and G. W. Burnham. And now for five or six weeks we have been enjoying the labors of Bro. Edwin Burnham, who has seemed to come to us in the fulness of the gospel of Christ. We have crowded congregations on the Sabbath, of very intelligent people, who appear to listen to the eloquent preacher with the deepest interest. Our brethren and sisters are very much revived, and several young friends have been converted. Two Sundays ago, yesterday, Bro. Burnham baptized three persons in the Connecticut river. Next Sunday, he is expecting to baptise six or eight more.

The Lord is evidently reviving his work among us. We are praying for and expecting a glorious revival. Bro. Burnham's labors are being wonderfully blessed in Hartford. The people are delighted to hear him. In addition to his preaching Sundays here, he is preaching week day evenings in the towns in the vicinity of Hartford, to full houses. The Advent cause never stood so prominent and so well in Hartford as it does now. We are seeing the fruit of our labors and are rejoicing in the Lord our Savior.

Bro. Grant:—Send me more tracts. There are about two thousand inhabitants here. I am anxious that the light may be set up here on this island of the sea, that it may guide some souls into the harbor of eternal rest. Oh! how I want some brother, filled with the blessed Spirit of the Lord, to come over here. I will send him a five dollar bill to help him along. I am almost alone here. Come over and help! May the Lord open the way. Yours waiting for the redemption.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Falmouth, Me., Oct. 2d, Comitta, daughter of Bro. Eben and Sister Sarah Field, aged one year nine months.

May the gospel hope sustain the bereaved parents, who have now laid away in the dark tomb seven of their children.

> But from the land of death they shall arise,
> And live to die no more.

R. R. York.

Yarmouth, Me., Oct 6, 1859.

Died at Peace Dale, R. I., Sept. 1st, 1859, Samuel, son of Samuel R. and Caroline E. Clark, aged six months.

Sister Clarke has been called a second time to pass through deep waters, having recently mourned the loss of her husband, she now weeps over the grave of her youngest and only remaining child. May God bless and comfort her widowed and childless heart, and prepare her fully for that land where friends shall meet again.—

"Meet ne'er to sever."

H. L. H.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Nashua, N. H., the evening of the 29th of Sept., Carrie Elizabeth, only child of Isaac and Frances R. W. Chapman.

Our dear and only child returned Monday from the Westford campmeeting, where, as I ascertain from her "Diary," she "had feasted on the preaching and had blessed meetings, met many old friends and made the acquaintance of some from Boston, Stoneham, Lynn, etc., which was a source of comfort" to her. She took a severe cold on Wednesday, and came out of the mill with a fever settled upon her. Everything was done for her, but the enemy triumphed, after fourteen days' illness of billious and typhoid fevers. We thought her gaining, but a violent hemorrhage of the bowels set in, and made short work of it. Thanks be to God, we have the satisfaction of believing she sleeps in Jesus, and will be awakened in the last day by the trump of God,—

> "Will burst the tomb in sweet surprise,
> And in her Savior's image rise."

F. R. W. Chapman.

Died in Castle Rock, Minn., Sept. 2nd, 1859, Addie Marion, daughter of Calvin M. and Sarah L. Rice, aged two years, three months and twelve days.

Sadly, yet calmly we placed her enshrouded form in her little coffin-cradle, with the flowers she used to love so well on her silent breast, to wither, as she had withered; sweet emblems of childhood purity, and early decay.

> "The dear delights we here enjoy,
> And fondly call our own,
> Are only favors borrowed now,
> To be repaid anon.
> 'Tis God who lifts our comforts high,
> Or sinks them in the grave;
> He gives—and blessed be his name—
> He takes but what he gave.
> Peace, all our angry passions, then
> Let each rebellious sigh
> Be silent at his sovereign will,
> And every murmur die."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival of the Canada, we have news from Liverpool to the 24th ult.

The Zurich Conference.

The London Morning Herald gives prominence to the following paragraph: "We have reason to believe that a definite treaty of peace will soon be concluded at Zurich. It will, however, bear the signatures of only two Powers, France and Austria. The preliminaries of Villafranca will serve as a guide for the conduct of Austria."

GREAT BRITAIN.

Thirty of the crew of the Great Eastern were arrested and tried at Weymouth for mutinous conduct in refusing to wash decks, when so ordered. They were imprisoned for a fortnight with hard labor, two of the ringleaders being sentenced for three weeks and a month respectively. The evidence showed the ship's crew to be far from complete.

The English papers strongly denounce the incomplete and hurried manner in which the ship was sent to sea. Vague rumors had been current that her first voyage would be postponed till next year, and that in the interim she would be exhibited at the principal ports in the kingdom. This is authoritatively contradicted, and she is still advertised to leave Holyhead for Portland on the 20th of October.

Upwards of a thousand marines, strong detachments of the rifle brigade, two light infantry regiments, etc., were about to leave England for China by the overland route. The first of the squadron for service against China had already sailed. Government intended dispatching fifty gunboats, besides frigates, and other vessels.

A order for two million ball cartridges, packed in twenty-one hundred boxes, has been executed at Woolwich in three days, including stowing on ship-board. These go to China, overland, and a second order, to a much greater extent, was progressing for a sea voyage.

FRANCE.

Another Paris rumor was to the effect that there is to be no Chinese expedition—that the head of the Peiho Mandarin had been proffered in atonement, coupled with promises of all the satisfaction required, and that the Ambassadors would be immediately received at Pekin.

The Times Paris correspondent again draws attention to the great activity in the French dock-yards, and states that he has been assured there are now building, or under orders to build, twenty ships of the line, ten of the very largest size, and others of inferior calibre—all strictly fighting ships, steel plated and provided with iron breaks or prows.

ITALY.

The Pope remained in a very alarming state, and Cardinal Antonelli declared him unfit to attend to public affairs.

SWITZERLAND.

The [illegible] Gazette says the Minister of the United States, Mr. Fay, has addressed a long memorial to the Federal Council, praying it to [illegible] have protested against their illiberal, vindictive or intolerant measures against the Jews, in order to obtain modifications.

TURKEY.

There is nothing additional as to the conspiracy against the Sultan, mail advices only reaching to the 14th.

Fresh drafts of troops had been sent to Creta.

Amicable relations have been established between Turkey and Persia.

Matters in Candia were assuming a serious aspect, and numerous troops had been sent there.

Schamyl was betrayed and delivered a prisoner to the Russians for a bribe of six million rouble. The Circassians continued the war against Russia.

Return of the Arctic Exploring Expedition.

The screw steamer Fox, Capt. McClintock, sent by Lady Franklin to the Artic regions in search of traces of the Franklin expedition, has returned to England, having been completely successful. At Point William, on the Northwest coast of King William's Island, a record was found, dated April 25, 1848, signed by Captains Crozier and Fitzjames. The record says the Erebus and Terror were abandoned three days previously in the ice, five leagues to the North-north-west, and that the survivors, in all amounting to 105, were proceeding to Great Fish river. Sir John Franklin had died June 11, 1847, and the total deaths to date had been nine officers and fifteen men.

Many deeply interesting personal relics of the expedition were found on the western shore of King William's Island, and others were obtained from the Esquimaux, who stated that after the abandonment, one ship was crushed in the ice and sunk, and the other was forced on shore, where she remains.

The Fox was unable to penetrate beyond Bellot Straits, and wintered in Brentford Bay. The search included the estuary of Great Fish river, and the discovery of 800 miles of coast line, uniting the former explorations, was performed by sledge journeys during last spring. Minute and interesting details of the expedition are published. Several skeletons of Franklin's men, large quantities of clothing, etc., and a duplicate record, up to the abandonment of the ships, were discovered.

The Iron Crown of Lombardy.—The Iron Crown of Lombardy, says a Turin letter, has been the subject of a rather serious discussion at Zurich. The point at issue is not so much the possession of this curious relic, as who shall hold the office of grand master of the order, established by Napoleon I. when he had himself crowned King of Italy. The crown has been carried off by the Austrians, and as the Emperor of Austria possesses it, he thinks he has still a right to name the commanders and knights as he has hitherto done. King Victor Emmanuel has protested against that pretension, affirming that the Iron Crown is the property of Lombardy, and that the order of knighthood is Lombard, and that the grand master is the king of the country, and not the Emperor Francis Joseph.

Hard Times in Minnesota.—A gentleman just from Minnesota states that hard times still continue in that State, and that Eastern people have but an imperfect idea of the universal depression in business that exists there. Some relief from financial difficulties was anticipated in the abundant harvests, but the prices obtained for produce are so meagre that farmers can realize but little from their sales—barely sufficient to pay farming expenses. Wheat brings but fifty cents a bushel, oats fifteen cents, potatoes twenty-five cents, and corn is without sale. They have plenty of food to carry them through the winter, but no money. Many are leaving the State temporarily, with the intention of returning when times improve—the effect of which is to render trade still more inert. Property-holders are burdened with heavy taxes, and money-lenders frequently find more land mortgages as collaterals upon their hands, than they are able to pay taxes upon, and at the same time are paying Eastern capitalists from seven to ten per cent for money loaned on the same security. Many of the small towns, having city charters, have to pay extra for the dignity, and in addition to the State, county, school and poll taxes, are assessed two or three times a year for municipal expenses. In addition, there is a fair prospect of a heavy railroad tax. How to pay all these is the first question; the second, when are the hard times to end?—N. Y. Jour. of Com.

From Venezuela.—A file of the St. Thomas Tidende, to Sept. 1st, received at this port, contains an important document, showing the terrible condition of affairs in Venezuela, where a war of races, fanned by political and military aspirants, is rapidly depopulating that beautiful country, possessing one of the finest climates and most fertile soils upon the face of the globe. The document in question is an appeal for protection of the Foreign Consuls at Ciudad, Bolivar, to the Governors of the French, Danish and English West India Islands.

A Great Change.—A few years ago the Duke of Tuscany imprisoned the Madiai for circulating a few copies of the Word of God. To-day the Duke is a fugitive from his kingdom, and the Madiai are now busily engaged in circulating the Scriptures, the provisional government of Tuscany having proclaimed freedom of conscience and full religious liberty.

Pomological Curiosity.—The Montreal Gazette mentions a tree in a garden near that city upon which may be seen six different stages of vegetation, viz: a branch budding on one branch; the opening blossom on a second; full bloom blossom on a third; the fruit just set on a fourth; an apple about the size of a partridge's egg on the fifth, the last remaining witness of a late, though prior, blossoming; and high seated above all, on one of the topmost branches, a healthy full-sized apple of the true crop, which appeared and formed at the usual season. This extraordinary anomaly is thought to arise from the peculiarity of the past season,—from the tree having experienced so many sudden checks, directly influencing the crop in its progress to maturity, from too frequent and extreme variations of temperature to which it has been subjected.

Revival in Ireland.

The following extract from an English letter gives the latest news from the great revival in Ireland and Wales:

"The revival in Ireland is still extending, astonishing all candid observers by the magnitude of its results, and awakening the virulent animosity of some who have no sympathy with excitement or emotion. That there are tares among the wheat, few dispassionate persons will deny, and that some ignorance and some fanaticism may be displayed in dealing with this wondrous movement, need not excite surprise. Making all allowance, however, for these drawbacks, it still remains, as many different witnesses testify from actual observation, that the real and genuine results, upon all whose heads are such as to leave no doubt upon their minds, that this is, in truth, a work of God. I have observed that English visitors—and several have gone to see for themselves—return impressed with what may be termed the apparent inadequacy of the means employed to produce the great results which are daily witnessed. The prayers are of the old Presbyterian type, abounding much more in the doctrinal, than in the emotional element, and both prayers and preaching strike our people as unaccountably dry; yet these unquestionable effects follow.

It seems that there is, in all respects, the old form, and the outward manner, while a totally unwonted and divine power manifests through them.

From Wales, cheering accounts reach us of the progress of the revival there. The romantic and beautiful district around Snowdon, is now the scene of a great religious awakening. The workmen in the slate quarries there, it seems, assemble in great numbers, and hold protracted meetings for prayer. In South Wales, also, a good work is represented as going on, spreading over the large and interesting fields of mining industry, for which that part of the country is famous.

The great work of grace, which has been in progress in Sweden for several years, is spreading quietly and with delightful fruits in every direction. It is computed, though the estimate may be an extravagant one, that the number of persons who have been affected by it, experiencing regeneration or a deepening of former spiritual experience, is at least a quarter of a million. The influence of the movement is visible upon the entire social life of the nation."

ITEMS.

☞ The hog disease has broken out again. Numbers have died in the West, and in New York from droves brought from the West.

☞ It is said that since Sickles shot Key, no less than thirty-four men have been shot, or shot at, by injured husbands, that we have account of ☞ Work on the Great Eastern was rapidly progressing, and there is no doubt she will be finished, and at sea before the end of September.

Editorial Notices.

Soul and Spirit.—The first edition of the tract on Soul and Spirit is exhausted; but we hope to have another edition ready this week, so as to be able to fill all orders.

Errata.—In the editorial of the last number we are made to say "they are not to be destroyed," instead of, they are to be destroyed.

In the answer to the 3d inquiry, where it reads, "The word rendered soul is translated life 140 times in the Bible;" it should read, the words rendered soul are translated life 160 times.

We have just received No. 6 of the "Emphatic Diaglott." It contains Mark, from 13: 29 to Luke 4: 22. Price $2.00 for 12 Nos. Single numbers 20 cts. Published by Benjamin Wilson, Geneva, Ill.

Brethren, you will get the worth of your money if you subscribe for this work. The numbers are issued once in two months, containing 32 pp. each. It has a choice selection of references, together with common sense foot notes—exegetical and philological. Send for it.

Notices, &c.

Appointment.

By adjournment of our last quarterly meeting, the next meeting of the Western Central Quarterly Conference is to be held in the Read meeting-house, Thursday, Oct. 27th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over Lord's day. We cordially invite ministers and others from any place to come and work with us in the cause of Christ. Let there be a good representation of the societies and churches within the limits of the Conference. Come ready to worship God and to work in his cause. Could Bro. Hemmenway and Billings postpone their meeting in Augusta one week, it would accommodate the brethren much.

For the Crisis.

Power of Sin.

How subtle and powerful is sin and its influence. It binds the soul with fetters of brass, and drives the bolt, that keeps it, deep into the earth. Let a man sin, who has a just conception of the position into which he has thrown himself, and he is then open and susceptible to the charms of the old serpent, and he yields again. For a moment he is troubled; but the serpent, knowing he has yielded once, and can therefore be made the more easily to yield again, draws himself toward his victim, and throws such a charm around him, that everything that appeals to the passions and appetites appears pleasant, and there is no thought of God or of moral obligation.

The soul is now led captive by satan at his will. In himself he has now no power to resist temptation, and more, he has no disposition to. If there is any restraint at all, it is caused by the opinions of others, or fear of punishment; but often there is a resort to cunning to evade these, and sin is still "rolled like a sweet morsel under the tongue." No expense or sacrifice is too great, if, by either or both, the pleasures of sin may be enjoyed. The hall of revelry and mirth, the wine cup and the polluted company are resorted to, and hold the soul a willing captive, subject to all their baleful influences. No matter how sure the work of destruction is which is being carried on, or how much it dries up the energies of the soul, destroying its moral sense, and all its finer feelings; no matter if the brain becomes crazed and the eye wild with passion, and the whole body suffers, being the victim of loathsome disease; there is such a charm to sin, such a pleasure in its practice, that it is as eagerly indulged as the unconscious victim drinks the cup of sweetened poison, because it is [illegible]. Yet, after all its sweetness, he must [illegible] the sinner. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Oh, startling [illegible] like the seven thunders [illegible] to arouse the soul. We wonder any are ever saved, whose hearts are so fully set in them to do evil. Were it not for the Spirit of God, whose power strikes like lightning, and descends deep into the [illegible] hopeless to the sinner; [illegible] death would be his portion [illegible] this over whose soul [illegible]

"[illegible] control?"

[illegible] to you, my friend, the note of [illegible] that God's Spirit may go [illegible] the word I utter—be careful how you [illegible] You are wicked [illegible] banished from the presence [illegible] If you have only [illegible] but you have sinned, more [illegible] look back over your life, how [illegible] have been crowded [illegible] I give [illegible] ways and turn your [illegible] of God.

Night Musings.

Nature is hushed, and the pulses of the great world are still. Midnight hangs like a huge mantle of blackness over hill and dale. The multitudes are now sleeping in the cradle of silence, and all, save the plaintive notes of the lone whipporwill in the distant forest, and the continual murmuring of the water-fall, is mute. Now for an hour of thought! An olden balcony shall be our place for prospect and musing, for we would draw around us the relics of past beauty and grandeur, that their memories may haunt us, and bring back to our ear the sounding footsteps of years that have not yet died out in the corridor of Time. From their bright abodes the melancholy stars look down, as a christian looks into the grave. We feel on our cheek the sweepings of night's moistened wings, as if it were laid on eider-down that had long drank the silent dews of eve. Awe watches from the windows of the soul, and Thought goes out into the realms of space, as the lonely dove went forth from the ancient ark.

'Tis now strange aspirations mount within our spirit, circling through the eternity of its being, wandering towards God, and winding through many a flowery maze, till the soul is burdened with a sublimer Presence. Fancy has been out—the wandering bird of heaven—now kneeling by the altars of the silent stars to worship beauty and light; now, threading the lamplit stairway of heaven, and quaffing the ambrosia that wafts on minstrel breezes from angels' bowers. Come back, bright-eyed, smile-wreathed fancy, sweet goddess of the mind! I fain would kiss thy cherub cheek again. Come; charm mine ear with thy imparadising voice; place thy warm lips close to my enraptured ear, and breathe such sounds in my secret soul as God may speak when to the hosts that give him praise he breathes his welcome love.

Oh, who can go to the very gate of Night, swing it open on its ponderous hinges, pass out into the glorious fields of day, and not feel the hand of an indefinable Presence suddenly, yet peacefully laid on his heart? Up the shining footprints of God, that glitter along the pavement of the sky, his soul may wander; and, as grateful bees sit, murmuring their hymns of toil, and roam amid fields of honey-laden flowers,—may sip from angelic fountains the nectar of life, and sing the new-born notes of Paradise.

Aye, go forth now, poet and muse, beneath the canopy of stars. What unutterable indefinable, overpowering feelings crowd around the heart, and yearn for utterance, till they go drifting over the multitudinous peaks of heaving thoughts, as the waves break over the crests of rocks that shoot up from the sea. And then, what sounds ravish the ear! not loud and clamorous, but soft, balm-like, and divine, baptizing the soul with the melodious foretastes of celestial song. Thus is enchantment weaving a hallowed halo around us, as we sit musing amid the whispering hours of night, whose dulcet voices sing to the world a blessed lullaby. The audible whispers of Nature are wafting on the balmy breeze that kisses our grateful brow, and lifts our damp locks from the fevered temple, leaving there its soothing memory.

Oh, lover of Nature, oft hie thee to some genial retreat, and there commune with God. Thou wilt feel his soft hand upon thy brow, his finger on thy trembling lip, and in thy heart of hearts his voice will speak. Upon thy view will break a fairer view than this, peopled with angelic forms, and enraptured with unceasing songs, and carpeted with lovlier flowers than ever graced the earth; where the painted skies are decorated with festooning rainbows, where Beauty and Peace have hung their beatific semblances. Thither will thy soul yearn to retire, and leave behind earth and its ills, to live where

"Heaven's the perfection of all that can
Be said or thought; or riches, delight or harmony,
Health, beauty; and all these not subject to
The waste of time, but in their height eternal."

Difficulties.

Difficulties are clearly God's own intervention, to try our tempers, and prove the metal that is in us. Without them life would be neither a struggle nor a trial, and man would run his race, leaving no marks to distinguish his course from that of other men. Difficulties which are the plea of the timid and laggard, the excuse of the idle, and the shoal on which the multitude wreck their richer argosies, are the sport of the bold and the spur of the persevering. The earnest, manly spirit looks upon the difficulties that hinder the coward and sluggard, as opportunities for distinction. Fortune and renown wait upon their vanquishment. Who has made a name in the world without conquering difficulties? Never was philanthropist or hero without hot strife and wearying endeavor. The stake that terrified the cowering, forgotten crowd, was the welcome goal of the immortal martyr. The path was fiery, but the reward was glorious. He bore the cross, but he won the crown. By overcoming difficulties, Alexander conquered the world. Difficulties alone are the gauge of triumphs. They are a portion, a providential portion—of all created being, the checks to undue aspiring, the pendulum of finite harmonies.

The Sign in Heaven.

A COMPARISON OF MATTHEW AND LUKE.

Some brethren begin again to inquire concerning the "sign of the Son of man." I have often, lately, been interrogated on this point. For a number of years, I have believed that the sign of the Son of man in heaven is to be found in the condition of the world in connection with the coming of Christ. Nothing more is necessary certainly, and nothing, it appears to me, could be better adapted to the purpose from the style of expression employed by the Son of God in bringing us down, by signs, to the coming itself. It is a great fact that Jesus does refer to the political, moral, and social condition of the world, as well as physical, before this point; hence, I think it only needs wisdom to discern what must be understood as requiring physical development; and what political, or moral, or both; to be able to determine when signs appear in either department.

Having thus premised, I proceed to state the ground on which I conclude that this sign, understood rationally, is exhibited in the "distress of nations with perplexity," which shall obtain, according to Luke, just before the Lord comes.

In Matthew we have (24: 20) the darkening of the sun, moon, and the stars falling from heaven, with the power of the heavens shaken; "Then (30th verse) shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." It is proper to observe that the sign appears when the powers of the heaven are shaken; the existence of it also causes the tribes of the earth to mourn. Here, then, are three things,—the shaking of the powers of heaven; the sign of the Son of man; and the mourning of all tribes.

There are various senses in which the term heaven may be taken. It is not of so much consequence to determine the precise sense here, since Matthew and Luke, speaking manifestly of the same things, and (from further remark, we shall see) of the same time, must use the term in the same sense. It most likely is comprehensive, intimating certainly the powers or forces of the atmosphere; and perhaps slightly, the political condition of the world,—I presume here, not at all of the state of the church. The term "shaken" need not be dwelt upon, nor need the facts, in proof of a condition answering to the prophecy of Christ in this instance. The evidence is abundant and incontrovertible that the world, physically, is suffering great change, even in the elements, and the apprehension of man need not be offered as a reason that we are now down at the point where we should look constantly, for such exhibitions as fill the picture of prophecy to the last lineament.

By turning to Luke, we find the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, referred to; then comes in the description of the condition which makes the sign of the Son of man in heaven. Not the sign of "his coming." The disciples asked him, "what shall be the sign of thy coming?" This sign of the Son of man is one great feature in the sign he undertook to give them. We read, "upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." (21: 25, 26.) The shaking of the powers of heaven is first in order, in either case. In Luke, by transposition, it is mentioned last, and as the cause of the fearful state described. The plain and fair inference of the language of Matthew is, that the same cause shall produce the sign of the Son of man, by the relation of the two; the one is made dependent on the other. We cannot look for the "sign" until the "powers" are shaken, hence dependence, and, to some degree, cause in the former. In the order therefore of the events, Matthew places the "sign of the Son of man" precisely where Luke marks the "distress of nations with perplexity." Hence, I take Luke as explanatory of Matthew. The fact that those two evangelists are speaking of the same great line of events,—one being more full and complete at some points, the other at others,—would lead to the conclusion that one might be employed to explain the other.

What is Good Preaching?

A friend sends us an extract from an article, published in the Herald several years ago, saying that he has just stumbled upon it and re-read it with great profit. Hoping that others may be benefited, we accede to his request for a re-publication. Several persons are represented as talking together about a sermon to which they have just listened:

"But why is it, or rather what is there in such preaching that makes you say so emphatically that you like it?" responded one of the group of retiring worshipers.

"Well," replied the first speaker, "I think it would take some time to specify all the particulars in such preaching that makes it in accordance with my taste, or correspond with my ideas of real preaching. But I will say I like it, first, because we see from every tone of voice and every word of the speaker; that he is in [illegible] earnest, and desires that the message of God shall be heard for its own sake. You see and feel that he came into the pulpit for a specific purpose. Next, there is no doubt in the minds of his hearers, but he himself clearly understands the message that he has come to deliver. Next, he tells us as clearly, and without many words, what he is aiming at. Next, he does not burden our minds with long statements of what he is going to do, but goes right at his work before your eyes, doing one thing at a time, and only one; and that is so distinct that when he gets it done, it is like one of the pillars of a temple standing before you. This is fixed in the mind, and so on, from one thing to another, until the structure is complete. The great excellency of such preaching is, that there is little or no effort of the mind required to keep pace with, or to know what the speaker is at, or would arrive at as a conclusion. Every point is distinct and plain, and not covered up by words, nor involved in others. Then there is feeling in it, earnestness; the hearer finds himself a party to the transaction, and an interested participant in the argument or exhortation. In short, it seems to me to be the word of life."

"But," said the querist, "you do not suppose the sermon to which we have listened to-day, would bear close criticism as a homiletic discourse, or that it would be called good or great by those who listen to the finished preachers of the day?"

"Indeed," replied the first, "my heart was too much interested to think about criticism; and I know or care but little, what rank such a sermon would take among the learned. Of this I am sure, there was no word or expression to shock a sensitive, or pain a fastidious ear. I remember no violations of the rules of syntax or prosody, but I do remember that the words came bubbling up full of meaning, every one of them, and full of heart also; and what is best, the very best of all is, I am sure they will be remembered; I am sure every one understood every word uttered and every position advanced. I am sure that I felt that the preacher was talking to me, and I think such was the impression generally."—Christian Herald.

When the tide's billowy swell
Had reached its height,
Then pealed the Rock's lone Bell
Sternly by night.

Far over cliff and surge
Swept the deep sound,
Making each wild wind's dirge
Still more profound.

Yet that funereal tone
The sailor blessed,
Steering through darkness on,
With fearless breast.

E'en thus may we, that float
On life's wide sea,
Welcome each warning note,
Stern though it be!

What Will They Say?

Mankind are governed, more than many are willing to confess, by the silent self-queries, "What will people think?" and "What will people say?" Think of it reader, if these be not among your own questionings. Is it not every day, perchance, that you halt in some purpose or pursuit, and suffer the imagined verdict of the out-world—of your friends, acquaintances, the community? There are thousands who fancy themselves independent, but who are daily and hourly servitors of those tyrant queries: "What will people think—what will they say?" Never mind what they'll think or say, so long as you outrage no duty or decency; but only do what your own judgment dictates as best—as right and proper for yourself. This is the kind of independence that will sooner or later command respect.—Mason.

Crossing the Line.

A young landsman sailing into the tropics hears much of "crossing the line." His heart flutters with surmises and anticipations. He imagines "the line" to be some huge black mark on the surface of the water, and that he shall know the moment of passing it as he knew the moment of coming out of his father's gate. He hopes the ship will not cross it in the night, for he means to be out on the prow looking down as she cuts her way through the mysterious boundary between two hemispheres. The captain and the man at the wheel are beset with the question—"When shall we touch the line?" while they smile in good-natured commiseration on the questioner's verdancy.

But in due time the air grows more balmy, the headlands along the coast show a deeper verdure, the sun becomes intolerable on deck, an occasional thunder-storm gathers at evening; and some fine morning our young landsman is startled by the reply to his usual question.

"You are already over the line!"

"But I saw nothing of it."

"Neither did we see anything."

"Well, how do you know we have crossed?"

"By the compass and chart, and calculations with the quadrant."

Now somewhat in this fashion many a young christian is deceived as to crossing the line between the cold regions of worldliness and the freshness of a holy love. He hears much said of a sudden and transporting change. He expects to be translated in a trice from darkness to light. He supposes it will be no more possible, after the greater event, to doubt of his own conversion, than at eight o'clock in the morning to doubt that the sun is risen.

And when, after many inward struggles, and tears, and penitential vows, he at length finds a heavenly peace and love slowly diffusing through his heart, and friends begin to speak of him as renewed, he exclaims, "This is not religion. I am not a christian. I have seen no light. I have felt no change. The whole process has been gradual. I can point to no time when a new life began within."

Like the young navigator, he has crossed the line before knowing it. But his duty is now, not to look tremblingly backward and long for a more startling transition. The question for him is not how he began living for Christ, but whether he is now living for him. Let him put the simple question home to the heart, "Do I accept Jesus as my personal Lord and Ruler, [illegible] henceforth and forever? Do I desire no other Lord to have dominion over me?" If able by grace to answer yes, then let him thank God, take courage, and go about the first duty before him.—Congregationalist.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Hygiene and the Ministry.

BY JAMES C. JACKSON, M. D.

2. Dietetic habits are in your way. They are obstacles to your success. More than most; for it is needful that you be exemplars of your faith. Such philosophy as Christ taught should have, as it is worthy to have, men to represent it of unspotted personal lives, men whose habits for their correctness, their simplicity, their complete accordance with their principles, are the theme of universal commendation. Of the most of you, these things are not to be truthfully said. You do not live simply. You indulge in the pleasures of the table. You drink vile, poisonous, unhealthy beverages, such as tea and coffee. You eat stall-fed and sty-fed meats—full as they are and must be of scrofulous poison—and you eat them richly cooked, dressed in rich gravies, and made additionally indigestible by condiments. You eat badly, chewing your food but partially, swallowing it hastily—inducing indigestion, unequal circulation, constipation, heat in the head, and coldness of the feet. You move from the table to THE STUDY, and indulge in a cigar; or if not the slave of that disgusting habit, you proceed to read, reflect, digest thought, when to digest food is your first duty. All these are true of you as a class, with the interspersal of those exceptional cases which are useful to prove the truth of this statement, and which statement, brothers, is as humiliating as it is true.

From my earliest conception of the worth to the world of the Christian religion, and of the very high calling of a Christian minister, it has been a matter of surprise to me how one who has been consecrated to the special work of illustrating this divine philosophy could consent to look for his illuminations to the tea and coffee pot, to tobacco, to the flesh of animals, or to alcoholic drinks. Tea and coffee have no elements by and through which to elevate your thoughts, quicken your emotions, or consecrate your hearts. They can serve no purpose but to create a flash of excitement, as factitious as it is superficial, ending surely in making you ill-tempered, and at last stupid. In my professional pursuits I have witnessed scenes in the lives of ministers of the gospel which I pray God I may never witness more—instances where men have lived long enough themselves to see the all-strengthening Hand withdrawn from them in their attempted ministrations at His altar, and in its stead the indistinct and shadowy, the tremulous and uncertain force which tea and coffee bestow. This is a horrible result for Christ's ministers to see wrought out on themselves, and yet it must be so, if they depart from the laws which underlie their being. For it may undoubtedly be said ☞ that to no one does the Omnipotent Spirit appear intimately except to such as can appreciate His visitations. To such, whether consecrated or not, as indulge in habits which obtund the moral sense, which keep down crushingly their spiritual discernment, which tend to the out-show of sham strength instead of the inflow of real strength from above, Divine impulses, acute and powerful, or grand inspirations, all guiding in their influence, can not come. The law of self-respect prevents, for God never forgets the dignity of His character. Such persons, at worship-hours, find themselves, not in the inner sanctuary, wrapped in that azure-light through which the face of the Savior is revealed, but in the out-grounds of the temple, wandering lonely, as mourners wander among graves.

Gentlemen, you gain nothing in the way of enabling you better to write or speak when of a morning, before hiding yourselves in your chambers for study, you fill your stomachs with tea or coffee. Temporarily, either may give your thinking powers exalted action, but this is nothing worth. For in the chirography one traces, or the ideas one elaborates, he so far vitalizes them as he is vitalized, and therefore brilliant conceptions and magnificent thoughts, if products of your table-beverages, will fall still-born on the couches you spread at their birth, and your hearers will not be one whit the better for them. It remains to be shown that the truth, when vivified by tea and coffee, ever converts men. There are some illustrious instances on record of preachers of the gospel whose eloquence and unction were the offspring of convivial indulgence, whose entire ministry was unblessed by divine visitation. But it does not remain to be shown that the truth converts men when the breath of God passes over it.

You gain nothing in your preparation for your [illegible] of a Sabbath morning [illegible] of a thousand, ministers, at least, 99 [illegible] would think, it impossible to conduct church service [illegible] acceptably without one of them. Neither can serve you any purpose but to cheat you egregiously, awaking in you feelings that are not less lively because they are entirely shallow, and surrounding you with illusions of the most pleasing yet fatal character. Fatal, because they destroy all chances of success. For who can succeed in the ministry, in any sense worthy of the term, when the devotion he shows, the fervor he exhibits, the anointing he receives, the eloquence he displays, the power in prayer he manifests, are born of his indulgences at the breakfast-table before his feet tread the altar. Surely, to persons in such spiritual conditions, though they are overshadowed by the cherubim, and the drapery of the consecrate is on their shoulders, the Holy One makes no such condescension as when John baptized Jesus. No dove with folded wing sits serenely on their heads. No voice out of the ineffable glory breathes on their hearers the welcome words—"These are my beloved! hear ye them." But stimulated by the beverages drunk and the food eaten, they go through prayer and preachment with eloquent declamation, while the angel of redemption turns to the walls and weeps, and the truth drops on soil that is barren. Oh, brothers! there is much of piety with us that radiates from the stomach and not from the heart.

3. Those of you who use tobacco, must find it a great obstacle to your successful ministrations. A greater and more devoted man than you or I has said, "Cleanliness is next to godliness." Tobacco can not be used without making the user unclean. It poisons him to begin with. It pollutes his secretions, making them filthy in their character, rendering their effluvia unpleasant, and their taste disgusting. Who of refined habit can bear a tobacco chewer's or smoker's breath? What of sweetness is there in it? You lay your nostrils at the mouth of a healthy infant, its breath is as inodorous as the vapor of pure water. You come in contact with the expirings of a tobacco chewer, and your instincts, if unperverse, revolt instantly. What justification, then, is there for its use?

It ruins the quality of the brain, narcotizing it (stupefying it,) and through it the entire nervous system—making those who use it habitually—and those who do use it will use it habitually—practically drunk There are tens on tens of thousands—and the Christian Church furnishes her full quota—who, from the hour when the angels shout forth the birth of a new year till they chant the requiem at its burial, never see a minute when they are not drunk. Lawyers, merchants, ministers, mechanics, farmers, operatives, alike tipsy—having not a natural thought, nor a sober reflection, nor a passion legitimately expressed. They have no hearty emotion, they gratify no pure idealism, and are never controlled by a well-directed nor shaped by an enlightened enthusiasm. For they are either in that state where the effect of its use is to exalt their VITAL FORCES, and so are lifted above their natural level, or in that state where its effect is powerfully to depress the system, and so they are doubting, despondent, or in despair. They are drunk with excitement, or drunk with stupefaction. They are wild with exhilaration, or very greatly exhausted. Do you doubt, reverend sirs? Take it from them and see! Three days would not go over their heads before they would howl like hungry wolves. The lawyer would lose the plainest case ever recorded on a justice's docket—the minister would stutter in the pulpit like a thief caught with stolen goods on his person—the merchant, would say a dozen times running that 4 and 5 made 11, and the mechanic would not be able to tell a saddle from a boot-jack. Take it away suddenly, and Neuralgia, and Headache, and Nausea, Catarrh, Sore-throat, Dizziness, Sleeplessness, Irritability, Jealousy, Distrust, and Fault-finding would, like a troop of evil passions, riot through their bodies and souls like so many rampant devils. Give it to them again, and Nature resumes her "plan of accommodation." They are themselves. The excitement subsides, and the reign of Drunkenness commences anew. They are not the less drunk because they do not show the alcoholic phase. Tobacco has its own way of making drunkards, its own method of showing the deleterious and deadly effects on those who use it, but the path it exists up is none the less a path trodden by a drunkard—just such a drunkard, too, as God declares shall not enter his kingdom. Neither you nor I am to suppose that the drunkard—of whom it may be said that his sentence of damnation has gone out beforehand—is a man drunk with wine, or beer, or cider, or some alcoholic mixture. That is not the idea! It is, that he who, of his own free-will, puts himself into such bodily conditions that he can not reason correctly, nor appreciate properly, nor discriminate clearly, nor feel fully the truth or falsity of any subject to which he may, for weal or wo, bear intimate relations—he shall not enter God's kingdom. He may be so excited as to over-estimate it; he may be so depressed as to under-estimate it, it matters not—he sees through fog, mist, haze, he sees illusively, ☞ and he can not enter. He has closed the entrance against himself. By the law of moral gravitation he is [illegible] equally with the [illegible] How could I may make a distinction in favor of one against the other, but it is clear that Heaven does not, for it can not, and so it is useless for us to make it.

How to get Sick.

From the Journal of Health we take the following extracts:

R. H. M. writes: "I slept in a room one night which had been washed during the day, and was not quite dry. I awoke in the morning with a sore throat, which has continued ever since." The result is, he has had to abandon his theological studies, and place himself under treatment, after having lost two years' time.

H. M. writes: "I went to sleep, in a warm day, on the top of an ice-box, and have never been well since." He shortly after died of consumption.

T. H. took a very severe cold, conversation was laborious, but he had an appointment to preach, and "felt as if" he must fulfill it. He made the attempt, but utterance was attended with a pricking pain in the throat, and then a dull hurting came on in the throat, with subsequent "hemming," and fruitless "clearing." He was permanently disabled.

A modest man walked till quite fatigued, and perspiring freely, entered an omnibus, and sat next a lady, who opened the window to get some fresh air for herself. He soon became chilled, and was ill for three weeks.

H. P. got up at night and hoisted the window to look at a burning house; the cold air darted in on the unprotected body, just from a warm bed. A twelve months' illness resulted in the dropsy.

A strong, hearty man, came home on a hot summer's day, immediately took off his coat and hat, and sat in the open window, looking out upon a beautiful garden, over which the ocean breezes came to fan him. Before he was aware of it, he was chilled, was attacked with inflamation of the lungs, and died within a week.

A delicate young lady, an invalid, a patient of ours, in an excursion with several others, was "overtaken" by nightfall, and by a young gentleman. They were in a boat, and the boat was in the mud, the tide having gone on a visit to the sea, and "there they were," a mile from shore, and several miles from home; that mile was extraordinary long and short. Only think of it! A whole mile over a Jersey flat! covered with water, mud, and bulrushes, carrying in the arms, a young eighteen, with one of the sweetest voices, and faces, and forms, to be found in or out of Jersey. Bespattered with mud, dripping with fog, and dew, and slush, steaming with perspiration, and wearied with hunger, thirst and fatigue, delighted and excited by the "novelty of the thing," they reached home at midnight. The next day she "didn't have anything the matter with her at all!" Why? She had taken lessons of us. Instead of pulling off her bonnet and shawl, and sitting in a cool place, or instead of undressing at once, and thus letting the air and cool linen sheets check the perspiration, she went into a warm room, closed all the doors and windows, sat some moments, laid aside all the garments one by one, at intervals, and when cooled off, in the course of half an hour, retired to sound sleep and a healthful awaking.

Another man rode three miles with a little child sleeping in his lap, which pressing against his stomach, caused unusal warmth there. It was a chill, raw, November evening. In walking a hundred yards to the house, the child moving slowly and wind blowing, the whole abdomen was chilled in a moment. The next morning he awoke with the ominous pains of peritoneal inflamation, which is often fatal in three or four days.

A man had some accounts to draw off in midnight winter. It was a cold, damp night. He was greatly interested; time went, and the fire too. He felt a little chilly, but thought he would soon be done, and thought it was not worth while to rebuild the fire. It was near one o'clock before he left for home, and he reached it most thoroughly chilled. Next morning he had pneumonia, and never got well.

Remaining at rest for hours in a cold room, in raw, cold, damp weather, is enough to kill three men out of four, by bringing on congestion of the lungs, lung fever, or inflammation of the lungs. Clergymen and lawyers often sacrifice their lives by speaking in warm rooms for some hours; the body, debilitated by the effort; the skin in a state of perspiration; the lungs all heated up; and thus, hungry, tired, and depressed in body and mind, go out into the cold air to ride or walk home—and to die in the very bloom of health and manhood. And yet, to know these little things, there are multitudes who hesitate to give a dollar a year, when on the knowledge of them human life is daily hung, and for want of it, is daily lost.

For the Crisis.

To Helen M. Johnson.

O, sister, take those cheerful notes
 That thou hast sweetly sung,
And by them cheer thy drooping soul,
 Strengthen thy faltering tongue.
Take comfort, dearest sister,
 While treading life's dark vale,
Look up for consolation,
 Let not thy courage fail.

Remember, Jesus feels for thee
 The keenest mortal pain,
And will remember every tear,
 Nor will they be in vain.
For every ill must work for good
 To those who really are
The children of Jehovah,
 Dear objects of his care.

Then look up from thy pillow,
 Where now thy head is laid,
While thinking of you willow,
 Helen, be not dismayed;
For angels will protect thee
 From every passing ill,
And wait to waft thee homeward
 To Zion's holy hill.

O cheer thee, for the morning
 Will soon in splendor dawn;
Then all life's pains and sorrows
 Will be forever gone;
And thou shalt bloom in beauty
 Through an eternal day,
And wear a crown of glory
 That ne'er shall fade away.

"The Kingdom of Men"—Its Origin and End.

The two Seeds.—The Serpent and the Devil the same through all Scripture.

The kingdom of men is the kingdom administered by man in his fallen state. Had the first dominion in Eden remained, there would have been none but "the kingdom of God"—administered by those standing in his counsel, enjoying his guidance, and accomplishing his holy will. The kingdom of men had its origin in apostasy from God; and it will end by the re-establishment or organization of "the kingdom of heaven on the earth."

The holy seed—the good seed—the seed of the blessed of the Lord, is contrasted with the seed of the wicked—the seed of evil doers—to be cut off.—Isa. 6: 13; 14: 20; 65: 23; Ps. 37: 28; Matt. 13: 37–38. Their origin is analogous to the two rival kingdoms. The evil is of the wicked one—the good is of God,—it is to overcome the evil,—fill the whole earth and stand forever.—Dan. 2.

The devil is a liar from the beginning.—John 8: 44. The serpent beguiled Eve by his subtlety.—2 Cor. 11: 3. Thus the serpent and the devil were both actors in the temptation and apostasy of man. The first is "the father of lies;" the other added his "subtlety" to secure its success. The father-lie was, that God's word was not true without an interpretation—"ye shall not surely die!" The great Teacher and his apostles take up the precise words and ideas of the Old Testament; but give them a fuller and more distinctive expression,—with the doom of the devil—the old serpent. The serpent's subtlety is thus identified with the devil in his murderous but temporary triumph—from the beginning; and both names go together to the bottomless pit. Note a few points.

I. The tares are from seed sown by the enemy, the devil.—Matt. 13: 39. They represent the posterity of fallen man, after he came under the serpent's charm with the devil's lie. Fallen creatures begat children in their own likeness, in their own mental, moral and physical condition. Cain was (murderous) of that wicked one.—1 John 3: 12. In this there is no contradiction to observation and experience. The Irish and Indians, the Hottentots and Hindoos, the English and the Esquimaux, with all classes and gradations of being, beget their own likeness. [illegible] may be found; but still [illegible] the serpent's seed—a generation of vipers.—Matt. 23: 33; Gen. 3: 15; Rom. 3: 12–18. In contrast, Abraham, Elkanah, and others who believed and obeyed God, were honored with an holy seed—the children of promise.

II. The apostasy from God—the serpent's seed—would have been universal but for the word of promise that secured the children—the heirs—of the kingdom of God. These two seeds are in ceaseless collision. Enmity is their expressed and actual antagonism.—Gen. 3: 15. The great mass are only "born after the flesh." Such take sides with sense and sin. Their wisdom ignores God. It is the wisdom of the serpent when instigated by the devil. He is the prince—the god of this world. The kingdom of men is his, in all its power and glory.—Luke 4: 5–7. But the holy seed has been maintained, in spite of satan's enmity, and that of all his seed. Abraham was alone, as it were, (like Abel, Enoch and Noah, in their time) the friend of God; while Nimrod and his host of idolaters ruled the world of the ungodly. Israel—the fewest of the nations—stood for the woman's seed; but Egypt, Assyria, and an idolatrous race ever since, have been their mortal foes. The called in Christ, under the gospel, "know that they are of God, and that the whole world lieth in the wicked one."—1 John 5: 19. (The same word, "wicked one," occurs four times. Chap. 2: 13, 14; 3: 12; 5: 18.) Our Lord says to his disciples; "Ye are not of the world"—your politics (conversation) are heavenly.—John 17: 16; Phil. 3: 20. But the prevailing politics and religion of earth are embodied in the beast and Babylon—the man of sin and mother of harlots. This state of things demands judgment. The evil seed will thus be brought to an end; but the godly will be installed in the kingdom. Those who are begotten again by the immortal seed, the word of God, are with Christ the heirs and the rulers elect over all the earth. They are to take the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven."—Dan. 7: 18 and 27; Matt. 13: 43; 25: 34; 1 Cor. 6: 2, 3; Rev. 1: 5–7; 3: 21; 5: 10; 20: 4–6. These Scriptures admit of no diverse reading. We believe then, and are justified; or disbelieve, and are condemned to be cast out; as was Adam from Eden. This change in the administration of the kingdom will begin at the judgment trump.—Rev. 11: 15–18. Then the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's. He and his saints immortal will then "reign a thousand years;" and thence on through "the age of ages."

III. The harmony of Holy Scripture as to this vital and all-pervading truth is thus made apparent. The first words that were employed to denote the tempter and his subtle agent are also the last! In Hebrew, Greek and English, they are the same. "The serpent" occurs five times.—Gen. 3: 1–13. This is the very term five times in the New Testament.—2 Cor. 11: 3; Rev. 12: 9, 14, 15; 20: 2. "The devil" is the liar back of "the serpent" in the beginning.—John 8: 44; Gen. 3: 3. So he is "the old serpent, the devil," at the ending of this world. "The dragon" is used fourteen times in the Old Testament; and in the plural sixteen times more—thirty times. In the New it occurs eleven times. "The dragon shalt thou (the promised seed) trample under feet."—Ps. 91: 13. The serpent's head shall be bruised, as it was announced "from the beginning." So our Lord "saw satan fall as lightning from heaven." By him "the devil and death" are to be destroyed; hence the dragon, the old serpent, the devil and satan are used to express to us "the wicked one."—Heb. 2: 14; 1 John 3: 8; Rev. 20: 2; Gen. 3: 1–15. The enmity from the beginning is apparent all through every dispensation to the final close. "The dragon—the serpent—was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of the woman's seed who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."—Rev. 12: 17.

IV. The dragon denoted the crocodile of Egypt.—Ps. 74: 13; Ezek. 29: 3; 32: 2; see margin. The king of Egypt is so designated. A crocodile or dragon represents Egypt on ancient coins. Thus, as this dragon power oppressed Israel, it became the proper name of satan's dominion in and by the serpent's seed; and hence we find, that, ages after, Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon—as a dragon—had swallowed up Judah.—Jer. 51: 34. The dragon is the same as the serpent.—Isa. 27: 1. All which, with other considerations, show us plainly that these terms denote the [illegible] power organized under "the wicked [illegible]" as it goes to the judgment. These [illegible] serpent," designate the adversary [illegible] brought to judgment [illegible] 19 to 21? [illegible] Thus these [illegible] God on this important theme. Much matter must be waved.—Ezek. 28.

Remarks. 1. It is presumption to say, against all this wide range of unerring truth, that the old serpent, the dragon—the devil—is Pagan Rome. Was Pagan Rome in Eden? Was it the Egyptian Pharaoh? Was it to be the subject of divine judgment at the resurrection of the just, as set forth in Isaiah; when, according to the theory, it went to the abyss about fifteen hundred years ago?

2. The symbols of Revelation do not obscure or alter the proper names and usual epithets of the other and foregoing Scriptures. God and Jesus, heaven and earth, new and old, saints and salvation, repentance and faith, beast and Babylon, are used in this book as elsewhere; by consequence the terms in question are also. "The darkness is in themselves," said Dr. S. H. Cox.

3. Those who restrict these terms in Rev. 20 to Pagan Rome, are so far with the Papists. They make the millennium to belong only to the Popedom!! The whole of prophecy places the Papal apostasy there and then. Is Christ's blessed reign to be so confounded with the Pope's? Did Christ's resurrected saints (ver. 4–6) reign in conjunction with the red-capped cardinals of Rome, when all history records the martyrdom of those very saints at the hands of Roman prelates and princes? God forbid this folly!

4. This erring application of Rev. 20: 1–8, involves more than a denial of the general tenor of holy Scripture, because it falsifies the plainest assertions of this book: it makes the reign of Christ— one thousand years—end before it can have begun! The reign of Christ with his saints begins at the seventh, the last, the resurrection trump.—1 Cor. 15. 50, 51; Matt. 24: 31; 1 Thess. 4: 16–18; 2 Tim. 4: 1–8; Dan. 7: 14–18; Rev. 1: 5–7; 3: 21; 5: 10; 11: 15, 18,—all yet future and harmonizing with Rev. 20: 4–6. But the theory in question makes this blessed and holy reign begin at the conversion of the Pagan Roman Emperor (somewhere), and exist out of sight (somehow, subordinate to Roman prelacy), and (end nowhere in particular) long since!! The seeming object of the tempter in so subverting this portion of truth, is to amuse the imagination and lead to a forfeiture of the blessing pronounced on believing the word; and to secure the curse of the superadded plagues on those so misled. He that "loveth or maketh a lie"—he that adds to or takes from the words of this prophecy—incurs the most fearful damnation.—Rev. 22: 15, 19. Read also Rev. 1: 3; 3: 5; 13: 8; 14: 4–5.

5. The snare of the devil—the snare of death—in which the first happy pair was caught, was only his subtle denial of God's truth.—2 Tim. 2: 25, 26; Isa. 25: 7. All are so caught and held who pervert the words of wisdom from above.

6. God has pledged himself before angels and men to deal with those who rush on his predicted displeasure, as with other deniers of his truth. The truth lies in his words.—Rev. 20. Hence the devil is more than Pagan Rome. The dragon and the serpent's seed did not begin or end with Paganism in Rome; for "Cain was of that wicked one." Egypt, etc., was the dragon power, long ages ere the founder of Rome was born!

7. There is the highest occasion for faith in God—faith in his prophets. "It is for our life." The rule is; "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves" (to the plain word), that "they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil!" The snare holds all who engage in subverting "the words of this prophecy." There can be no compromise. Those who believe must believe "the words." The killing sin lies in explaining away "the words of God." So did the serpent. Lord, deliver us from his subtlety. Amen.

For the Crisis.

"Almost Thou Persuadest Me to be a Christian."

Paul once stood a prisoner at the bar of Festus, to make his defence touching those things whereof he was accused of the Jews. After relating his manner of life among his own nation at Jerusalem, and of his testimony both to the Greeks and Jews, of repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ; he submits himself to be judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our Fathers; for which hope's sake he was accused of the Jews. Festus, having patiently listened to Paul's powerful defence, and being impressed with the [illegible] of Christ's death and resurrection, and of repentance towards God as a necessity [illegible] est me to be a christian." Alas! it was almost.

Of how little value are those things now which once deterred Agrippa from embracing a despised gospel. Seventeen hundred years have rolled beneath the waves of oblivion since Agrippa was on the earth, and all his pleasure and his splendor are no more. The crown he wore exists no longer; the pomp of life has for many ages forsaken him; all for which he neglected eternal life is gone, gone forever.

Paul stood before him; but his bonds have vanished; he no longer endures the pain of these, for he has long since gone to slumber with the pale nations of the dead, to await his crown, which his Lord the righteous judge shall give him at that day; and not unto him only, but unto all those that love his appearing. With such a blessed hope as Paul had, his testimony should quicken our desires for eternal life. He declares he has kept back nothing profitable for us to know. He has not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God. Then how great will be our own condemnation, if we do not profit by all these blessed exhortations and prayerful entreaties of Christ and his apostles to accept of offered mercy.

Repentance towards God is the great prerequisite to attain eternal life. Christ's mission on earth was to teach repentance, and to save his people from their sins. In harmony with this (Acts 5: 31,) "him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." Again, (Acts 3: 19,) Peter commands them to "repent, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." It appears Peter knew no other way for sins to be blotted out, but by repentance and conversion. And while Peter was administering the word of life to the people on the day of Pentecost, he said unto them, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Christ also says, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

However much men may be disposed to cavil upon this passage, Christ's meaning was explicitly conveyed to them, that if they died in their sins, where Christ had gone they never could go. There was no formal exposition of doctrine, nor elaborate argument in Christ's teachings; but it was so simple, "a wayfaring man though a fool, need not err therein." And yet he spake as never man spake. These facts are corroborated in Christ's sermon on the mount: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day."

The glorious doctrine of the resurrection comes to us with all its soul-thrilling beauties. For when we are reminded of loved ones, who but a few days ago were with us in all their loveliness, but whose pallid lips are now still in death, while the turf above them has been clothed in summer's fairest verdure, and upon whose graves will fall the first of the autumnal leaves, and the tempest and storms of winter; we have felt, perhaps, as we have stood beside their graves, and watched the mellow sunset, as it danced in quivering flashes through the burnished leaves, that if Jesus died and rose again, then they also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; and those jewels will shine again in the everlasting kingdom of God.

To this divine, this indispensable employment, my unconverted friends, every motive calls you, which can reach the heart of virtue or wisdom. The terms on which the blessings of the gospel are offered, are of all terms the most reasonable. You are summoned to no sacrifice, but of sin, and shame, and wretchedness. No service is demanded of you, but service of gain and glory. "My son, give me thine heart," is the requisition which involves them all. Saints wait with fervent hope of renewing their joy over your repentance. The Father holds out the golden sceptre of forgiveness, that you may touch it and live. The Spirit of grace and truth descends with its benevolent influences, to allure and persuade you. While all things, and God at the head of all things, are thus kindly and solemnly employed to encourage you in the pursuit of this most inestimable good, will you forget that you are either to be saved or lost? Will you forget that the only time of salvation is the present; that [illegible] save you in his kingdom? We have every reason to believe that we are on the eve of a great moral revolution. The Angel of the Apocalypse, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell in the uttermost parts of the earth, is now on the wing; the splendid visions of prophecy are now embodying before our eyes; and from the altar of God a fire has been kindled, which, like the last conflagration, will continue to burn till the elements of corruption shall melt with fervent heat,—till every idol in the heathen world shall be consumed,—till the present system of things shall give place to the new heavens and the new earth,—till the celestial voice shall salute our ears,—"Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and he will be their God!"

O! you that have no hope of a glorious reign with Christ, I would say to you, there is an hour coming when one whisper of an approving Mind, one smile of an approving God, will be accounted of more value than a thousand worlds like this! In that hour nothing will sustain you but the consciousness of having been governed by worthy and holy principles. Give your heart to God, and he will be to you all might, all joy in life, all victory in death, all immortality in the resurrection.

"The Union Movement."

"A dialogue, showing the only possible ground for the union of all the children of God."—By Eld. Benjamin Franklin.—Published by H. S. Bosworth, Corner of Eighth and Walnut streets, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The following dialogue was originally published in the Christian Age, and subsequently, in compliance with many requests, in a tract form, from which we make the following extracts, which we hope all will read and consider candidly, receiving much profit by the perusal. It will be continued in several papers.

A MEETING OF THE LAY-MEMBERS OF THE VARIOUS CHURCHES OF THE TOWN OF UNITY, ON DEC. 3, 1858.

CHAPTER I.

The meeting was called to order by appointing brother A., chairman, and brother B., secretary.

The chairman arose and stated the object of the meeting, as follows:

DEAR BRETHREN: Being called to the chair, it becomes my duty to make a brief statement of the objects of our meeting. This duty I shall proceed to discharge, though not without some embarrassment, as I am no public man. Many of us have lamented for years, the divided state of Christian society in our town and vicinity. We have, for many years prayed for the union of all the children of God. We have, in our private conversations, most solemnly deplored divisions among those who love Jesus. Our blessed Lord, just before he suffered, prayed for the union of those who should believe on him, or that they "might be one;" and we are commanded in Scripture to "be perfectly joined together, in the same mind and in the same judgment, and that there be no divisions among us." In our present state, these Scriptures are wholly disregarded. On last Sabbath, our preacher said he considered it a wise providence of God that we are thus divided, I could not think he had the spirit of Christ in this. I never did believe that division was right.

Other things of the same kind are occurring every week, and I am greatly distressed on account of them. In conversation with others, I found them in a similar state of mind. The objects of the meeting are, to determine the cause of this state of things, and what is to be done. I hope, therefore, brethren, you will express your minds freely. We have come to a crisis.

Brother C. arose and said;

Brother Chairman:—I feel the importance of the remarks you have just made; and, though no speaker, I consider it my duty, at this crisis, to give utterance to a few words. I am in much trouble on account of our divided state; and I am more convinced of the sinfulness of divisions among Christians than ever before. I am suffering much on account of this evil, more, perhaps, than you know of. My wife, with whom I have lived twenty years as a Christian, in the utmost peace and harmony, has lately been immersed and united with the Baptists. Being, myself, a Methodist, I can not now, according to the rules of the Baptist Church, commune with my own wife, either in her church, or my own. This appears to me to be entirely unlike the spirit of Christ—that the husband and wife, [illegible] should be [illegible] from [illegible] the Lord's table. [illegible] of division, in having so many churches [illegible] I would that I had never heard of but one church. What is the cause of this evil? Can not wise men devise some means to avoid it? Our preacher says we are all agreed on the great fundamentals of religion, and that the matters upon which we are divided are not essential. If this is the case, why not let every man have his own opinion on those things not essential, and not make a bar of fellowship of them? If we are only divided upon things not essential, but one in essentials, I am in favor of uniting upon the essentials, upon which we are all agreed, and let every man think as he pleases upon the non-essentials.

Brother D., a Baptist, rose and said;

Brother Chairman:—I must say with the brother who has just spoken, that being only a private member, I feel some embarrassment in attempting to make a speech; but the preachers all say we have the right of "private judgment;" and I would add, that I think we have the right to express our judgment: at all events, I venture to give utterance to my own convictions on the subject in hand. I always, ever since I knew the love of Christ, have felt distressed on account of divisions among Christians; but, I have never felt the matter so fully nor seen the evils of it so clearly, as I have been brought to see them since one of our daughters joined the Presbyterian church, and another joined the Episcopal church. Since then, George, my son, has become a Universalist, and my son Thomas, who, I had hoped would one day make a minister, says that we have so many different ways and so little love and fellowship among us, that he don't believe in any religion. In the place of any religious enjoyment, it appears to me that my gray hairs will be brought down with sorrow to the grave. What is the cause of all this division? Must we continue in such a state? Can anything be done? As the brother remarked, I have frequently heard the preachers say that we are all one in the fundamental principles of the Gospel, and that we only differ upon matters not essential. Then why can not we unite? Are we not all willing? Surety we are; and there is no reason why we are not united, only that the preachers dispute upon non-essentials and keep us separated. In my estimation, there is one essential we have not got. I believe that union among the children of God is essential—essential to our domestic and social happiness, to our christian enjoyment, the conversion of the world, and the approbation of our heavenly Father. Without it, the great object of the christian religion is lost. And I believe that our preachers, could, if they would, unite upon the fundamentals, upon which we are all one in sentiment, and make all non-essentials matters of forbearance; and we ought to require them to do it.

Brother E., a Presbyterian, rose and said:

Brother Chairman:—If I were only a public speaker, I would like to speak of the evil under consideration. I had a thought or two arranged, but the remarks of the brethren have opened such a field, that I despair of going over it. I always regarded division among christians as an evil: but I did not realize what a great evil it was. My wife, you are aware, was a member of the Methodist church when I married her. I supposed that we would soon agree upon religion, as we did upon everything else; but in this I found myself mistaken. Every time the subject of religion came up, we fell into argument and disagreement; not upon our views of the Scriptures, but the comparative merits of our creeds, ministers and churches, which resulted in no very pleasant feelings, and I feared would destroy our domestic happiness. To avoid this, we in some way came to a mutual understanding that each should go to his or her own church, and say nothing about it, not so much as to mention any item of news of prosperity or adversity. I am satisfied that if the preachers of our respective churches saw the evils of these things as we do, and desired to avoid them, they would find ground for union, and unite before another month; and I believe they should be required to do so.

Brother F., a Christian, rose and said:

Brethren:—I have long deplored the evils of which you have spoken. They are not imaginary evils; nor are your own experiences isolated cases, such as might be considered exceptions to general rules, or such as rarely occur; but if the members of churches in every neighborhood would meet, as we have done, and state their condition, their statements would be similar [illegible] years. [illegible] though [illegible] growing [illegible] In our town we have a population of [illegible] $600 a year each. [illegible] people, is for the Lord. [illegible] ter worse, these six preachers spend [illegible] two-thirds of their time in defending [illegible] they themselves admit to be their [illegible] peculiarities, but not essential, and opposing each other. In this way their time is spent, and our money, given in the Lord's [illegible] and in the place of the Lord's [illegible] built up by these partisan [illegible] bars of division are made more [illegible] and infidelity is spreading all over the land. In this state of things we can never convert the world, nor have any real christian enjoyment and peace in our families, as is our privilege under the peaceful reign of Christ. Can we, or shall we endure it any longer? I, for one, think we are imposed upon; the cause is imposed upon; and the Lord is disgraced by his professed friends. What shall we do in this state of things? I consider that what we freely give, and we ought to give, for the furtherance of the Lord's cause, is squandered, and our energies are trifled with, and that we are not accomplishing the great mission of the Church.

Brother G. said:

Mr. Chairman:—I am no speaker, but I fully concur in what has been said, and rise not to make a speech, but to offer a resolution. The main practical point has not been reached, and it is now almost time to adjourn; I therefore offer the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, Division among christians is ranked among the works of the flesh, by Paul, and forbidden; and our Lord prayed that his people might be one, that the world might believe; and, whereas, we have found from our own experience that division destroys domestic happiness, christian peace and fellowship among the members of the same family, squanders our funds in the erection of six times as many meeting-houses as we need, and the support of six times as many preachers, who waste their time and talents in opposing each other, and making bars of fellowship of non-essentials, thus strengthening the hands of infidelity; and, whereas, we do not consider ourselves bound by the law of Christ to submit to a ministry that either can not or will not determine the Scriptural ground for the union of all the people of God, and unite upon it: therefore,

Resolved, That after the first day of January, 1859, we will not contribute one farthing to the support of our respective ministers, till they determine the scriptural basis of christian union, that they may unite upon it themselves, and ourselves with them; after which, we will support one of their number as our pastor, and send the other five to preach christian union, so far as they are able, to all the children of God throughout the world, and sell the five surplus meeting-houses, and appropriate the proceeds to the support of our poor brethren.

When this resolution was read, the house rang with Question! Question! Question! The question was put, and unanimously carried.

Brother B. arose and offered the following, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we meet three times a week, from this time to January 1st, 1859, and unite our most fervent prayers to Almighty God, that our preaching brethren may speedily find the scriptural basis for christian union; and when found, that they, with ourselves, may have so much of the spirit of Christ, as to unite upon it.

Adjourned. Prayer by brother A.

The Great Test.

In the 25th chapter of Matthew we have presented to us a [illegible] final judgment: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him," [illegible] grand outlines of [illegible] [illegible] of its nature. The grounds upon which the decision of condemnation is [illegible] expressed [illegible] ed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels [illegible] thirsty, and ye gave me no drink [illegible] stranger and ye took me not in [illegible] and ye clothed me not [illegible] and ye visited me not. The World's Crisis

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

For the Crisis.

To Helen M. Johnson.

O, sister, take those cheerful notes
That thou hast sweetly sung,
And by them cheer thy drooping soul,
Strengthen thy faltering tongue.
Take comfort, dearest sister,
While treading life's dark vale,
Look up for consolation,
Let not thy courage fail.

Remember, Jesus feels for thee
The keenest mortal pain,
And will remember every tear,
Nor will they be in vain.
For every ill must work for good
To those who really are
The children of Jehovah,
Dear objects of his care.

Then look up from thy pillow,
Where now thy head is laid,
While thinking of you willow,
Helen, be not dismayed,
For angels will protect thee
From every passing ill,
And wait to waft thee homeward
To Zion's holy hill.

O cheer thee, for the morning
Will soon in splendor dawn;
Then all life's pains and sorrows
Will be forever gone,
And thou shalt bloom in beauty
Through an eternal day,
And wear a crown of glory
That ne'er shall fade away.

"The Kingdom of Men."—Its Origin and End.

The two Seeds.—The Serpent and the Devil the same through all Scripture.

The kingdom of men is the kingdom administered by man in his fallen state. Had the first dominion in Eden remained, there would have been none but "the kingdom of God"—administered by those standing in his counsel, enjoying his guidance, and accomplishing his holy will. The kingdom of men had its origin in apostasy from God; and it will end by the re-establishment or organization of "the kingdom of heaven on the earth."

The holy seed—the good seed—the seed of the blessed of the Lord, is contrasted with the seed of the wicked—the seed of evil doers—to be cut off.—Isa. 6: 13; 14: 20; 65: 23; Ps. 37: 28; Matt. 13: 37-38. Their origin is analogous to the two rival kingdoms. The evil is of the wicked one—the good is of God,—it is to overcome the evil,—fill the whole earth and stand forever!—Dan. 2.

The devil is a liar from the beginning.—John 8: 44. The serpent beguiled Eve by his subtlety.—2 Cor. 11: 3. Thus the serpent and the devil were both actors in the temptation and apostasy of man. The first is "the father of lies;" the other added his "subtlety" to secure its success. The father lie was, that God's word was not true without an interpretation,—"ye shall not surely die!" The great Teacher and his apostles take up the precise words and ideas of the Old Testament; but give them a fuller and more distinctive expression,—with the doom of the devil—the old serpent. The serpent's subtlety is thus identified with the devil in his murderous but temporary triumph—from the beginning; and both names go together to the bottomless pit. Note a few points.

I. The tares are from seed sown by the enemy, the devil.—Matt. 13: 39. They represent the posterity of fallen man, after he came under the serpent's charm with the devil's lie. Fallen creatures begat children in their own likeness, in their own mental, moral and physical condition. Cain was (murderous) of that wicked one.—1 John 3: 12. In this there is no contradiction to observation and experience. The Irish and Indians, the Hottentots and Hindoos, the English and the Esquimaux, with all classes and gradations of being, begat their own likeness. Apparent exceptions may be found; but still they will be so found as to confirm the truth of God and the actual experience of all mankind,—"whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." They succumbed to mere [illegible] —the serpent's subtlety—and begat a [illegible] serpent's seed—a generation of vipers.—Matt. 23: 33; Gen. 3: 15; Rom. 3: 12-18. In contrast, Abraham, Elkanah, and others who believed and obeyed God, were honored with an holy seed—the children of promise.

II. The apostasy from God—the serpent's seed—would have been universal but for the word of promise that secured the children—the heirs—of the kingdom of God. These two seeds are in ceaseless collision. Enmity is their expressed and actual antagonism.—Gen. 3: 15. The great mass are only "born after the flesh." Such take sides with sense and sin. Their wisdom ignores God. It is the wisdom of the serpent when instigated by the devil. He is the prince—the god of this world. The kingdom of men is his, in all its power and glory.—Luke 4: 5-7. But the holy seed has been maintained, in spite of satan's enmity, and that of all his seed. Abraham was alone, as it were, (like Abel, Enoch and Noah, in their time) the friend of God; while Nimrod and his host of idolaters ruled the world of the ungodly. Israel—the fewest of the nations—stood for the woman's seed; but Egypt, Assyria, and an idolatrous race ever since, have been their mortal foes. The called in Christ, under the gospel, "know that they are of God, and that the whole world lieth in the wicked one."—1 John 5: 19. (The same word, "wicked one," occurs four times. Chap. 2: 13, 14; 3: 12; 5: 18.) Our Lord says to his disciples; "Ye are not of the world"—your politics (conversation) are heavenly.—John 17: 16; Phil. 3: 20. But the prevailing politics and religion of earth are embodied in the beast and Babylon—the man of sin and mother of harlots. This state of things demands judgment. The evil seed will thus be brought to an end, but the godly will be installed in the kingdom. Those who are begotten again, by the immortal seed, the word of God, are with Christ the heirs and the rulers elect over all the earth. They are to take the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven."—Dan. 7: 18 and 27; Matt. 13: 43; 25: 34; 1 Cor. 6: 2, 3; Rev. 1: 5-7; 3: 21; 5: 10; 20: 4-6. These Scriptures admit of no diverse reading. We believe them, and are justified, or disbelieve, and are condemned to be cast out, as was Adam from Eden. This change in the administration of the kingdom will begin at the judgment trump.—Rev. 11: 15-18. Then the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's. He and his saints immortal will then "reign a thousand years," and thence on through "the age of ages."

III. The harmony of Holy Scripture as to this vital and all-pervading truth is thus made apparent. The first words that were employed to denote the tempter and his subtle agent are also the last! In Hebrew, Greek and English, they are the same. "The serpent" occurs five times.—Gen. 3: 1-13. This is the very term five times in the New Testament.—2 Cor. 11: 3; Rev. 12: 9, 14, 15; 20: 2. "The devil" is the liar back of "the serpent" in the beginning.—John 8: 44; Gen. 3: 3. So he is "the old serpent, the devil," at the ending of this world. "The dragon" is used fourteen times in the Old Testament; and in the plural sixteen times more—thirty times. In the New it occurs eleven times. "The dragon shalt thou (the promised seed) trample under feet."—Ps. 91: 13. The serpent's head shall be bruised, as it was announced "from the beginning." So our Lord "saw satan fall as lightning from heaven." By him "the devil and death" are to be destroyed; hence the dragon, the old serpent, the devil and satan are used to express to us "the wicked one."—Heb. 2: 14; 1 John 3: 8; Rev. 20: 2; Gen. 3: 1-15. The enmity from the beginning is apparent all through every dispensation to the final close. "The dragon—the serpent—was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of the woman's seed who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."—Rev. 12: 17.

IV. The dragon denoted the crocodile of Egypt.—Ps. 74: 13; Ezek. 29: 3; 32: 2; see margin. The king of Egypt is so designated. A crocodile or dragon represents Egypt on ancient coins. Thus, as this dragon power oppressed Israel, it became the proper name of satan's dominion in and by the serpent's seed; and hence we find that, ages after, Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon—as a dragon—had swallowed up Judah.—Jer. 51: 34. The dragon is the same as the serpent.—Isa. 27: 1. All which, with other considerations, show us plainly that these terms denote the [illegible] power organized under "the wicked one," as it goes to the judgment. These [illegible] "dragon, serpent," designate the adversary, as he shall be brought to judgment [illegible] Thus these [illegible] Rev. 20, which shows that [illegible] the word of God on this important theme. Much matter must be waved.—Ezek. 28.

Remarks. 1. It is presumption to say, against all this wide range of unerring truth, that the old serpent, the dragon—the devil—is Pagan Rome. Was Pagan Rome in Eden? Was it the Egyptian Pharaoh? Was it to be the subject of divine judgment at the resurrection of the just, as set forth in Isaiah; when, according to the theory, it went to the abyss about fifteen hundred years ago?

2. The symbols of Revelation do not obscure or alter the proper names and usual epithets of the other and foregoing Scriptures. God and Jesus, heaven and earth, new and old, saints and salvation, repentance and faith, beast and Babylon, are used in this book as elsewhere, by consequence the terms in question are also. "The darkness is in themselves," said Dr. S. H. Cox.

3. Those who restrict these terms in Rev. 20 to Pagan Rome, are so far with the Papists. They make the millennium to belong only to the Popedom!! The whole of prophecy places the Papal apostasy there and then. Is Christ's blessed reign to be so confounded with the Pope's? Did Christ's resurrected saints (ver. 4-6) reign in conjunction with the red-capped cardinals of Rome, when all history records the martyrdom of these very saints at the hands of Roman prelates and princes? God forbid this folly!

4. This erring application of Rev. 20: 1-8, involves more than a denial of the general tenor of holy Scripture, because it falsifies the plainest assertions of this book: it makes the reign of Christ—one thousand years—end before it can have begun! The reign of Christ with his saints begins at the seventh, the last, the resurrection trump.—1 Cor. 15: 50, 51; Matt. 24: 31; 1 Thess. 4: 16-18; 2 Tim. 4: 1-8; Dan. 7: 14-18; Rev. 1: 5-7; 3: 21; 5: 10; 11: 15, 18,—all yet future and harmonizing with Rev. 20: 4-6. But the theory in question makes this blessed and holy reign begin at the conversion of the Pagan Roman Emperor (somewhere), and exist out of sight (somehow, subordinate to Roman prelacy), and (end nowhere in particular) long since!! The seeming object of the tempter in so subverting this portion of truth, is to amuse the imagination and lead to a forfeiture of the blessing pronounced on believing the word; and to secure the curse of the superadded plagues on those so misled. He that "loveth or maketh a lie"—he that adds to or takes from the words of this prophecy—incurs the most fearful damnation.—Rev. 22: 15, 19. Read also Rev. 1: 3; 3: 5; 13: 8; 14: 4-5.

5. The snare of the devil—the snare of death—in which the first happy pair was caught, was only his subtle denial of God's truth.—2 Tim. 2: 25, 26; Isa. 25: 7. All are so caught and held who pervert the words of wisdom from above.

6. God has pledged himself before angels and men to deal with those who rush on his predicted displeasure, as with other deniers of his truth. The truth lies in his words.—Rev. 20. Hence the devil is more than Pagan Rome. The dragon and the serpent's seed did not begin or end with Paganism in Rome; for "Cain was of that wicked one." Egypt, etc., was the dragon power, long ages ere the founder of Rome was born!

7. There is the highest occasion for faith in God—faith in his prophets. "It is for our life." The rule is; "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves" (to the plain word), that "they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil!" The snare holds all who engage in subverting "the words of this prophecy." There can be no compromise. Those who believe must believe "the words." The killing sin lies in explaining away "the words of God." So did the serpent. Lord, deliver us from his subtlety. Amen.

For the Crisis.

"Almost Thou Persuadest Me to be a Christian."

Paul once stood a prisoner at the bar of Festus, to make his defence touching those things whereof he was accused of the Jews. After relating his manner of life among his own nation at Jerusalem, and of his testimony both to the Greeks and Jews, of repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ; he submits himself to be judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our Fathers; for which hope's sake he was accused of the Jews. Festus, having patiently listened to Paul's powerful defence, and being impressed with the facts of Christ's death and resurrection, and of repentance towards God as a necessity, he was constrained to exclaim in the [illegible] of his heart, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian." Alas! it was almost.

Of how little value are those things now which once deterred Agrippa from embracing a despised gospel. Seventeen hundred years have rolled beneath the waves of oblivion since Agrippa was on the earth, and all his pleasure and his splendor are no more. The crown he wore exists no longer; the pomp of life has for many ages forsaken him; all for which he neglected eternal life is gone, gone forever.

Paul stood before him; but his bonds have vanished; he no longer endures the pain of these, for he has long since gone to slumber with the pale nations of the dead, to await his crown, which his Lord the righteous judge shall give him at that day; and not unto him only, but unto all those that love his appearing. With such a blessed hope as Paul had, his testimony should quicken our desires for eternal life. He declares he has kept back nothing profitable for us to know. He has not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God. Then how great will be our own condemnation, if we do not profit by all these blessed exhortations and prayerful entreaties of Christ and his apostles to accept of offered mercy.

Repentance towards God is the great prerequisite to attain eternal life. Christ's mission on earth was to teach repentance, and to save his people from their sins. In harmony with this (Acts 5: 31,) "him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." Again, (Acts 3: 19,) Peter commands them to "repent, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." It appears Peter knew no other way for sins to be blotted out, but by repentance and conversion. And while Peter was administering the word of life to the people on the day of Pentecost, he said unto them, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Christ also says, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

However much men may be disposed to cavil upon this passage, Christ's meaning was explicitly conveyed to them, that if they died in their sins, where Christ had gone they never could go. There was no formal exposition of doctrine, nor elaborate argument in Christ's teachings; but it was so simple, "a wayfaring man though a fool, need not err therein." And yet he spake as never man spake. These facts are corroborated in Christ's sermon on the mount. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

The glorious doctrine of the resurrection comes to us with all its soul-thrilling beauties. For when we are reminded of loved ones, who but a few days ago were with us in all their loveliness, but whose pallid lips are now still in death, while the turf above them has been clothed in summer's fairest verdure, and upon whose graves will fall the first of the autumnal leaves, and the tempest and storms of winter; we have felt, perhaps, as we have stood beside their graves, and watched the mellow sunset, as it danced in quivering flashes through the burnished leaves, that if Jesus died and rose again, then they also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; and those jewels will shine again in the everlasting kingdom of God.

To this divine, this indispensable employment, my unconverted friends, every motive calls you, which can reach the heart of virtue or wisdom. The terms on which the blessings of the gospel are offered, are of all terms the most reasonable. You are summoned to no sacrifice, but of sin, and shame, and wretchedness. No service is demanded of you, but service of gain and glory. "My son, give me thine heart," is the requisition which involves them all. Saints wait with fervent hope of renewing their joy over your repentance. The Father holds out the golden sceptre of forgiveness, that you may touch it and live. The Spirit of grace and truth descends with its benevolent influence, to allure and persuade you. While all things, and God at the head of all things, are thus kindly and solemnly employed to encourage you in the pursuit of this most inestimable good, will you forget that you are either to be saved or lost? Will you forget that the only time of salvation is the present; that beyond the grave there is no gospel to be [illegible] that there is no offer of life [illegible] that the Holiest will [illegible] [illegible] and not forgiving [illegible] save you in his kingdom? We have every reason to believe that we are on the eve of a great moral revolution. The Angel of the Apocalypse, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell in the uttermost parts of the earth, is now on the wing; the splendid visions of prophecy are now embodying before our eyes; and from the altar of God a fire has been kindled, which, like the last conflagration, will continue to burn till the elements of corruption shall melt with fervent heat,—till every idol in the heathen world shall be consumed,—till the present system of things shall give place to the new heavens and the new earth,—till the celestial voice shall salute our ears,—"Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and he will be their God!"

O! you that have no hope of a glorious reign with Christ, I would say to you, there is an hour coming when one whisper of an approving Mind, one smile of an approving God, will be accounted of more value than a thousand worlds like this! In that hour nothing will sustain you but the consciousness of having been governed by worthy and holy principles. Give your heart to God, and he will be to you all might, all joy in life, all victory in death, all immortality in the resurrection.

"The Union Movement:"

"A dialogue, showing the only possible ground for the union of all the children of God."—By Eld. Benjamin Franklin.—Published by H. S. Bosworth, Corner of Eighth and Walnut streets, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The following dialogue was originally published in the Christian Age, and subsequently, in compliance with many requests, in a tract form, from which we make the following extracts, which we hope all will read and consider candidly, receiving much profit by the perusal. It will be continued in several papers.

A MEETING OF THE LAY-MEMBERS OF THE VARIOUS CHURCHES OF THE TOWN OF UNITY, ON DEC. 3, 1858.

CHAPTER I.

The meeting was called to order by appointing brother A., chairman, and brother B., secretary.

The chairman arose and stated the object of the meeting, as follows:

DEAR BRETHREN: Being called to the chair, it becomes my duty to make a brief statement of the objects of our meeting. This duty I shall proceed to discharge, though not without some embarrassment, as I am no public man. Many of us have lamented for years, the divided state of Christian society in our town and vicinity. We have, for many years prayed for the union of all the children of God. We have, in our private conversations, most solemnly deplored divisions among those who love Jesus. Our blessed Lord, just before he suffered, prayed for the union of those who should believe on him, or that they "might be one," and we are commanded in Scripture to "be perfectly joined together, in the same mind and in the same judgment, and that there be no divisions among us." In our present state, these Scriptures are wholly disregarded. On last Sabbath, our preacher said he considered it a wise providence of God that we are thus divided. I could not think he had the spirit of Christ in this. I never did believe that division was right.

Other things of the same kind are occurring every week, and I am greatly distressed on account of them. In conversation with others, I found them in a similar state of mind. The objects of the meeting are, to determine the cause of this state of things, and what is to be done. I hope, therefore, brethren, you will express your minds freely. We have come to a crisis.

Brother C. arose and said:

Brother Chairman:—I feel the importance of the remarks you have just made, and, though no speaker, I consider it my duty, at this crisis, to give utterance to a few words. I am in much trouble on account of our divided state; and I am more convinced of the sinfulness of divisions among Christians than ever before. I am suffering much on account of this evil; more, perhaps, than you know of. My wife, with whom I have lived twenty years as a Christian, in the utmost peace and harmony, has lately been immersed and united with the Baptists. Being myself a Methodist, I can not now, according to the rules of the Baptist Church, commune with my own wife, either in her church or my own. This appears to me to be entirely unlike the spirit of Christ—that the husband and wife, both Christians, should be debarred from sitting together at the Lord's table. There [illegible] a spirit of disunion, in having so many churches. I would that I had never heard of but one church. What is the cause of this evil? Can not wise men devise some means to avoid it? Our preacher says we are all agreed on the great fundamentals of religion, and that the matters upon which we are divided are not essential. If this is the case, why not let every man have his own opinion on those things not essential, and not make a bar of fellowship of them? If we are only divided upon things not essential, but one in essentials, I am in favor of uniting upon the essentials, upon which we are all agreed, and let every man think as he pleases upon the non-essentials.

Brother D., a Baptist, rose and said:

Brother Chairman:—I must say with the brother who has just spoken, that being only a private member, I feel some embarrassment in attempting to make a speech; but the preachers all say we have the right of "private judgment;" and I would add, that I think we have the right to express our judgment: at all events, I venture to give utterance to my own convictions on the subject in hand. I always, ever since I knew the love of Christ, have felt distressed on account of divisions among Christians; but, I have never felt the matter so fully nor seen the evils of it so clearly, as I have been brought to see them since one of our daughters joined the Presbyterian church, and another joined the Episcopal church. Since then, George, my son, has become a Universalist, and my son Thomas, who, I had hoped would one day make a minister, says that we have so many different ways and so little love and fellowship among us, that he don't believe in any religion. In the place of any religious enjoyment, it appears to me that my gray hairs will be brought down with sorrow to the grave. What is the cause of all this division? Must we continue in such a state? Can anything be done? As the brother remarked, I have frequently heard the preachers say that we are all one in the fundamental principles of the Gospel, and that we only differ upon matters not essential. Then why can not we unite? Are we not all willing? Surety we are, and there is no reason why we are not united, only that the preachers dispute upon non-essentials and keep us separated. In my estimation, there is one essential we have not got. I believe that union among the children of God is essential—essential to our domestic and social happiness, to our christian enjoyment, the conversion of the world, and the approbation of our heavenly Father. Without it, the great object of the christian religion is lost. And I believe that our preachers, could, if they would, unite upon the fundamentals, upon which we are all one in sentiment, and make all non-essentials matters of forbearance, and we ought to require them to do it.

Brother E., a Presbyterian, rose and said:

Brother Chairman:—If I were only a public speaker, I would like to speak of the evil under consideration. I had a thought or two arranged, but the remarks of the brethren have opened such a field, that I despair of going over it. I always regarded division among christians as an evil; but I did not realize what a great evil it was. My wife, you are aware, was a member of the Methodist church when I married her. I supposed that we would soon agree upon religion, as we did upon everything else; but in this I found myself mistaken. Every time the subject of religion came up, we fell into argument and disagreement; not upon our views of the Scriptures, but the comparative merits of our creeds, ministers and churches, which resulted in no very pleasant feelings, and I feared would destroy our domestic happiness. To avoid this, we in some way came to a mutual understanding that each should go to his or her own church, and say nothing about it, not so much as to mention any item of news of prosperity or adversity. I am satisfied that if the preachers of our respective churches saw the evils of these things as we do, and desired to avoid them, they would find ground for union, and unite before another month; and I believe they should be required to do so.

Brother F., a Christian, rose and said:

Brethren:—I have long deplored the evils of which you have spoken. They are not imaginary evils; nor are your own experiences isolated cases, such as might be considered exceptions to general rules, or such as rarely occur; but if the members of churches in every neighborhood would meet, as we have done, and state their condition, their statements would be similar to yours. But the evils you have mentioned, though bad, are not a tithe of the evils growing out of divisions [illegible] In our town we have a population of [illegible] one thousand. Among us we have collected of the people's money, under the plea that it was for the Lord, sufficient to build six houses for worship. We are then paying to support six preachers, say at $600 a year each. This, too, [illegible] people, is for the Lord. To make the matter worse, these six preachers spend [illegible] two-thirds of their time in defending, what they themselves admit to be their unessential peculiarities, but not essential, and opposing each other. In this way their time is spent, and our money, given in the Lord's [illegible] and in the place of the Lord's [illegible] built up by these partisan operations, these bars of division are made more [illegible] and infidelity is spreading all over the land. In this state of things we can never convert the world, nor have any real christian enjoyment and peace in our families, as is our privilege under the peaceful reign of Christ. Can we, or shall we endure it any longer? I, for one, think we are imposed upon; the cause is imposed upon; and the Lord is disgraced by his professed friends. What shall we do in this state of things? I consider that what we freely give, and we ought to give, for the furtherance of the Lord's cause, is squandered, and our energies are trifled with, and that we are not accomplishing the great mission of the Church.

Brother G. said:

Mr. Chairman:—I am no speaker, but I fully concur in what has been said, and rise not to make a speech, but to offer a resolution. The main practical point has not been reached, and it is now almost time to adjourn; I therefore offer the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, Division among christians is ranked among the works of the flesh, by Paul, and forbidden; and our Lord prayed that his people might be one, that the world might believe; and, whereas, we have found from our own experience that division destroys domestic happiness, christian peace and fellowship among the members of the same family, squanders our funds in the erection of six times as many meeting-houses as we need, and the support of six times as many preachers, who waste their time and talents in opposing each other, and making bars of fellowship of non-essentials, thus strengthening the hands of infidelity; and, whereas, we do not consider ourselves bound by the law of Christ to submit to a ministry that either can not or will not determine the Scriptural ground for the union of all the people of God, and unite upon it: therefore,

Resolved, That after the first day of January, 1859, we will not contribute one farthing to the support of our respective ministers, till they determine the scriptural basis of christian union, that they may unite upon it themselves, and ourselves with them; after which, we will support one of their number as our pastor, and send the other five to preach christian union as far as they are able, to all the children of God throughout the world, and sell the five surplus meeting-houses and appropriate the proceeds to the support of our poor brethren.

When this resolution was read, the house rang with Question! Question! Question! The question was put, and unanimously carried.

Brother B. arose and offered the following, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we meet three times a week, from this time to January 1st, 1859, and unite our most fervent prayers to Almighty God, that our preaching brethren may speedily find the scriptural basis for christian union, and when found, that they, with ourselves, may have so much of the spirit of Christ, as to unite upon it.

Adjourned. Prayer by brother A.

To Helen M. Johnson.

O, sister, take those cheerful notes
That thou hast sweetly sung,
And by them cheer thy drooping soul,
Strengthen thy stam'ring tongue.
Take comfort, dearest sister,
While treading life's dark vale,
Look up for consolation,
Let not thy courage fail.

Remember, Jesus feels for thee
The keenest mortal pain,
And will remember every tear,
Nor will they be in vain.
For every ill must work for good
To those who really are
The children of Jehovah,
Dear objects of his care.

Then look up from thy pillow,
Where now thy head is laid,
While thinking of you willow,
Helen, be not dismayed.
For angels will protect thee
From every passing ill,
And wait to waft thee homeward
To Zion's holy hill.

O cheer thee, for the morning
Will soon in splendor dawn;
Then all life's pains and sorrows
Will be forever gone;
And thou shalt bloom in beauty
Through an eternal day,
And wear a crown of glory
That ne'er shall fade away.

"The Kingdom of Men."—Its Origin and End.

The two Seeds.—The Serpent and the Devil the same through all Scripture.

The kingdom of men is the kingdom administered by man in his fallen state. Had the first dominion in Eden remained, there would have been none but "the kingdom of God"—administered by those standing in his counsel, enjoying his guidance, and accomplishing his holy will. The kingdom of men had its origin in apostasy from God; and it will end by the re-establishment or organization of "the kingdom of heaven on the earth."

The holy seed—the good seed—the seed of the blessed of the Lord, is contrasted with the seed of the wicked—the seed of evil doers—to be cut off.—Isa. 6: 13; 14: 20; 65: 23; Ps. 37: 28; Matt. 13: 37–38. Their origin is analogous to the two rival kingdoms. The evil is of the wicked one—the good is of God,—it is to overcome the evil,—fill the whole earth and stand forever!—Dan. 2.

The devil is a liar from the beginning.—John 8: 44. The serpent beguiled Eve by his subtlety.—2 Cor. 11: 3. Thus the serpent and the devil were both actors in the temptation and apostasy of man. The first is "the father of lies;" the other added his "subtlety" to secure its success. The father lie was, that God's word was not true without an interpretation—"ye shall not surely die!" The great Teacher and his apostles take up the precise words and ideas of the Old Testament; but give them a fuller and more distinctive expression,—with the doom of the devil—the old serpent. The serpent's subtlety is thus identified with the devil in his murderous but temporary triumph—from the beginning; and both names go together to the bottomless pit. Note a few points.

I. The tares are from seed sown by the enemy, the devil.—Matt. 13: 39. They represent the posterity of fallen man, after he came under the serpent's charm with the devil's lie. Fallen creatures begat children in their own likeness, in their own mental, moral and physical condition. Cain was (murderous) of that wicked one.—1 John 3: 12. In this there is no contradiction to observation and experience. The Irish and Indians, the Hottentots and Hindoos, the English and the Esquimaux, with all classes and gradations of being, beget their own likeness [illegible] serpent's seed—a generation of vipers.—Matt. 23: 33; Gen. 3: 15; Rom. 3: 12–18. In contrast, Abraham, Elkanah, and others who believed and obeyed God, were honored with an holy seed—the children of promise.

II. The apostasy from God—the serpent's seed—would have been universal but for the word of promise that secured the children—the heirs—of the kingdom of God. These two seeds are in ceaseless collision. Enmity is their expressed and actual antagonism.—Gen. 3: 15. The great mass are only "born after the flesh." Such take sides with sense and sin. Their wisdom ignores God. It is the wisdom of the serpent when instigated by the devil. He is the prince—the god of this world. The kingdom of men is his, in all its power and glory.—Luke 4: 5–7. But the holy seed has been maintained, in spite of satan's enmity, and that of all his seed. Abraham was alone, as it were, (like Abel, Enoch and Noah, in their time) the friend of God; while Nimrod and his host of idolaters ruled the world of the ungodly. Israel—the fewest of the nations—stood for the woman's seed; but Egypt, Assyria, and an idolatrous race ever since, have been their mortal foes. The called in Christ, under the gospel, "know that they are of God, and that the whole world lieth in the wicked one."—1 John 5: 19. (The same word, "wicked one," occurs four times. Chap. 2: 13, 14; 3: 12; 5: 18.) Our Lord says to his disciples; "Ye are not of the world"—your politics (conversation) are heavenly.—John 17: 16; Phil. 3: 20. But the prevailing politics and religion of earth are embodied in the beast and Babylon—the man of sin and mother of harlots. This state of things demands judgment. The evil seed will thus be brought to an end; but the godly will be installed in the kingdom. Those who are begotten again by the immortal seed, the word of God, are with Christ the heirs and the rulers elect over all the earth. They are to take the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven."—Dan. 7: 18 and 27; Matt. 13: 43, 25: 34; 1 Cor. 6: 2, 3; Rev. 1: 5–7; 3: 21; 5: 10; 20: 4–6. These Scriptures admit of no diverse reading. We believe them, and are justified, or disbelieve, and are condemned to be cast out; as was Adam from Eden. This change in the administration of the kingdom will begin at the judgment trump.—Rev. 11: 15–18. Then the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's. He and his saints immortal will then "reign a thousand years," and thence on through "the age of ages."

III. The harmony of Holy Scripture as to this vital and all-pervading truth is thus made apparent. The first words that were employed to denote the tempter and his subtle agent are also the last! In Hebrew, Greek and English, they are the same. "The serpent" occurs five times.—Gen. 3: 1–13. This is the very term five times in the New Testament.—2 Cor. 11: 3; Rev. 12: 9, 14, 15; 20: 2. "The devil" is the liar back of "the serpent" in the beginning.—John 8: 44, Gen. 3: 3. So he is "the old serpent, the devil," at the ending of this world. "The dragon" is used fourteen times in the Old Testament; and in the plural sixteen times more—thirty times. In the New it occurs eleven times. "The dragon shalt thou (the promised seed) trample under feet."—Ps. 91: 13. The serpent's head shall be bruised, as it was announced "from the beginning." So our Lord "saw satan fall as lightning from heaven." By him "the devil and death" are to be destroyed; hence the dragon, the old serpent, the devil and satan are used to express to us "the wicked one."—Heb. 2: 14; 1 John 3: 8; Rev. 20: 2; Gen. 3: 1–15. The enmity from the beginning is apparent all through every dispensation to the final close. "The dragon—the serpent—was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of the woman's seed who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."—Rev. 12: 17.

IV. The dragon denoted the crocodile of Egypt.—Ps. 74: 13; Ezek. 29: 3; 32: 2; see margin. The king of Egypt is so designated. A crocodile or dragon represents Egypt on ancient coins. Thus, as this dragon power oppressed Israel, it became the proper name of satan's dominion in and by the serpent's seed; and hence we find that, ages after, Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon—as a dragon—had swallowed up Judah.—Jer. 51: 34. The dragon is the same as the serpent.—Isa. 27: 1. All which, with other considerations, show us plainly that these terms denote the [illegible] organized under "the wicked one" [illegible] to the judgment. [illegible] God on this important theme. Much matter must be waved.—Ezek. 28.

Remarks. 1. It is presumption to say, against all this wide range of unerring truth, that the old serpent, the dragon—the devil—is Pagan Rome. Was Pagan Rome in Eden? Was it the Egyptian Pharaoh? Was it to be the subject of divine judgment at the resurrection of the just, as set forth in Isaiah; when, according to the theory, it went to the abyss about fifteen hundred years ago?

2. The symbols of Revelation do not obscure or alter the proper names and usual epithets of the other and foregoing Scriptures. God and Jesus, heaven and earth, new and old, saints and salvation, repentance and faith, beast and Babylon, are used in this book as elsewhere; by consequence the terms in question are also. "The darkness is in themselves," said Dr. S. H. Cox.

3. Those who restrict these terms in Rev. 20 to Pagan Rome, are so far with the Papists. They make the millennium to belong only to the Popedom!! The whole of prophecy places the Papal apostasy there and then. Is Christ's blessed reign to be so confounded with the Pope's? Did Christ's resurrected saints (ver. 4–6) reign in conjunction with the red-capped cardinals of Rome, when all history records the martyrdom of these very saints at the hands of Roman prelates and princes? God forbid this folly!

4. This erring application of Rev. 20: 1–8, involves more than a denial of the general tenor of holy Scripture, because it falsifies the plainest assertions of this book: it makes the reign of Christ—one thousand years—end before it can have begun! The reign of Christ with his saints begins at the seventh, the last, the resurrection trump.—1 Cor. 15: 50, 51; Matt. 24: 31; 1 Thess. 4: 16–18; 2 Tim. 4: 1–8; Dan. 7: 14–18; Rev. 1: 5–7; 3: 21; 5: 10; 11: 15, 18,—all yet future and harmonizing with Rev. 20: 4–6. But the theory in question makes this blessed and holy reign begin at the conversion of the Pagan Roman Emperor (somewhere), and exist out of sight (somehow, subordinate to Roman prelacy), and (end nowhere in particular) long since!! The seeming object of the tempter in so subverting this portion of truth, is to amuse the imagination and lead to a forfeiture of the blessing pronounced on believing the word; and to secure the curse of the superadded plagues on those so misled. He that "loveth or maketh a lie"—he that adds to or takes from the words of this prophecy—incurs the most fearful damnation.—Rev. 22: 15, 19. Read also Rev. 1: 3; 3: 5; 13: 8; 14: 4–5.

5. The snare of the devil—the snare of death—in which the first happy pair was caught, was only his subtle denial of God's truth.—2 Tim. 2: 25, 26; Isa. 25: 7. All are so caught and held who pervert the words of wisdom from above.

6. God has pledged himself before angels and men to deal with those who rush on his predicted displeasure, as with other deniers of his truth. The truth lies in his words.—Rev. 20. Hence the devil is more than Pagan Rome. The dragon and the serpent's seed did not begin or end with Paganism in Rome; for "Cain was of that wicked one." Egypt, etc., was the dragon power, long ages ere the founder of Rome was born!

7. There is the highest occasion for faith in God—faith in his prophets. "It is for our life." The rule is; "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves" (to the plain word), that "they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil!" The snare holds all who engage in subverting "the words of this prophecy." There can be no compromise. Those who believe must believe "the words." The killing sin lies in explaining away "the words of God." So did the serpent. Lord, deliver us from his subtlety. Amen.

For the Crisis.

"Almost Thou Persuadest Me to be a Christian."

Paul once stood a prisoner at the bar of Festus, to make his defence touching those things whereof he was accused of the Jews. After relating his manner of life among his own nation at Jerusalem, and of his testimony both to the Greeks and Jews, of repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ; he submits himself to be judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our Fathers; for which hope's sake he was accused of the Jews. Festus, having patiently listened to Paul's powerful defence, and being impressed with the facts of Christ's death and resurrection, [illegible] est me to be a christian." Alas! it was almost.

Of how little value are those things now which once deterred Agrippa from embracing a despised gospel. Seventeen hundred years have rolled beneath the waves of oblivion since Agrippa was on the earth, and all his pleasure and his splendor are no more. The crown he wore exists no longer; the pomp of life has for many ages forsaken him, all for which he neglected eternal life is gone, gone forever.

Paul stood before him; but his bonds have vanished, he no longer endures the pain of these, for he has long since gone to slumber with the pale nations of the dead, to await his crown, which his Lord the righteous judge shall give him at that day; and not unto him only, but unto all those that love his appearing. With such a blessed hope as Paul had, his testimony should quicken our desires for eternal life. He declares he has kept back nothing profitable for us to know. He has not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God. Then how great will be our own condemnation, if we do not profit by all these blessed exhortations and prayerful entreaties of Christ and his apostles to accept of offered mercy.

Repentance towards God is the great prerequisite to attain eternal life. Christ's mission on earth was to teach repentance, and to save his people from their sins. In harmony with this (Acts 5: 31,) "him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." Again, (Acts 3: 19,) Peter commands them to "repent, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." It appears Peter knew no other way for sins to be blotted out, but by repentance and conversion. And while Peter was administering the word of life to the people on the day of Pentecost, he said unto them, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Christ also says, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

However much men may be disposed to cavil upon this passage, Christ's meaning was explicitly conveyed to them, that if they died in their sins, where Christ had gone they never could go. There was no formal exposition of doctrine, nor elaborate argument in Christ's teachings; but it was so simple, "a wayfaring man though a fool, need not err therein." And yet he spake as never man spake. These facts are corroborated in Christ's sermon on the mount: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day."

The glorious doctrine of the resurrection comes to us with all its soul-thrilling beauties. For when we are reminded of loved ones, who but a few days ago were with us in all their loveliness, but whose pallid lips are now still in death, while the turf above them has been clothed in summer's fairest verdure, and upon whose graves will fall the first of the autumnal leaves, and the tempest and storms of winter; we have felt, perhaps, as we have stood beside their graves, and watched the mellow sunset, as it danced in quivering flashes through the burnished leaves, that if Jesus died and rose again, then they also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; and those jewels will shine again in the everlasting kingdom of God.

To this divine, this indispensable employment, my unconverted friends, every motive calls you, which can reach the heart of virtue or wisdom. The terms on which the blessings of the gospel are offered, are of all terms the most reasonable. You are summoned to no sacrifice, but of sin, and shame, and wretchedness. No service is demanded of you, but service of gain and glory. "My son, give me thine heart," is the requisition which involves them all. Saints wait with fervent hope of renewing their joy over your repentance. The Father holds out the golden sceptre of forgiveness, that you may touch it and live. The Spirit of grace and truth descends with its benevolent influence, to allure and persuade you. While all things, and God at the head of all things, are thus kindly and solemnly employed to encourage you in the pursuit of this most inestimable good, will you forget that you are either to be saved or lost? Will you forget that the only time of salvation is the present [illegible] save you in his kingdom? We have every reason to believe that we are on the eve of a great moral revolution. The Angel of the Apocalypse, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell in the uttermost parts of the earth, is now on the wing; the splendid visions of prophecy are now embodying before our eyes; and from the altar of God a fire has been kindled, which, like the last conflagration, will continue to burn till the elements of corruption shall melt with fervent heat,—till every idol in the heathen world shall be consumed,—till the present system of things shall give place to the new heavens and the new earth,—till the celestial voice shall salute our ears,—"Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and he will be their God!"

O! you that have no hope of a glorious reign with Christ, I would say to you, there is an hour coming when one whisper of an approving Mind, one smile of an approving God, will be accounted of more value than a thousand worlds like this! In that hour nothing will sustain you but the consciousness of having been governed by worthy and holy principles. Give your heart to God, and he will be to you all might, all joy in life, all victory in death, all immortality in the resurrection.

"The Union Movement:"

"A dialogue, showing the only possible ground for the union of all the children of God."—By Eld. Benjamin Franklin.—Published by H. S. Bosworth, Corner of Eighth and Walnut streets, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The following dialogue was originally published in the Christian Age, and subsequently, in compliance with many requests, in a tract form, from which we make the following extracts, which we hope all will read and consider candidly, receiving much profit by the perusal. It will be continued in several papers.

A MEETING OF THE LAY-MEMBERS OF THE VARIOUS CHURCHES OF THE TOWN OF UNITY, ON DEC. 3, 1858.

CHAPTER I.

The meeting was called to order by appointing brother A., chairman, and brother B., secretary.

The chairman arose and stated the object of the meeting, as follows:

DEAR BRETHREN: Being called to the chair, it becomes my duty to make a brief statement of the objects of our meeting. This duty I shall proceed to discharge, though not without some embarrassment, as I am no public man. Many of us have lamented for years, the divided state of Christian society in our town and vicinity. We have, for many years prayed for the union of all the children of God. We have, in our private conversations, most solemnly deplored divisions among those who love Jesus. Our blessed Lord, just before he suffered, prayed for the union of those who should believe on him, or that they "might be one," and we are commanded in Scripture to "be perfectly joined together, in the same mind and in the same judgment, and that there be no divisions among us." In our present state, these Scriptures are wholly disregarded. On last Sabbath, our preacher said he considered it a wise providence of God that we are thus divided. I could not think he had the spirit of Christ in this. I never did believe that division was right.

Other things of the same kind are occurring every week, and I am greatly distressed on account of them. In conversation with others, I found them in a similar state of mind. The objects of the meeting are, to determine the cause of this state of things, and what is to be done. I hope, therefore, brethren, you will express your minds freely. We have come to a crisis.

Brother C. arose and said:

Brother Chairman:—I feel the importance of the remarks you have just made; and, though no speaker, I consider it my duty, at this crisis, to give utterance to a few words. I am in much trouble on account of our divided state; and I am more convinced of the sinfulness of divisions among Christians than ever before. I am suffering much on account of this evil; more, perhaps, than you know of. My wife, with whom I have lived twenty years as a Christian, in the utmost peace and harmony, has lately been immersed and united with the Baptists. Being myself a Methodist, I can not now, [illegible] I would that I had never heard of but one church. What is the cause of this evil? Can not wise men devise some means to avoid it? Our preacher says we are all agreed on the great fundamentals of religion, and that the matters upon which we are divided are not essential. If this is the case, why not let every man have his own opinion on those things not essential, and not make a bar of fellowship of them? If we are only divided upon things not essential, but one in essentials, I am in favor of uniting upon the essentials, upon which we are all agreed, and let every man think as he pleases upon the non-essentials.

Brother D., a Baptist, rose and said:

Brother Chairman:—I must say with the brother who has just spoken, that being only a private member, I feel some embarrassment in attempting to make a speech; but the preachers all say we have the right of "private judgment;" and I would add, that I think we have the right to express our judgment: at all events, I venture to give utterance to my own convictions on the subject in hand. I always, ever since I knew the love of Christ, have felt distressed on account of divisions among Christians; but, I have never felt the matter so fully nor seen the evils of it so clearly, as I have been brought to see them since one of our daughters joined the Presbyterian church, and another joined the Episcopal church. Since then, George, my son, has become a Universalist, and my son Thomas, who, I had hoped would one day make a minister, says that we have so many different ways and so little love and fellowship among us, that he don't believe in any religion. In the place of any religious enjoyment, it appears to me that my gray hairs will be brought down with sorrow to the grave. What is the cause of all this division? Must we continue in such a state? Can anything be done? As the brother remarked, I have frequently heard the preachers say that we are all one in the fundamental principles of the Gospel, and that we only differ upon matters not essential. Then why can not we unite? Are we not all willing? Surety we are; and there is no reason why we are not united, only that the preachers dispute upon non-essentials and keep us separated. In my estimation, there is one essential we have not got. I believe that union among the children of God is essential—essential to our domestic and social happiness, to our christian enjoyment, the conversion of the world, and the approbation of our heavenly Father. Without it, the great object of the christian religion is lost. And I believe that our preachers, could, if they would, unite upon the fundamentals, upon which we are all one in sentiment, and make all non-essentials matters of forbearance, and we ought to require them to do it.

Brother E., a Presbyterian, rose and said:

Brother Chairman:—If I were only a public speaker, I would like to speak of the evil under consideration. I had a thought or two arranged, but the remarks of the brethren have opened such a field, that I despair of going over it. I always regarded division among christians as an evil: but I did not realise what a great evil it was. My wife, you are aware, was a member of the Methodist church when I married her. I supposed that we would soon agree upon religion, as we did upon everything else; but in this I found myself mistaken. Every time the subject of religion came up, we fell into argument and disagreement; not upon our views of the Scriptures, but the comparative merits of our creeds, ministers and churches, which resulted in no very pleasant feelings, and I feared would destroy our domestic happiness. To avoid this, we in some way came to a mutual understanding that each should go to his or her own church, and say nothing about it, not so much as to mention any item of news of prosperity or adversity. I am satisfied that if the preachers of our respective churches saw the evils of these things as we do, and desired to avoid them, they would find ground for union, and unite before another month; and I believe they should be required to do so.

Brother F., a Christian, rose and said:

Brethren:—I have long deplored the evils of which you have spoken. They are not imaginary evils; nor are your own experiences isolated cases, such as might be considered exceptions to general rules, or such as rarely occur; but if the members of churches in every neighborhood would meet, as we have done, and state their condition, their statements would be similar to [illegible] $600 a year each. This, too, we tell the people, is for the Lord. To make the matter worse, these six preachers spend [illegible] two-thirds of their time in defending what they themselves admit to be their [illegible] peculiarities, but not essential, and opposing each other. In this way their time is spent, and our money, given in the Lord's name, and in the place of the Lord's [illegible] built up by these partisan operations, the bars of division are made more [illegible] and infidelity is spreading all over the land. In this state of things we can never convert the world, nor have any real christian enjoyment and peace in our families, as is our privilege under the peaceful reign of Christ. Can we, or shall we endure it any longer? I, for one, think we are imposed upon; the cause is imposed upon; and the Lord is disgraced by his professed friends. What shall we do in this state of things? I consider that what we freely give, and we ought to give, for the furtherance of the Lord's cause, is squandered, and our energies are trifled with, and that we are not accomplishing the great mission of the Church.

Brother G. said:

Mr. Chairman:—I am no speaker, but I fully concur in what has been said, and rise not to make a speech, but to offer a resolution. The main practical point has not been reached, and it is now almost time to adjourn; I therefore offer the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas,—Division among christians is ranked among the works of the flesh, by Paul, and forbidden; and our Lord prayed that his people might be one, that the world might believe; and, whereas, we have found from our own experience that division destroys domestic happiness, christian peace and fellowship among the members of the same family, squanders our funds in the erection of six times as many meeting-houses as we need, and the support of six times as many preachers, who waste their time and talents in opposing each other, and making bars of fellowship of non-essentials, thus strengthening the hands of infidelity; and, whereas, we do not consider ourselves bound by the law of Christ to submit to a ministry that either can not or will not determine the Scriptural ground for the union of all the people of God, and unite upon it: therefore,

Resolved, That after the first day of January, 1859, we will not contribute one farthing to the support of our respective ministers, till they determine the scriptural basis of christian union, that they may unite upon it themselves, and ourselves with them; after which, we will support one of their number as our pastor, and [illegible] the other five to preach christian union [illegible] as they are able, to all the children of God throughout the world, and sell the five meeting-houses and appropriate the proceeds to the support of our [illegible] brethren.

When this resolution was read, the house rang with Question! Question! Question! The question was put, and unanimously carried.

Brother B. arose and offered the following, which was unanimously adopted: [illegible]

Resolved, That we meet three times a week, from this time to January 1st, 1859, and unite our most fervent prayers to Almighty God, that our preaching brethren may speedily find the scriptural basis for christian union; and when found, that they, with ourselves, may have [illegible] the spirit of Christ, as to unite upon it.

Adjourned. Prayer by brother A.

For the Crisis.

The Great [illegible]

In the 25th chapter of Matthew [illegible] presented to us a graphic [illegible] final judgment [illegible] are not so much as mentioned, in that great day, is brought to view here. It would seem that nothing of the kind is taken into consideration at all, as forming the decision either for or against the assembled multitudes; the judicial process is carried on from a different point of view entirely, and men are judged from the nature of their works and practices exclusively; as the passage above clearly proves.

We do not rely upon this scripture alone as to the nature of the great test, or ground of condemnation or acceptance, in the coming day; as there are many other passages in Scripture which clearly prove it. In Matt. 7: 22;—"Many will say to me in that day, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Thus we see that simply a name or profession, however high or imposing externally, amounts to nothing in the formation of the verdict and final sentence of individuals before God at the judgment. Men may be very regular in attending their stately places of worship; they may be most precise in their deportment, courteous and affable; they may "make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments . . . . and for pretence make long prayers;" but after all "receive the greater damnation." Yes, a man may speak with the tongue of "angels" "and have the gift of prophecy," "and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge," possessing faith to remove mountains, and indeed give all his goods to feed the poor, and even give his body to be burned, and yet be arraigned at the left hand, and sentenced to everlasting punishment. Here it is, as Jesus informs us, "the word shall judge us in the last day." And it will be useless for any one to plead ignorance in regard to this important matter in that day. It is from the nature of our practices, not our profession, we shall be judged,—our charities or illiberalities, not our theories, by which we shall be accepted or condemned.

Oh! ye who claim to be followers of Him who once found no place to lay his weary head; who have abundance of this world's goods and cling to them like the miser to his gold; who would see a brother or a sister in need and yet neglect to minister to him; how do you expect to stand in the judgment? You may hope to be saved; but, calmly looking at the subject, do you expect to be saved? Will not your firm adherence to your wordly pelf cut you off from eternal life, like the young man on record (Mark 10: 17—22.), and sink you at last in utter ruin? Can you reasonably believe your case will be any better than his, or that of the man who extended his possessions and enlarged his house and barns?—Luke 12: 15—21. What can men and women be thinking about, especially those who profess to believe that the judgment is immediately at hand, and Christ about to appear,—who still cling to their worldly possessions with the grasp of a dying man to the hope of life! How dwelleth the love of God in such? James 2: 15—20; 1 John 3: 17. Such may build and cherish a hope of getting into the kingdom; but will it not be like the foolish man who is represented as building upon a sandy foundation? Matt. 7: 26, 27. Does not Jesus say, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath cannot be my disciple?" Then why should men presume to be such, and yet hold on to their gold and silver, their houses and their lands, which all in fact belong to God?—Ps. 24: 1.

We do not contend that a brother or sister in Christ should take of their worldly goods as God has prospered them, and scatter them indiscriminately to the four winds; but we do contend that they should take an interest in, and see to, the temporalities of every member of the "little flock" within the range of their knowledge, and that this should be regarded as one of their highest and most God-like duties, and should be also esteemed by them as a great privilege, to be able to minister to the necessities of the [illegible]

We find that this is a matter to which men of God in all ages, as recorded in the Scriptures, have given particular attention. Is there not much said in regard to liberality all through the blessed Word? For instance, "Withhold not good to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thy hand to give it." "The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." "He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him." "He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor." "There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing; there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches." "He that hath pity on the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again." [illegible] scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." ... withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." The philosophy of giving and withholding lies here: "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

Jesus hath said, "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good." And he has commanded us,—"Sell that ye have and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens which faileth not." And has not his apostle told us to be "given to hospitality,"—"distributing to the necessity of the saints,"—and that "God loveth a cheerful giver?" Did he not, on one occasion especially, journey to Jerusalem to minister to the temporal necessities of the poor saints? See Rom. 15: 25, 26,—an illustration of some of that care of all the churches which he said devolved upon him. Did not our Lord attend to the physical demands of the multitude, not willing that they should be sent away empty? And whenever a miracle was performed, or the dead raised to life, was not the next thing in order to set bread before them and let them eat? But it would seem in this age, more degenerate than that of Noah or Lot, that the church has become so exceedingly spiritual (?) that she has overlooked temporal matters altogether; so far, at least, as it relates to that interest which love binds upon each member to foster for each other. They seem to go on the principle—"every one for himself," as though their interest was not one, alike in temporal and spiritual things; not knowing that God has joined both, and if one is sacredly important, we know not if the other is any less.

We are sick of such a cold, selfish and indifferent state of things which exists, not only in the broadway church, but in that portion in Christendom which claims to be looking for the coming of the Lord, and to "love his appearing." It is high time to "awake to righteousness," for God is about to spue such a sickening church out of his mouth, and gather to himself one "zealous of good works"—one that shall "forget not to do good, and to communicate," knowing "that with such sacrifices God is well pleased," a church that will not only love in word but in deed,—one that will bring forth much fruit, and by its good works glorify him. God is about to shake all nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples, to shake the heavens and the earth, and the Desire at last of all nations will come; and then every man shall be judged according as his work shall be. We shall soon see the letting down of his arm. We shall soon hear the rumbling of his power. We shall soon see the awful flashes of his lightnings. We shall soon hear the loud voices and mighty thunderings. We shall soon feel the shakings of the terrible earthquake, which shall shake down every thing that is not of Christ, and bring in the everlasting kingdom and glory. His patience with a lukewarm and hypocritical church and an ungodly world is about exhausted. The great day of the wrath of the Lamb is impending! O! who, who shall abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when he appeareth?

The Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

CORRESPONDENCE.—No. 1.

My Dear Sister B:—The blessed doctrine of salvation by simple faith is still very precious to my heart. You know that I have been for several years a decided advocate for the "baptism of the Holy Ghost," as the essential qualification for usefulness now, as it was in primitive days. You are aware, I suppose, that very many deny its being a speciality of the last of the "last days." It is asserted by them that it never was given but twice, viz., on the day of Pentecost, and at the house of Cornelius. They also say that all who thus baptized with the Spirit spake with tongues. The question has frequently been asked me, when speaking of some one as having received the baptism of the Spirit, "Did they speak with tongues?" The denial of the present attainability of the blessing led me to a more close examination of this subject, and I will record the result for the strengthening of your faith.

Jesus, just prior to his ascension, commanded his disciples to "wait at Jerusalem for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me." "The promise of the Father,"—what was that? "For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." "The promise of the Father" he here denominates the baptism of the Holy Ghost,—"which ye have heard of me." When had he told them about this? See John 14: 16.—"And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." Ver. 26; "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Chap. 15: 26.—"But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." This was when the disciples heard from Jesus respecting the "promise of the Father," and when speaking of its accomplishment, he denominates it the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

Now the objector must either admit that this "promise of the Father," respecting which they had heard in the language above quoted, was limited to the first christian believers, or else take the position that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is for the church to the end of time. They are coexistent, for Jesus said it was in fulfillment thereof, that it was to be poured out upon them at Jerusalem. If that promise was given only to the first christian church, then those living since have none to plead, by which to receive the Comforter. But we will make this still more positive.

Peter, in defending himself and his brother from the unjust accusation of being "filled with new wine," alludes to the very same promise. Jesus, "being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." He then exhorts them to repent and be baptized every one in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and adds, "and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise (of the Father) is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Then it must necessarily extend to believers throughout the gospel dispensation.

Here, however, I am met by the objection—"I believe the 'gift of the Holy Ghost' is promised to all, but not the 'baptism.'" To which I reply, the terms "gift of the Holy Ghost," and "baptism of the Holy Ghost" are synonymous, and for proof of this refer to the words of Jesus, Acts 1. 4, 5; and 10: 44–47. While Peter was speaking to those assembled at the house of Cornelius, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision were astonished, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost! Peter then inquires, "Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" Now no one disputes that the baptism of the Holy Ghost was here given, yet it was not once thus denominated, but, "the Holy Ghost fell on them,"—"was poured out,"—"the gift of the Holy Ghost."—"received the Holy Ghost," is the language used,—terms signifying the very same thing as the "baptism." "The Holy Ghost fell on them," Peter says, "as on us at the beginning," and he denominates it the "like gift." So plain, so positive is the testimony upon this point, that I wonder any one can take the ground that it was given only at the introduction of the gospel dispensation.

As to the idea that all spake with tongues who were baptized with the Holy Ghost, we believe this cannot be sustained, but that the negative is the truth, as we think we can conclusively show. That they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, is true, and that they spoke with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance, is also true. That it gave them all this utterance is not asserted. "Every man heard them speak in his own language." But it does not affirm that every disciple spake in various languages. It does not state that at the house of Cornelius all spake with tongues. But how was it with those disciples at Ephesus? If the baptism of the Holy Ghost was only given twice on the day of Pentecost, and at the house of Cornelius, and all who received it spake with tongues,—how comes it that these Ephesian brethren spoke with tongues when the Holy Ghost came on them? Did they speak with tongues without the baptism?

That all who received the baptism did not speak with tongues let me now prove. Turn to 1 Cor. 12: 13.—"For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have all been made to drink into one Spirit." Ver. 4;—"Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. . . . For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith, by the same Spirit; . . . . to another prophecy, ... to another divers kinds of tongues; to another, the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and the self same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." "Do all speak with tongues? Do all interpret?" Your sister in Christ,

M. D. Wellcome.

Hearing and Doing.—I have read a story of two men, who, walking together, found a young tree laden with fruit. They both gathered, and satisfied themselves at first. One of them took all the remaining fruit, and carried it away with him; the other took the tree, and planted it in his own ground, where it prospered and brought forth fruit every year: so that though the former had more at present, yet this had some when he had none. They who hear the Word, and have large memories, and nothing else, may carry away most of the Word at present; yet [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 19, 1859.

Sheol.—No. I.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in (sheol) the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9: 10.

We purpose to give the meaning of sheol, according to the best authorities, and all the passages in the Old Testament where the word occurs. This is the only word rendered hell in the O. T. The word is found in the Hebrew text sixty-five times, and is rendered hell thirty-one times, grave thirty-one times, and pit three times.

The verb, from which the noun is derived, signifies "to ask." The idea conveyed is, that when a person is put in sheol, he is placed there with the intention of calling for him at some subsequent time. Hence, Job says:—"O that thou wouldest hide me in (sheol) the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me! If a man die shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou shalt have a desire to the work of thine hands."—Job 14: 13—15. Job wished to be hid in sheol for a time and then be called for,—awaked from the sleep of death. He tells us when that will be. Hear him, in verse 12: "Man lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." As the heavens have not yet been "rolled together" "as a scroll," of course, Job still sleeps in sheol; he has not yet been called for. Job describes the place where he was going at death, which is sheol, as a "land of darkness and the shadow of death; a land of darkness, as darkness itself; and the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness."—Job 10: 21, 22.

Sheol is defined as follows:—"Orcus, the under world, a vast subterranean place, full of thick darkness. Job 10: 21, 22, in which are congregated the shades of the dead. . . . The true etymology of the word seems to be, that sheol is put for shoyal—cavity, a hollow subterranean place."—Gesenius.

"A subterranean place under the surface of the earth."—Pick.

"The invisible state of the dead; the place and state of those who are out of the way and to be sought for." "It seems nearly to answer to the Greek hades (by which the L X X almost constantly render it) and to our old English word hell, which though now scarcely used but for the place of torment, yet being a derivative from the Saxon hillan or helan, to hide, or for holl, a cavern, anciently denoted the concealed or unseen place of the dead in general."—"Sheol signifies that which is common to all, the common receptacle of the dead,"—Parkhurst.

The word sheol is first found in the Hebrew Bible, in Gen. 37: 35. When Jacob saw the coat of many colors, which he gave to his son Joseph, covered with blood, and was told that it had been found, he said, "I will go down into (sheol) the grave unto my son mourning." When his sons wished him to send Benjamin with them to buy corn in Egypt, "he said, my son shall not go down with you; for his brother is dead, and he is left alone; if mischief befall him by the way in which ye go, then shall ye bring down my grey hairs with sorrow to (sheol) the grave"—Gen. 42: 38.

In speaking of the wicked, Job says, "They spend their days in wealth (marg. mirth) and in a moment go down to (sheol) the grave."—Job 21: 13. We here learn that the wicked go the same place where Job wished to be hid, where Jacob thought Joseph had gone, and where he himself was going.

What are those doing who are in sheol? They are not doing anything. We may be asked how we know? The Bible says so. We will soon give the proof. If they are not doing anything, what plans or devices are they preparing for execution? Not any. But how are they employing their wisdom? Those in sheol have none. How can they have minds, thoughts and knowledge, without having some devices or wisdom? In sheol they have neither works, devices, wisdom nor KNOWLEDGE. Proof.—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in (sheol) the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9: 10. "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in (sheol) the grave who shall give thee thanks?"—Ps. 6: 5. This question is equivalent to the declaration,—no one can give thanks in sheol. The reason is very obvious,—there is no knowledge there. Something must be known, before there can be any cause for giving thanks, and as they remember nothing in death, and when in sheol, it is a reasonable conclusion that there no one gives thanks.

Some tell us that sheol is divided into two parts, one for the wicked, and the other for the righteous. In the part appropriated to the righteous, they rejoice, thank and praise the Lord; and in the portion set apart for the wicked, there is wailing, blaspheming, and horrid cursing. The Bible [illegible] gives thanks in sheol; but we now inquire if it is true that the wicked do groan in agony when there? We will let the Bible settle this question,—"Let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in (sheol) the grave." Ps. 31: 17. David had become weary with their unholy conversation, and desired that they might be placed in sheol, where they would be silent.

When the Bible reading is so plain relative to the condition of men in sheol, or state of the dead, we are surprised that people should still teach that it is a place of consciousness, where the righteous enjoy more than in this life, though not receiving their full reward; and the wicked suffer more than when alive, but not so much as they will after judgment. We do not see how language can make the point plainer than it is, that neither class know any thing, and consequently, neither suffer nor enjoy so long as they remain in sheol. Let it be remembered that this is the only word rendered hell in the Old Testament. We see that it is not much like the theological hell preached at the present day.

Book Notices.

"Nature's First Principles defined, and their harmony with the Bible record of the creation, the deluge, etc., philosophically vindicated."

The foregoing is a monthly periodical of 16 pp., containing valuable reasons and facts, published by L. L. Chapman, Philadelphia, Pa., at 50 cts. in advance for 200 pp.

"Will All Men be Saved?"—Those who wish to read a candid, common sense and Scriptural answer to the question—"Will all men be saved?"—should purchase the tract with the above title, published by H. L. Hastings, 191 High street, Providence, R. I., of whom it may be had; or at the Crisis office. Price 3 cts. single, $2.00 per hundred.

It is an excellent tract for the times. Everybody should have a copy.

The Golden Rule is a very valuable monthly, edited by David F. Newton, and published at 48 Beekman street, New York. Terms, 50 cts. a year in advance. It is well worth four times the price required. This faithful sentinel of the times is noted for advocating a pure christianity, regardless of the speech of people. Press the battle, Bro. Newton, we hope to rest together in the kingdom.

The "Broad Church."

Those who think Spiritualism is about dying out, show that they are not posted in the "signs of the times." The doctrines of demons are being diffused through church and state, and are completely paralyzing the truth revealed in the Bible, and are to christianity as the worm in the heart of the apple. They are taking out the life-blood, and leave in their train but a moral waste; and yet many honest hearted people seem to apprehend no more danger from association with this hydra-headed monster, than the child in the midst of a rattlesnakes' den, playing with their rattles.

Spiritualists assert that there is "no sin" and that "Satan has no existence." Mr. W. H. Chaney, one of the editors of the Spiritual Age, in his salutatory, Sept. 3d, says:—

"Whatever may be the consequences, I shall steadily adhere to the positions which I have taken, and hereafter devote my life to the upbuilding of a cause which I solemnly believe is destined to take the places of the present churches, in less than ten years."

He goes on to say of the conductors of the Spiritual Age:—

"Nay, more,—they believe the programme of the new movement which is to revolutionize the religious, social and political institutions of the world is already marked out, and its divinely appointed Head has been long progressing in the path of that development necessary to lead such a movement! That Spiritualism is rapidly tending to such a consummation, is a fact not to be questioned, though we may be mistaken as to the quarter whence it shall arise. We trust we can, ere many months have elapsed, furnish the evidence to Spiritualists, and to the world, that the foundations of the real 'Broad Church' are firmly and securely laid. More we dare not say at present."

Political Spiritualism.

We have been satisfied for years that one important part of Spiritualism is yet to be manifested in political action. When we have mentioned the subject to Spiritualists and others, they have either listened with astonishment at what they considered our wild vagaries, or boldly assured us that Spiritualism would never be associated with politics. The following published in the Spiritual Age, from C. H. H. New Brighton, Pa., dated Aug. 23d, '59, gives evidence of a "coming struggle,"

"Political Action for Spiritualists.—Now that Spiritualists are numbered by millions in the United States, do they not owe it to the interests of their cause, to consider how their votes should be cast? By a judicious use of the ballot box, a desirable change may be wrought in the tone of the public press, towards themselves and their belief. . . . Let us assume a political attitude, and make the world feel, that we are no longer to be trampled on with impunity."

The following, editorial, in the same paper, dated Aug. 10th, '59, [illegible] doubts on this subject. It is the very evident object of demons to get the control of all the governments of the world before the coming of Christ, and root out christianity from the face of the earth. The editor says:—

"We wish every sincere, true-hearted lover of the cause, to read the article of 'C. H. H.,' and if its suggestions appeal to his better judgment, let him do what he can to arouse the Spiritualist public to the necessity of some such political movement or organization.

We all believe that the real, underlying ideas foreshadowed by what is popularly called 'Spiritualism' look forward to the political, material regeneration of society, as well as to a Spiritual revolution, and it is high time that some public, formal action, looking in this direction, were taken. We do not need, and cannot have, at present, a political "platform," or declaration of principles. All we want is a palpable manifestation of our numbers and power, to entitle us to the respectful hearing and consideration of the public at large. No one thing could do so much towards enforcing for Spiritualism a position in this country, as the casting of two or three hundred thousand votes in 1860 for Gov. Tallmadge or Judge Edmonds, as President. And we can do it if we try! We can hold the 'balance of power' between the two great parties of the Union, and when we have demonstrated that fact, there will be but very few of our enemies who will care to employ such pleasant little names as 'fools,' 'humbugs,' 'charlatans,' etc., etc., which are so freely indulged in now-a-days. . . . .

The reason we are not more respected, is that we lack organization. There is not and has not been, unity of action among Spiritualists, so far, for the very best of reasons. Those reasons are fast passing away. Let us now begin to take the preliminary steps to organization—union. The day is at hand when we must all work together for the upbuilding of our cause. Without Association we are and of necessity must be in a measure powerless to effect any great work. . . . .

The great mass of believers in our faith are recognized to be among the most intelligent, moral, order-loving, law-abiding citizens. Genius and talent is plentiful in our ranks. Let us, then, show our power in 1860! After we have proved that we possess it, it will be time enough to discuss the question of what we shall do with it."

Our Tract Column.

Tract Fund for the West.

Sept. 5th. After returning home from Wilbraham campmeeting, I sat down to write letters. One I sent to a brother at the West, whose letter was in the first article on the Tract Fund. A brother at W handed me $3 from three sisters in S. H., for that brother who went on foot through the snow with thin shoes so many miles to preach. I added $2 which came from another source, making $5, and mailed it to him at the West. Carrying the letter to the office, I found a letter from the sister who had before sent $2 for the Tract Fund, and decided to trust in God for means to get her "winter's coal." She encloses $1 and writes thus:—

"Sept. 3d, '59.

I take this time to write and send you the widow's mite for the West again, and you tell the brethren and sisters that I have my coal for winter, and I can truly say, 'hitherto the Lord hath helped me,' and with the Psalmist, 'it is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes.' The Lord leads me as he did the children of Israel from Egypt to Canaan—that is, he doesn't let me look ahead, but makes me trust his word. I hope the Lord will sustain you to publish the truths of his word, and that many may receive it and so be led to love the kingdom to come. Amen."

Well, sister, you remind me of another widow who never, so far as I know, had her barrel full to the bung, but yet never wanted meal to make a cake or oil to eat with it; and who would probably have starved if she hadn't had faith enough to take one of God's prophets as a "free boarder." I pray God to make your meal and oil to last, yea, and your "coal" too.

Sept. 6th. This morning, while reviewing the letters that had accumulated during my absence, I found one which was written by the very brother to whom I sent the $5 last night. I will let him tell his own story presently. I think the Lord would teach us to walk by faith. (1) He sent the money from the three sisters several days ago. (2) I was kept from finding the letter that the brother wrote till after I had sent the money; and (3) after the money was on its way, I was allowed to see the letter, and so know that the money was rightly applied. (4) He will have the satisfaction of learning that his "heavenly Father knoweth that he hath need of these things," and so provides them in good season. "Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear."

"Aug. 16th, '59.

Bro. Hastings:—I want to tell you that the seed sown is springing up, and I expect to see in the gathering day a rich harvest even in Minnesota. I begin to realize more fully the sweet Psalmist's words—'He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.' Blessed be God! They that are doing. These you sent me are out doing their work, and some are getting interested, and when I can raise enough to pay the postage I shall send for some more of those you sent me. I sold 20cts. worth, the rest gave away and leave the result with God. [About $20 worth of Books and Tracts were sent, so you can see how scarce cash is there.—H. L. H.]

I have learned to trust in God since I have been out here, and I could tell several 'Tales of Trust.' When I had not a dollar in the world, and not but one pair of pants, and those well patched, and no boots, and not knowing where to get any, I was taken into a store and presented with some cloth for pants. When sick and destitute, a letter came richly laden with comfort, and a dollar from one I never knew. God bless the writer. My trust is yet in God, although the present prospect is dubious. If time should continue another winter I shall be in want of a coat, pants and shirts, and not a dollar in prospect only from my Father in heaven; therefore I am led to trust him. He will do all things well. He never breaks a promise.

I want you to tell the brethren for me to follow their dollars in the tract fund with their prayers and tears. Pray that wisdom may be given us west to distribute wisely. Pray that the Spirit of God may lead the reader to reflect, and that the final result may be salvation from sin here and from the effects of sin hereafter.

I expect to go to a new place to labor in a few weeks, and crave an interest in your prayers, that I may be successful in winning souls to Christ."

God give you courage, brother, and provide for all your wants. He will do it. Cast all your burdens on him. These trials of faith and "tight places" are not in vain, —they prepare you to sympathise with others,—to preach faith to the desponding and teach them to trust wholly in that God who "never breaks a promise."

Here is another letter from a brother to whom I sent some tracts only last month:—

"Aug. 27th, 1859.

Bro. Hastings:—I have disposed of about two thirds of the pamphlets and tracts you sent me, to good advantage I think. They have already removed a great amount of prejudice, and confirmed one, at least, who was wavering upon the nature of man. Others are reading and beginning to come to our meetings and assist in the exercises, a rare thing (among professors, I mean) in this section of country. The Lord is truly at work. I want to keep the car moving, and must have the right kind of implements for removing the many obstructions which have hitherto impeded its progress. And I think I am safe in throwing out tracts, when there is such an uncommon anxiety to read our works. I see by my memorandum, that I have sold seventy-nine cents worth of the pamphlets you sent me, and I therefore remit to you. I will send one dollar, asking as a favor that you send me presently a few more pamphlets, etc., to scatter among the lost sheep. O how much good these works can accomplish, if all will do their duty, and do it in time!"

The tracts are sent as desired. May they do much good.

Here is another from a sister at the West.—

"Ill., Aug. 20th.

Bro. Hastings:—It rejoices my heart to see my brethren and sisters waking up to the subject of spreading the glorious news of a soon coming Savior in this great western field. The harvest is great but the laborers are few. We came here two years ago last March. I have been spreading books, tracts and papers, as we take both the Herald and the Crisis. Some are being interested on the subject, and are anxious to hear it preached. I have written to two or three preachers to come and proclaim the glorious truths here. I have promises, and hope the Lord will direct some one here soon. I read your first number, I think it was about denying self—drinking sage tea, corn coffee, etc., to a Congregational minister. He said it was very good. I gave him the 'Voice of the Church' to read, and he promised me he would read it. I sent four dollars to the Crisis office, and took it mostly in books. I have been most sorry I did not take it in tracts, for it would not take me so long to read them. Now if you will send me two or three dollars worth of tracts, I think they will do good here and I will pay you as soon as I can. My drink is mostly cold water. I wear neither bows nor jewelry. I believe in being temperate in all things—whatsoever I do to do it heartily as unto the Lord."

I have sent tracts as desired.

Brethren, those extracts will tell the story of the needs and prospects in the West. Some may say it is of little use to scatter tracts, but they are the men that stay in comfortable quarters. The universal call from the pioneers who toil in hunger, and cold, and painfulness is, "send us publications!" I believe my correspondence with those who preach the gospel of the kingdom is about as extensive as that of most persons. Such letters as these and others of a kindred character have been pouring in upon me almost daily for several years past. I have drawers full of them. Perhaps I have nearly half a bushel—telling about the same story. These few that have been published have stirred up some hearts. This whole host have stirred up my heart for years, over and over again. Yet I have not known what to do. I have given tracts to all who asked; God knows how many; I haven't kept count. I have sent out freely, on trust, to all who desired, and have now on my books several hundreds of dollars due from poor preachers and others at the West and elsewhere, in accounts of from six months to three years standing; a large portion of which I never expect to get. [illegible]

thus to "broad-cast the seed." Whether I ever get pay or not, is a small matter. My work is for eternity. I have heard lately that some supposed me rich, by the way I carried on business. I am rich in faith and hope, and I hope soon to be rich in good health, and then I hope to be rich in glory by and by. But as to this world's goods, I claim but a very small portion. I have a little interest in my father's old homestead. One third part of a mountain farm that rents this year for $75 per year, and upon which, or from which my aged mother, now unable to walk a step without crutches, should have her support if I could get enough from it to do it. I have a little house and lot in Rochester, N. Y., that is rated at $800 in the tax-list there, which I got because I could pay half the price in books and tracts to scatter at the West. I have received, so my agent writes me, $4 rent on it for the last six months. I wish that it was sold for what it is worth, and every dollar of it laid out in tracts for the West. Then I have my library, worth more than gold to me, for there, when I can get a day to myself, I delve for precious truth. Besides this, every article in my house I presume would not sell for $200, and most of them were given to us, and I doubt if I have as much more under the sun to call my own after my debts are paid. Yes, I have stereotype plates, worth perhaps $100 when they are not used to print with, but I mean to see them worn smoother than they now are before I give them up.

Now in the last six or eight years I have, beginning without $50 in the world, been enabled to issue more than ten thousand volumes—some twelve thousand pamphlets, and, I presume, about a million of tracts, great and small. I have done nearly all the work of packing, mailing, etc. etc., myself, have had no clerk hire to pay, and have done it besides preaching, and traveling sometimes more than six thousand miles a year. I have never lived out of my publishing; I have received my living in other ways. I have expended for printing, stereotyping, paper and binding, with the closest economy, I presume from six to ten thousand dollars; and the profits on this, in ordinary book publishing, ought to be three or four thousand dollars, I should judge, if there were no rents or salaries to pay. Well, where has it gone? Let the harvest day tell! It's good business, blessed be God! Don't think I am in a whining mood to-night; no, as I sit by my lamp and pen these lines, my heart is joyful in God. I feel the streams of consolation filling my soul. And if God give me good health, I trust I shall yet work his work. Good business this, Bro. Ladd, almost like spreading a table to feed God's saints in the wilderness. Well, Randolph, you may count on me for a V to fetch up the arrears of the campmeeting account. Will you take it in tracts? It will be eight thousand pages, you know, and you could give them all away, and then you would be getting rich so fast that Bro. "So and So" would think you must be worth that $10,000, or else in a fair way to make it in camp boarding; provided you did n't prick their bubble by offering again to sell out your ten thousand dollars worth to any one who would give you two and pay your debts.

Well, Randolph, glory to God, we had a good campmeeting, and it was n't the first meeting you have been at where others did your share of the shouting, and you paid their share of the bills. But never mind, we'll be over Jordan by and by. Seems to me I hear them down in that old tent, speckled as Father Lee's "blackberry dumpling," yet all one in Christ, singing—

"I wish I was there, I wish I was there!
To sing and shout with the Israelites,—
I wish I was there
To rest on the shore!"

Well,

"We'll be there, we'll be there in a little while."

Praise the living God! Amen and amen, and let all the people say, AMEN!

But I am getting garrulous. I have wandered a good ways from the "Tract Fund," up to camp-hill at Wilbraham—it's too late to come down to business to-night. O to build three tabernacles for celestial visitants, and tarry on the consecrated spot, feeling "it is good for us to be here!" It is time for evening prayer, so God bless you all! Good night! Your brother in Christ, H. L. HASTINGS.

Tracts For Sailors.

I do wish that some one who felt as warmly as I, but possessed of more influence and power of persuasion, would take hold of this subject, and lay it before the people. Surely the spiritual welfare of seamen is as much worth attention as that of landsmen, even although the latter dwelt in the far, far West. The backwoodsman has the pleasing associations of home, though it be in a log cabin, where his toil is lightened by the faithful tenderness of a wife, and the endearments of his children; and when his daily labor is over he can shut his door, go to bed and sleep undisturbed, though the tempest sweeps over the boundless prairies and roars among the trees of the vast primeval forest. The sailor—but who can depict his varied life—the storm and calm—the gentle breeze, laden with tropic perfumes, and the dreadful hurricane, black with a thousand deaths?—O dear, though sometimes fearful life! how often my heart longs, despite of home and loving ties, for those stirring sights and scenes which make men brave; and how my soul yearns for the welfare of those noble fellows—my brethren of the sea!

The sailor, perhaps for months, knows little relaxation from toil, except during his insecure watch below; and in those brief seasons of repose his mind will catch at anything to relieve the monotony of his life. He will "overhaul the monkey," (i. e. rummage his chest) for the hundredth time to see if anything new turns up; but an old song book and a novel or two is all that he can find, and these he has by heart long ago. 'Tis true, there may be stowed away in the "till" an old Bible, the present of a mother long sleeping with the dead. It is not much worn by use; it is kept more like some sacred relic than a book of glad tidings; for he half fears, half hates, a volume that teaches eternal torture for the wicked; and his sense and reason repudiate the idea of such opposing attributes in a Being divinely perfect. You cannot easily make a sailor believe that there is no God, he knows better; but the common teaching of the day strongly leads him to doubt, or to wish he could, the sterling truth of the Book of books. I once heard, when a lad, a very respectable, intelligent ship-master say that although he was no Bible reader, yet, if the book were all that was claimed for it, it could not teach the doctrine of eternal misery. And this is the conviction of hundreds, nay, thousands, who, removed from the influence of priestcraft, are at liberty to exercise their judgment, unbiassed by creed or theology.

It has been said that little can be done with sailors, they are such a hard set. They are "more sinned against than sinning," for the treatment which they receive at sea and ashore, is enough to make them ten times harder than they are. They are like the poor flying fish,—in their own element knocked about and abused by brutal and cowardly officers, inferior to them in all but rank; and when they come into port every fang and claw is fastened in them, a prey to sharpers and loafers, lay and ecclesiastical, till the sailor looks with suspicion upon all men, and says in his heart—"I have no friend!"

Poor fellows! it does indeed seem so. And it is hard that the noblest race that ever faced the storms of heaven should be so little appreciated—so little understood. Rough they are as their calling makes them—reckless, because of an Ishmaelitish feeling that every man's hand is against them; but they are honest. I speak of the blue-water, regular-built tar, not the nondescript, half land-lubber, half coaster, or the vagabond "beach comber" of Pacific. Childish in his simplicity and truth, hypocrisy is unknown to him. Look in his eye and on his weather-beaten face, and in every expression and lineament is written "Man." What a noble soil in which to plant the seed of truth! Once persuade him that you are really interested in his good, and the rock of Mirabau sent out no purer waters than those of gratitude which flow from his thankful heart.

It may be asked why will not the ordinary tract do? All fish are not caught by the same bait. We are fishing for men, and as sailors are a peculiar class, something peculiar must be prepared to suit them. I wish I could do it all myself, but I am poor, and can only write the tract, else I would not so strongly appeal to the sympathies of my friends.

I am an indifferent beggar, that's a fact, but I do earnestly entreat all those who can, to join in this enterprise, assured that the promise will hold good, "Cast thy bread upon the waters and it will return to thee after many days." JNO. F. COTTON.

P. S. I have just received a letter of encouragement, and one dollar from Bro. Otis Irish, New Bedford, himself an old sailor. Come, the work is good and must succeed. J. F. C.

[From the Presbyterian of the West.]

FABLES OF INFIDELITY AND FACTS OF FAITH. By Robert Patterson. This is a series of tracts, on the absurdity of Atheism, Pantheism and Rationalism. They were originally delivered in the form of lectures. They attracted much attention, and were afterwards extensively circulated in separate tracts. Their popularity and importance has induced the society to present them in the more permanent form of a volume. Any one wishing to obtain the means of repelling successfully the attacks which are commonly made by infidels upon the truth of Christianity, will find more in this volume than we remember of having seen elsewhere in the same compass. The arguments of infidels are, in the hands of the author, like chaff before the wind. One valuable feature of the work is the compendious form in which it presents numerous facts from modern, antiquarian and scientific researches, confirmatory of Biblical history and astronomical allusions in the Scriptures. The last tract in the book, entitled, "Telescopic Views of Scripture," is an excellent example of the latter. The work is written in a clear and popular style, and gives the reader confidence that he is perusing an author who is fully master of his subject. We earnestly hope that the work will obtain, as it deserves, a wide circulation.

What Can I Do?

Often, when appeals are made to our hearts and consciences, by some earnest herald of the cross, who is trying by his life's devotion to his calling and the assistance of God to urge men to repentance,—and we are entreated to work for God and his cause,—we with folded hands ask this question—"What can I do?" We are too apt to think if we have not the talents possessed by others we are nothing; that because we cannot "be a hand, or an eye," we are not of the body. God does not look upon the weak with contempt because there are those who are strong. Think you that he did not look with equal approval on the life-long devotion and great worth of Wesley or Luther, and the poor old slave, who spent all his time in prayer, and in reading the word of God to his enslaved and sad-hearted companions? God is no respecter of persons. "Where much is given much will be required." He that had the one talent was as much required to do his duty as he that had ten, and sad was the consequence to him when his lord came and saw his neglect. Too often are we like this man. We look about us, and see the harvest ripening,—see the laborers are few, and our hearts urge us to press into the ranks of those who work, but we turn away with the question—"What can I do?" and because it is little that we can do—do nothing! Let us beware! May not God, when the last moment shall come,—when the laborers shall be called together and each bring his account,—say unto us, 'Thou wicked and slothful servant!'"

Woman, because her position may be a subordinate one, is too apt to think she has little to do in this great work for God. Sisters, are we, because we cannot fill the responsible positions which our brothers fill, to idly fold our hands and think we are not capable of doing much good? True, there may be little that we can do, but perhaps what little there is, is necessary to the work of God. The little grains of sand are necessary to the completion of this mighty globe; little drops of water together form the great ocean; seconds of time form the mighty ages of the past, present, and future; so the little which you and I can do, framed together, may go to make up the great work God has assigned to his people. Although in a splendid building the grand and costly architecture may elicit much admiration, and the beautiful stones and materials much notice, still, without the little nails, bricks and pins, the grand structure would fall to the ground.

Many a gentle word or kind act has been but a little drop in the great sea of life; but when the recording angel shall open his book and read there the sum of life, little things shall then be remembered. A word from us, with God's Spirit to send it home to the heart, may then be found to have done a little in the great work of life.

That wandering, wayward one, who seems so unwilling to listen to the word of advice, may perhaps be reclaimed by a gentle word. That erring one must not be passed with the Pharisee's cold scorn, but treated with christian charity, we, remembering that 'tis God's grace that keeps any from error, must give to such a gentle word of admonition, advice and kindness.

Let us look around and see what there is at our very door waiting for us to do. We must not be so occupied with the duties of our own circle as to forget that there are those around which need our love and sympathy; nay, that 'tis our duty to help what we can. Suppose some fault-finding one does say we had better attend to our home circle—"charity begins at home," etc.;—although woman's first duty is in the home circle, it does not follow she must shut her heart to all the needs of a perishing world. Neglect of one duty is as much sin as neglect of another. God never gave us life to use for mere selfish aims. Although charity begins at home, it does not necessarily end there.

God has created none in vain, all can do something in his great work. Let us not idly say, "what can I do?" but, with earnest, prayerful hearts, ask, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?

"Labor, christian, see the harvest beck'ning
With its ripe tassels 'neath the bright'ning sky;
Labor, labor, ere the the time of reck'ning,
Ere the long shadows of the night draw nigh."

For the Crisis.

To my Dear Friends.

DEAR FRIENDS:—You have, several o you, desired me to write a line as to how I prosper on my present tour. Well, I will. I am well—have been most of the time for weeks—I generally am, except at campmeetings. I do not like them very well. They are sickly places.

I preached eight days in succession, in an "immense tent," in Woodstock, N. B., and great good was done. The congregations which attended were very great. I then went fifteen miles up the St. John's river, to Simonds, and preached a few times. Some appeared serious, and made a move, but there was "not strength to bring forth;" and beside, the young people acted as if possessed of the Devil, and I left. Came down to Woodstock and preached on the Sabbath and baptized a happy company of young people in the St. John's. We then organized a snug little church in Woodstock, in gospel order, and called it "A Church of God in Woodstock, N. B." Is not that name enough? Shall we put a tail on to it and call it Advent? Well, all for their taste.

I am now in Houlton, Me. I am to preach four days in the Congregational church. Hope I shall be full of faith and the Holy Ghost. This place is full of infidelity. I mean to hit it awfully! God help. When I get done here, I am to go to Nova Scotia; and when done there, I am to go to Dover, Me., Friday before the last Sunday in October; and then go home the first of November. If you wish me to come to you, write by the first of November, and I will do the best I can about it. I love you all.

FOREIGN.

Per steamship Africa, from Liverpool Oct. 1st.

FRANCE.

The Paris Patrie says the number of vessels and troops which are to form the French expedition to China has not been decided upon.

Up to the commencement of August last, no treaty had been signed between France and Cochin China.

The Moniteur says—Some journals have stated that the solution of the affairs of Italy would be improved by the desire of the Emperor of the French to found a kingdom in Italy for a prince of his house. These rumors do not need refutation to deprive them of all value. It suffices, without speaking of the engagements entered into at Villafranca, to bring to recollection the acts and words of the Emperor Napoleon before and since that epoch.

It is announced that several regiments of the corps d'armee, under command of Marshal Castellane, in the Lyons district, had received orders to hold themselves ready to march.

Letters from the Provinces in France confirm the reports of grand armaments at the various ports. The government had purchased land at a high price on the coast, for the purpose of erecting fortifications. At Bologne a floating battery is to be constructed without sails, navigated by steam, and armed with rifled guns.

ITALY.

The Times Paris correspondent says. The latest and most accredited report respecting Italy is that the Grand Duke of Tuscany will regain his throne, not by forcible means, but by an appeal to universal suffrage, accompanied by the grant of a constitution and by a general amnesty; that the Duchess of Parma will have Modena, and that Parma will remain annexed to Piedmont. The warmest and most sanguine partizans have now given up hopes of being emancipated from Papal rule.

The Herald Paris correspondent says. The Duke of Modena is at the head of ten thousand troops, backed by five thousand more under the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

Kalbermatten has collected some ten thousand men, of whom about one-third are Croats, and the remainder Swiss, and he has gone out to Vienna, it is said, to organize a plan of attack against Fanti's army of Central Italy, now concentrated around Rimini, whilst the Archdukes would operate from the North.

Piedmont is also eagerly preparing for the fray.

It is stated that the reports of disturbances in Naples are unfounded, but that some agitation prevailed and government had taken precautionary measures.

Late letters assert that Aquinala, in the Abruzzi, was in open revolt.

Orders had been given to put Capua and other fortified places on a war footing.

A movement of troops was taking place at Naples, and important commands are said to have already been bestowed.

Rumor says that the Pope contemplates abandoning Rome, and again taking refuge at Gaeta.

Naples letters of the 27th, state that 15,000 soldiers had been sent to the frontiers, and that 10,000 more would follow.

CHINA.

There is no later news, but the Paris Patrie publishes the following in regard to the movements of Mr. Ward, the American Minister. The last news from Shanghae establishes beyond doubt the arrival of Mr. Ward, the American Envoy, at Pekin. This diplomat ascended the Ki-Tchoon Yun Ho, one of the branches of the Peiho, accompanied by all the members of his Legation. Arrived at Ninho-fow, the American corvette which had brought Mr. Ward was retained in port.

The members of the legation, under guidance of a Mandarin, were placed in a huge box, about five metres long by three broad, which was closed everywhere but above, so as to prevent those in it from seeing the country. This box, or travelling chamber, provided with all things necessary for the comfort of the traveller, was placed on a raft, and taken first up the river, and then up the Imperial Canal as far as the gate of the capital. Here it was placed on a large truck drawn by oxen, and in this way the Minister of the United States and the members of his legation entered the town of Pekin.

They were perfectly well treated by the Chinese, but were not allowed to see anything. The truck was drawn into the courtyard of a large house, which was to be the residence of the American Envoy, but from which they were not allowed to go out. At the latest dates they were awaiting their interview with the Emperor. They had not been allowed to have any communication with the outer world but were permitted to send a dispatch to Mr. Fish, the American Consul at Shanghae, informing him of their safety. After the interview the American Minister was to be re-conducted to the frontier in the same way as that in which he came.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

The Times says that the agents of the French, Austrian and Sardinian governments have been soliciting tenders from the leading English iron founders for a very large number of rifled cannon.

FRANCE.

Lord Cowley quitted Paris for Biarritz, in order, it is said, to arrange with Walewski for a joint expedition to China. Another authority says the visit has reference to England's policy regarding the proposed Congress.

The London Herald's Paris correspondent says nothing was heard on every side but preparations for war. Not a single man in the French army has yet been sent home on renewable furlough, and only those entitled to a discharge in December next have obtained it. Not a single ship has been dismantled, and active measures of defense are progressing at the forts. He gives a similar picture of operations in Austria and Sardinia. It is rumored in Paris, that the Chinese anti-European movement had extended itself to Japan and Cochin China.

Marshal Canrobert and the Duke of Magenta had resumed command in their respective military districts.

A Marseilles telegram says the number of the French forces on the frontiers of Morocco was twenty thousand. It is reported that their operations will not be confined to the frontiers of Algeria, but that they will occupy that portion of the Territory of Morocco of which Oubda is the centre, and from which incursions by the Moors have taken place.

ITALY.

The Sardinian government had sent a circular note to its representatives at the European Courts for communication to the various governments. The document forcibly sets forth the arguments in favor of a strong and independent kingdom of Upper Italy, sufficiently powerful to keep in check the domineering tendencies of Austria. Such a state would, it is urged, tranquilize the mind of Europe, and fulfill the first-wishes of those Italian countries which have lately shaken off tyrannical government.

It is asserted that the Pope on hearing the answer that the King of Sardinia gave to the deputation from the Romagna, ordered that the Sardinian minister at Rome should be tendered his passport, and it is further reported that the news of the cessation of all intercourse between Rome and Piedmont, a collision between the Swiss and neutral stations took place at Cattolica.

The Sardinian Journals speak of an insurrectionary movement having shown itself at Palermo on the celebration of Nanini's death at Padua, which led to several arrests, and some priests are said to be in prison.

The Savoy cross and Sardinian standard had been hoisted on the old palace at Florence, and also on all public buildings.

The Provisional Government at Bologna had issued a decree stating that in future every public act shall be headed thus: "Under the reign of His Majesty King Victor Emmanuel."

In Tuscany, decrees of a like nature were promulgated.

Garibaldi had been received with enthusiasm at Bologna.

The Garrison at Ancona is said to have been re-enforced.

Letters from Naples say that the King offered to lend troops to the Pope in consequence of the withdrawal of the French.

The reported insurrection in the Abruzzi is contradicted.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says Italian affairs approach a crisis, and after referring to the circular of the Sardinian Government, quotes an order of the day just issued by Gen. Fanti, Commander-in-chief of the army of Central Italy, who promises that the tri-color of Italy, preceded by the old cross of Savoy, will precede them in the fresh battles that will forever free Italy from the rule of the stranger. Garibaldi had also issued an address summoning the Italians of the Legations to arms. A collision is shortly expected, and some think will be produced by the Papal troops invading the Romagna.

It is announced that the French force for China will consist of 5000 troops of the line, 14,000 marines, six large steam transports, four sailing frigates, six first class and six second class gunboats.

Notices, &c.

☞ Bro. Geo. Dillabaugh wishes us to say, that the title of Elder does not legitimately attach to his name, and having been used in a late article in the Crisis in such connection, would have this understood as a correction of the same.

Notice.

There will be a Second Advent Conference held in Worcester, Mass., with the brethren worshiping in Warren Hall, commencing Wednesday, Nov. 16th, at 2 o'clock P. M., to hold over the following Sunday. At this meeting in addition to the usual religious services, there will be a suitable portion of the time occupied in the investigation of doctrinal truths, among which, and not least, will be considered the evidences that exist in proof of the fact that the coming of our Lord is especially near. The brethren in that region, both preachers and lay brethren, are cordially invited to attend as the Lord may direct. The following preachers have declared their intentions to be present, and others are expected: J. Hemenway, J. Billings, J. G. Smith, H. Pratt, C. Goodrich, J. G. Hook.

S. W. BISHOP, for the Brethren.

Conference.

There will be a Conference at Pawling, N. Y. commencing Sunday Oct. 23d, and continue eight days. Brethren Brewer, Goodrich, and others are expected to be present, to preach. We invite the brethren and sisters from other towns to come to this meeting. Call on S. B. Munn as he will provide places for you to stay. We pray that God's name may be glorified in this meeting. In behalf of the brethren. S. B. MUNN.

Appointment.

By adjournment of our last quarterly meeting, the next meeting of the Western Central Quarterly Conference is to be held in the Read meeting-house, Thursday, Oct. 27th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over Lord's day. We cordially invite ministers and others from any place to come and work with us in the cause of Christ. Let there be a good representation of the societies and churches within the limits of the Conference. Come ready to worship God and to work in his cause. Could Bro. Hemmenway and Billings postpone their meeting in Augusta one week, it would accommodate those brethren much.

I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary.

"[illegible] upon Peter."

"I know him not!" The Holy One who bowed
By Jordan's [illegible] silent prayer,
[illegible] wreaths of filmy cloud
[illegible] the soft, bright air,
And tremblingly swept the glorious brow,
[illegible] fervent glow
Of that high [illegible] whose pleadings won
The [illegible] answer, "My beloved Son!"

"I know him not!" Him who on Tabor's height
[illegible] the glory that he wore of erst,
When the young stars sang at the gates of light,
[illegible] in splendor burst!
Ay, him who, while his heart of love could weep
Soft, [illegible] where Lazarus lay asleep,
With [illegible] voice unbound that slumber's chain,
And called him back to life and love again!

"I know him not!" The perjured Peter stood Stamping with loud and angry vehemence,
'Mid the fierce rabble, thirsting for the blood,
The life-blood of unspotted innocence.
While He turned softly toward him with that mien
Of [illegible] sweetness, mournful yet serene,
Turned toward him with those calm, majestic eyes,
Full of the patient love that never dies!

He looked upon him;—no reproachful word,
No stern upbraidings, though the rankling dart
Still deeper pierced his soul, yet was a sword
[illegible] instantly in fiery Peter's heart!
The tide of love, which sudden fear but now
Had made to ebb, back with impetuous flow
Came rushing—ah! how could it but arise
To meet the love and sorrow of His eyes?

And he remembered then the ardent vow,
And the Lord's warning breathed so tenderly,
When that mysterious anguish dewed his brow,
Under the olives of Gethsemane.
Heart stricken from that presence Peter went,
And the young morning in the orient
Saw with her dewy eye the deep offence
Blotted by gushing tears of penitence!

For the Crisis.

The First and Second Adam.

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

"And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."—1 Cor. 15: 45.

Whiting, in his translation, renders the above passage thus: "The first man Adam became a living being, the last Adam a life-giving spirit."

The passage expresses the analogy and difference between the two persons named. Both are called Adam, hence a likeness. One was made a living soul, the other a quickening spirit; hence a difference.— These two points we shall notice in this subject.

1. Adam the first was made a living soul,—a living being. How he was thus made, we are informed in his history, Gen 1: 26, 27,—"And God said. Let us make man in our image, after our likeness . . . . . so God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them." Chap. 2: 7;—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul;" or living being.

It is plainly true, that the words made, created, and formed, in this connection, have the same meaning. Should it be said that the word created must differ in meaning from the words made and formed, because it sometimes has the meaning of something created from nothing, we reply that this word is applied to the woman, and we are informed that she was made of the rib taken from Adam. The words image and likeness are used in this connection, not to express good character, or moral likeness, for that would imply that there was an immoral likeness in which God might have created man. The connection shows that these words express the difference between the formation of man and the formation of the other beings which the Lord had made. After the formation of the fish of the sea, fowl of the air, beasts and creeping things of the earth, it is said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." This is expressive of the contrast between the form of the man and the form of the beast.

These terms are used in the same sense in the following places; Gen. 5: 1, 3;—"In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him. . . . And Adam . . . begat a son in his own likeness, after his image." 1 Cor. 11: 7;—"For a man indeed [illegible] cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God." Not is thus morally, but so in his formation, [illegible] capacity, compared with all other creatures connected with this earth which God has made. Rom. 8: 3;—God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh." Phil. 2: 7;—"Was made in the likeness of men." Surely, the word likeness, in these places, does not refer to moral character. Besides, moral character is based on life, thought and action. Therefore, man could have no moral character before he lived. But he was created in the image of God, and that, of course, before he lived. Therefore the word image can have no reference to character, but to his personal form. After he was made in the image of God, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul.

No valid objection can be raised to this view, on the assumption that God has no personality or form. He is represented [illegible] the Bible as having the form of a man. The passage,—"God is a spirit," [illegible] with this view. It is said in the text that Christ was made a [illegible], is this an objection to his personality? No more does this passage [illegible]

[illegible] raised. But there may be other material besides flesh and bones.

The last Adam was made a quickening spirit. He was the seed of David according to the flesh. He was born of a woman; hence the son of man. He was begotten of the Holy Ghost; hence the Son of God: divinity and humanity harmoniously blended. It was necessary that he, by whom the worlds were made, should come into the world in this manner in order to stand in the relation of the second Adam to redeem what the first lost. Jesus assumed the form of man—took man's place in the flesh, and under the law. By so doing he could honor the law in his obedience, and then could lay down his life for the sinner; and so answer the demands of the law against the sinner, as that he can be saved on condition he believes in Jesus and accepts his offering. God can be just and justify him that believeth in his Son.

John 5: 21,—"For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Verse 26,—"For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." He is the resurrection and life. In him is eternal life. He will quicken the dead, and raise them to life eternal, who believe in him. Hence he is a quickening spirit.

2. The first Adam was placed on probation to form a character for himself, and by so doing to secure eternal life offered to him. Had he obeyed all the laws of his being he would have been entitled to life and immortality. The principle of probation on which Adam was placed was obey, and live, or, disobey and cease to live,—obey and remain a living soul, or, disobey and cease to be a living soul. Death, in all its forms, has come on man for sin. Adam was told that, "because thou hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, thou shalt not eat of it," etc., "unto dust shalt thou return." Said the apostle,—"The body is dead because of sin." Adam, by his sin, failed of eternal life, and lost every thing God gave him. He lost the garden, the tree of life, the earth as it was when God made it, peace with his Creator, and his life. When he died, his spirit returned to God who gave it, consequently he lost that, and he returned to the ground from whence he was taken, and had nothing left.

So Christ, the last Adam, as man, was placed on probation. He, too, formed a character for himself. He was submitted to trial, to temptation, and to suffering. In the midst of all he kept all the law to which he was subject. The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. See Heb. 2: 10. He was thus perfected, as the faith of Abraham was made perfect by his works. He had faith before the trial referred to, but it remained to be proved that his faith would endure the trial. So Christ was perfect before any severe suffering, still by his suffering was his character known and established. He was, therefore, entitled to life. He could claim, in justice, an exemption from death. Justice said, he shall not die. But had he done nothing more, he would have secured life for himself, and for no more. Having perfected himself, he became a proper subject to help others out of sin and death. Hence is it said, "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him."—Heb. 5: 9. As by the first Adam's "disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one (the last Adam) many shall be made righteous."—Rom. 5: 19. The first man's sin prepared the way for the sin and ruin of his offspring. On the other hand, the righteousness of Christ has prepared the way for their salvation.

Christ laid down his life for the sinner. Not for himself, not as a martyr, but to satisfy the just demands of the law against the sinner. Justice says, let the sinner die. Mercy says, let him live. Not, however, to the expense of justice, but in harmony with it. The law demands the life of the sinner. Christ was not a sinner, hence the law had no such demand on him.

The following are some of the scriptures which show that Christ's death was to meet the demand of the law against us. "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us. For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."—Rom. 5: 6, 8. "Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification."—Rom. 4: 25. "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us."—1 Cor. 5: 8. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins."—1 John 4: 10. "Who his own self bear our sins in his own body on the tree."—1 Peter 2: 24. "Because he hath poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bear the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors."—Isa. 53: 12. "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—2 Cor. 5: 21. "Christ the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth."

By faith we have reconciliation to God and the death of Christ removed the penalty. Christ gave his life to meet the demands of the law against the sinner. In other words, as the law demanded obedience [illegible]

[illegible] ed, the law requires his life. Christ having obeyed, his death can be set to the sinner's account. So it is, and the law is satisfied. Hence God can be just and justify him that believeth in Jesus. So mercy and truth meet together; righteousness and peace embrace each other.—Psa. 85: 10.

For the Crisis.

We're Passing Away.

AIR.—"Carrier Dove."

We're passing away, but we're homeward bound;
We shall meet where the holy ones dwell,
Where the sweet gliding waters of life are found,
And the songs of the ransomed swell.
Here, bitter drops flow in our sweetest cups,
And thorns are in all our flowers,
But we'll drink from the fount where angels sup,
And roam 'mid thornless bowers.

We have tempests to brave, and rough surges to breast,
We have sighing, and sadness, and gloom;
But lightly they sit, as a gossamer vest,
For we're going where joys ever bloom.
Oft the unbidden tear forth in bitterness steals,
And the form goes low bending with pain,
And the spirit is pressed with the woes that it feels,
But, oh! why should we ever complain?

We have trials too, but we'll leave them all
At the gate of our Eden home,
Why speak of the pain, of the thorn, of the gall,
When the glory so soon is to come?
We shall meet our King on his bridal morn,
Who a costly ransom hath given,
To waft us away from the fires that burn,
To the glory-clad mountains of heaven.

Then, brother, cheer up and gather thy wings
For thy long-sought Eden home;
For hearken! the trumpet's glad echo rings,
And the angels are bidding thee come.
We're passing away, but we're homeward bound,
We shall meet where the holy ones dwell,
Where the sweet gliding waters of life are found,
And the heart never sighs Farewell!

From "The Gift of Power."

Christian Obligations.

BY REV. S. H. PLATT.

Here we are met with the plea, "But it is fashionable." As if the christian must follow the dictates of fashion, however opposed to gospel principles, and into whatever labyrinth of inconsistency the fickle goddess may lead. Fashion, in the estimation of many, seems a kind of magic crucible, which possesses ample power to transmute whatever may come within its influence into the very gold of righteousness. So that, whatever principle may be sacrificed in the pursuit of her gaudy bubbles, it is all right, because, forsooth, "it is the fashion." Away with such morality as this! It is the moral code of the arch enemy himself! and yet it is the main reason given, by a great portion of those who profess the religion of the cross, for violating as plain and express a command as can be found in the Bible. "Is it not right, then, (says one) to follow the fashion?" Here the question arises, How far is it the christian's duty to follow the customs and fashions of the world? Mark the phraseology! It is not how far may he thus conform, etc., but how far is it his duty to conform, etc. We have purposely put the question in this form, that we may be able better to meet a wide spread and destructive sentiment, and a sophism of the adversary which is doing fearful execution with christian consistency.

This "may do," or "may not do," covers a wide field in the estimation of many. They seem to have the idea that God has left a large portion of the trifling affairs of life optional! But in his sight, there is never a may without a MUST! In other words, nothing is left strictly optional. Everything is stern, unyielding duty, one way or the other. In reference to everything, it must be said, it is our duty to do, or it is our duty not to do. There is no neutral ground, which the christian may occupy or not, and be equally innocent in either case. If we may innocently do, it is our duty to do, and our guilt if we do not, and vice versa!

How far, then, is it our duty to conform to the customs and fashions of the world? Ans. As far as we can in things strictly indifferent, and when no compromise of principle is involved. Further than this no one can innocently go under any pretense. If we adopt any other conclusion than this, there will be no landmarks left. The whole field will be open to the caprice of every one, with no limits, and no safeguards: for if we say that principle may be violated at all, every one will be at liberty to say how far he may violate it; and thus it may be carried from one degree of transgression to another, till the whole principle is swept away.

No sacrifice of principle is ever necessary for usefulness; for consistency is the very soul of usefulness.

Another reason, nearly akin to the one just considered, is, "I wear them because others do." As if companionship in iniquity possessed a purifying tendency. If five hundred men combine together to pillage and steal, is it any the less sin for each, than if he alone were guilty? If so, then the quickest way to annihilate sin in our world is to all be as bad as we can, so that the large number of transgressors may make us all innocent in transgression.

But can the prevalence of any wrong justify its commission? We answer, It can, if it can change its nature, and make [illegible] cannot? But all wrong is some transgression of a Divine law; and whether the transgressions be few or many, each one is transgression still. Wrong is wrong at all times, and under all circumstances. And "every transgression and disobedience will receive its just recompense of reward." If a multitude of transgressions can absolve us from the duty of obedience, the wonder is that the whole world has not long ago received complete absolution from all duty, and all law become obsolete. But "thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil," is the caution of Wisdom, and the counsel of safety.

Others say, "It is well enough for those who make a high profession to avoid them; but for ordinary christians, it makes but little difference." I answer, if it is inconsistent for them, it is equally inconsistent for you; I say equally inconsistent; for, if you do not make such a profession, you ought to, and hence, in view of your obligations to God and your own soul, you are just as inconsistent as they. Besides, if, as you say, "it makes but little difference," that little is the fearful one of obedience or disobedience. Let eternity say whether such a difference is little or great. "But we do not expect to obey in every little particular." Then, I reply, you are founding your hopes of heaven upon a deathbed repentance, concerning these little particulars; or you are just as really presuming upon God's mercy to save you, notwithstanding these defects, as is the believer in universal salvation.

* * * * * *

3d. Because its first principle and sustaining energy is pride of heart.

This proposition will be stoutly denied. Few will acknowledge a care for such ornaments, much less pride in them. Yet no amount of persuasion will induce them to lay them aside. And if the propriety of discontinuing their use be but hinted, the impatient or defiant glance, or scornful smile, prove how little they are regarded. Little as it is, they will sooner forfeit the esteem, and pain the hearts of fellow-christians, or their ministers, than forego it.

Others assert that they wear them "for the sake of the giver." But would they use a lottery or theatre ticket because it was a gift? Would they wear a stolen watch because a present? Why, then make so great a distinction, when there is no difference? He who uses money for such purposes robs God, and she who wears the purchased article shares in the iniquity. The truth is, this very trust in such shallow pretenses proves conclusively that the love of the thing lies beneath, and, however much it may be concealed from the individual, pride and pride alone, is the foundation, as the universal judgment of mankind asserts—there let the stigma rest, and let them who will assume it.

Others wear them, "because they look so much better with them." I have supposed that when the poet said,

"Beauty when unadorned is adorned the most,"

he uttered a philosophical truth, as well as a gem of rhetoric, but it seems that now that truth is obsolete, and beauty needs a little fixing up to be passable. "Oh no, the really beautiful do not need such things, but plain kind of people!" Well, let us have a distinct understanding, only the homely, then, need wear such adornments, so that the fact of wearing them is to be considered as an acknowledgment that you are—not beautiful! But is the reason valid? If so, let us act upon the suggestion, and bid our ministers to preach only when the truth can have such important accessories as good looks always give, and if the comeliness is not there by the stamp of nature, why, let the jeweler supply the defect. How much more graceful a jeweled hand would look, waving in oratorical gesticulations during each polished period of a discourse than the plain, unadorned hands of our present ministers. What a vast improvement, too, might be made by just supplanting the plain bosom buttons with the golden studs, and adorning it with a splendid pin! How nicely, too, a heavy chain would contrast with the jetty color of his vest, and how brilliantly the golden-headed cane would flash back the reflected rays from the jeweled rings. Oh, that would be superb! And with what a grace he would then rise, and preach from "Come out from among them, and be ye separate," etc., after singing that beautiful hymn,

"While in this region here below,
No other good will I pursue;
I'll bid this world of noise and show,
With all its glittering snares, adieu."

And if the world should dare to hint that he was not just right, every member could at once reply, "O, he looks so much better!" and this would be the spell that should effectually silence all objections. But, seriously, christian, can you afford to "look better" externally, at the expense of the guilt necessarily induced in breaking a command of God?

Another wears them "because she likes to see them." So may she also like to see a dance, or a play at the theatre; but would she therefore dance, or attend the theatre? Yet these are not as plainly prohibited as is the very course she is pursuing in wearing these adornments. "Oh! consistency, thou art a jewel!"

4th. Because it is depreciating their character in the estimation of the world. Bad as the world is, it still admires re[illegible] religious principle, and makes the inconsistent professor [illegible] beneath the scourge of its ridicule. When we were of the world, we regarded such practices as unbecoming in the christian; and, rest assured, the world is no more lenient, or erring in its judgment now, than then. The unconverted and the ill-disposed love to make such fashionable professors the scape-goats for their iniquity, and they always intrench themselves behind their defects, for safety from the shafts of conviction or remorse. The church feels this in all her borders, and hence arises the despondent cry—"We can never prosper with such professors in our midst." A monstrous wrong is here! and common honesty ought to lead such professors to forsake their evil practices, or leave the church, that she may no longer be stigmatized by their example.

We have before referred to the importance of consistent christian example, and here recall it, in order to present it as our chief reliance in the aggressive movements of christianity. As such, God designed it ever to be considered, and hence he so strongly insists upon it. Next to the direct agency of his own Spirit, this is the hope and the dependence of the church, and the salvation of the world. Whatever, then, mars this example, undermines, to the same extent (if not the foundation stones, at least,) the supporting pillars of the world's hope.

5th. Because it is a sinful use of the Lord's property.

We here assume that no one has a moral right to spend a single penny, except in accordance with God's will. Is it, then, in harmony with his will to violate his own command? "Whose adorning let it not be," etc.

"The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." "The silver and the gold are his," and you, poor mortal, have nothing, absolutely nothing in your own right. That which you possess is only loaned for a time, and if your Lord, when he shall come, finds that you have squandered the means which, if faithfully employed, might have saved priceless souls, fearful will be the account of your stewardship! * * * *

How few there are but what have the price of a soul upon their person! If you knew that every $18 which you give would save a soul, how would you spend your money? Yet statistics show this to be a fact.

O christian! consider this matter well! eternal interests may rest upon the use of a single dime!

The Wall of Self-Denial.

This image among the Life Thoughts of Rev. H. W. Beecher, should lead many a one to such musings as these. Yes, it is even so. This is a wall of which I have thought too little; one which I have never constructed, or kept up with sufficient care. By such neglect, I see that I have suffered great losses of most valuable goods. Often, as I may say in figure, has a valuable beast escaped from my pastures, and often have I suffered from the incursions of depredators upon my garden and fields. More than half that I might have now been worth in the better treasures of life has, I doubt not, been taken from me in this way. But there is more to regret. I have been so long accustomed to a culpable neglect in this matter, that I can hardly hope to establish myself in a true practice. Much have I meditated upon the subject, many good resolutions have I made, but temptations, coming as old friends and eager for their usual entertainment, are with great difficulty resisted. Habits, running in the old ruts, carry me along so much more pleasantly than any attempts to keep new tracks, I am too often persuaded to give up the contest and risk all possible consequences. This I know to be unreasonable, unmanly, even foolish, but still I find it difficult to establish any considerable amendment of practice.

These thoughts are sufficiently humiliating, and they ought to have a salutary effect. But how true the bitter reflection of the poet Young!

"'Tis not in folly, not to scorn a fool,
And scarce in human wisdom to do more."

Is there no divine wisdom within our reach, by which we can do, as well as know, what the merest common sense so obviously requires?

Let us add, as a farther inducement to the stern efforts that may be required for our s[e]ndment, Self-denial is not merely a wall, the erection and keeping up of which is absolutely necessary to the security of all our best possessions; it is a tonic and stimulant of our spiritual existence, indispensable to our efficiency in every good work. Many a one, whose life is of comparatively small value, might, by the practice of this single virtue, be raised up to the dignity of a benefactor of his race. Self-indulgence, in even small matters, is a perpetual interference with the real discharge of the higher duties of life. With various customary and mechanical functions, it may have little to do, but wherever mental energies are concerned, or stern volitions needed, the absence of this ministering spirit is a drawback of the most serious character.

Especially is this the case in regard to pious activities, where conscience plays so large a part. A sense of habitual sinning in the refusal to deny ourselves, seems to erect an almost impassable barrier between us and the sphere of activity where the presence of God must be felt. There is a sense of incongruity between a sinner's character and a saint's work, which can hardly be for a moment resisted. Then, too, we cannot avoid the apprehension, that in all such works we require Divine assistance; and that we are so separated from God by our sin, as to put the hope of his co-operation out of the question.

[illegible] self-renunciation alone can the entrance upon real life be said to begin;" and, of course, any signal failure here must issue in everlasting [illegible].—Protestant Churchman.

How to bear Little Troubles.

There is a kind of narrowness into which, in our every-day experiences, we are apt to fall, and against which we should most carefully guard. When a man who is in perfect health has a wound inflicted upon him,—a wound in his foot, a cut in his finger, a pain in his hand—he is almost always sure to feel, even though it be only a small part that is suffering, and the suffering itself be unworthy of the name, that the perfect soundness of all the rest of his body counts as nothing; and a little annoyance is magnified into a universal pain. Only a single point may be hurt, and yet he feels himself clothed with uneasiness, or with a garment of torture. So God may send ten thousand mercies upon us, but if there happen to be only one discomfort among them, one little worry, or fret, or bicker, all the mercies and all the comforts are forgotten, and count as nothing! One little trouble is enough to set them all aside! There may be an innumerable train of mercies which, if they were stopped one by one, and questioned, would seem like angels bearing God's gifts in their hands! But we forget them all, in the remembrance of the most trivial inconvenience! A man may go about all the day long—discontented, fretting, out of humor—who, at evening, on asking himself the question, "What has ailed me to-day?" may be filled with shame on being unable to tell! The annoyance is so small and slight that he cannot recognise it, yet, its power over him is almost incredible. He is equally ashamed with the cause and the result.

We may fall into such a state merely through indifference, and remain there simply because we have fallen into it, and make no effort to get out. When a man starts wrong early in the morning, unless he is careful to set himself right before he has gone far, he will hardly be able to straighten out his crookedness until noon or afternoon—if haply then, for a man is like a large ship—he cannot turn round in a small space, and must make his sweep in a large curve. If we wake up with a heavenly mind, we are apt to carry it with us through the day, but if we wake up with a fretful, peevish, discontented disposition, we are apt to carry that all the day, and all the next day too! I have comforted myself, and risen out of this state of mind, by saying to myself, "Well, you are in trouble, something has come upon you which is painful, but will you let it clasp its arms around you, and shut you in its embrace from the sight and touch of all the many other things that are accounted joys? Will you suffer yourself to be saddled and ridden by it?" It is well to remember that there is a way of overcoming present troubles by a remembrance of present mercies. The apostle Paul knew this, and so exhorted us to "look unto Jesus, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame." All that Christ had to bear, he bore patiently,—he carried his sorrow about with him as a very little thing. Why? Because of the "joy that was set before him!" O, let us apply the exhortation faithfully to ourselves, and when we are worried, and tempted to give way to vexation, let us seek a sweet relief in the thought of the blessedness that is set before us to be an inheritance for ever!—Beecher.

The First Printed Book.

It is a remarkable and most interesting fact, that the very first use to which the discovery of printing was applied, was the production of the Holy Bible. This was accomplished at Mentz, between the years 1450 and 1455. Guttenburg was the inventor of the art, and Faust, a goldsmith, furnished the necessary funds. Had it been a single page or even an entire sheet which was then produced, there might have been less occasion to have noticed it, but there was something in the whole character of the affair, which, if not unprecedented, rendered it singular in the usual current of human events. This Bible was in two folio volumes, which have been justly praised for the strength and beauty of the paper, the exactness of the register, and the lustre of the ink. The work contained twelve hundred and eighty-two pages, and being the first ever printed, of course involved a long period of time, and an immense amount of mental, manual, and mechanical labor; and yet, for a long time after it had been finished and offered for sale, not a single human being, save the artists themselves, knew how it had been accomplished.

Of the first printed Bible, eighteen copies are now known to be in existence, four of which are printed on vellum. Two of these are in England, one being in the Grenville collection. One is in the Royal Library of Berlin, and one in the Royal Library of Paris. Of the fourteen remaining copies, ten are in England—there being a copy in the libraries of Oxford, Edinburgh and London, and seven in the collections of different noblemen. The vellum copy has been sold as high as $1800.

Thus, as if to mark the noblest purpose to which the art would ever be applied, the first book printed with movable types was the Bible.—N. Y. Sun.

Short Sermon for the Little Folks.

Many of our little friends have by some means given themselves a very foolish habit of making use of many words and phrases which are of no use to any one, and do not at all relieve the mind of the speaker. This practice is not only very foolish and silly, but it is decidedly wrong. Let me illustrate this by a case in point. Here is Harry Hills, a smart little boy of six or seven summers, loved by all who knew him. His mother is our neighbor, and a low, picket fence divides our gardens. A few days ago, while I was weeding a plot near the fence, I heard some one exclaim impatiently:

"By jimminy, that's too mean."

I looked up and saw Harry, who colored up to the roots of his hair as I asked:

"What's too mean?"

"[illegible] you see I was raking here in the garden, and my rake caught in a root, and three of the teeth came out."

"Yes, Harry, I see; but suppose all the teeth had come out, or even the rake broke so that it would be impossible to mend it, is that any reason you should swear about it?"

"But I didn't swear, I only said——"

"Yes, Harry, I am sorry to say you did. By jimminy, is just as much an oath as is any other. By any thing, no matter how small, is swearing, and the fact is you take an oath. Do you understand?"

Harry did, and the bright tears rolled down his cheeks as I talked to him of "little oaths," and showed him the step was small from these to the time when he would, without thinking, take the name of his Creator in vain.

Since that time I have not heard Harry use any word not necessary to show his meaning. Children, think of this, and remember to "swear not at all."—Independent.

Counsels to the Young.

Never be cast down by trifles. If a spider breaks his web twenty times, twenty times will he mend it again. Make up your mind to do a thing, and you will do it. Fear not if trouble comes upon you; keep up your spirits though the day may be a dark one.

"Troubles never last forever,
The darkest day will pass away!"

If the sun is going down, look up to the stars; if the earth is dark, keep your eyes on heaven. With God's presence and God's promise, a man or child may be cheerful.

"Never despair when fog's in the air,
A sunshiny morning will come without warning!"

Mind what you run after! Never be content with a bubble that will burst, or a firewood that will end in smoke and darkness. But that which you can keep, and which is worth keeping.

"Something sterling that will stay
When gold and silver fly away!"

Fight hard against a hasty temper. Anger will come, but resist it strongly. A spark may set a house on fire. A fit of passion may give you cause to mourn all the days of your life. Never revenge an injury.

"He that revengeth knows no rest;
The meek possess a peaceful breast."

If you have an enemy, act kindly to him, and make him your friend. You may not win him over at once, but try again. Let one kindness be followed by another, till you have compassed your end. By little and by little great things are completed.

"Water falling day by day,
Wears the hardest rock away."

And so repeated kindnesses will soften a heart of stone.

Whatever you do, do it willingly. A boy that is whipped at school never learns his lessons well. A man that is compelled to work, cares not how badly it is performed. He that pulls off his coat cheerfully, strips up his clothes in earnest, and sings while he works, is the man for me.

"A cheerful spirit gets on quick;
A grumbler in the mud will stick."

Evil thoughts are worse enemies than lions and tigers, for we can get out of the way of wild beasts—but bad thoughts win their way everywhere. Keep your heads and hearts full of good thoughts, that bad thoughts may not find room.

"Be on your guard, and strive and pray,
To drive all evil thoughts away."

Faith.

Not long ago, a great drought prevailed in some of the midland counties of England. Several pious farmers, who dreaded lest their expected crops should perish for lack of moisture, agreed, with their pastor and others to have special prayer, to petition God to send the needed rain. They met accordingly, and the minister coming early, had time to exchange kindly greetings with several of his flock. He was surprised to see one of his little Sunday school scholars bending under the weight of a huge old family umbrella. "Why, Mary," said he, "what made you bring that umbrella on such a lovely morning as this?"

The child, gazing on his face with evident surprise at the inquiry, replied, "Why, sir, I thought as we were going to pray to God for rain, I'd be sure to want the umbrella."

The minister smiled on her, and the services soon after commenced. While they were praying, the wind rose: the sky, before so clear and bright, became overcast with clouds, and soon, amidst vivid flashes of lightning and heavy peals of thunder, a storm of rain deluged the country. Those who attended the service, unprepared to receive the blessings they sought, reached their homes drenched and soaked, whilst Mary and her minister returned together under the family umbrella.

And the Lord's warning breathed so tenderly,
When that mysterious anguish dewed his brow,
Under the olives of Gethsemane.
Heart stricken from that presence Peter went,
And the young morning in the orient
Saw with her dewy eye the deep offence
Blotted by gushing tears of penitence!

The First and Second Adam.

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

"And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."—1 Cor. 15. 45

Whiting, in his translation, renders the above passage thus: "The first man Adam became a living being, the last Adam a life-giving spirit."

The passage expresses the analogy and difference between the two persons named. Both are called Adam; hence a likeness. One was made a living soul, the other a quickening spirit; hence a difference.—These two points we shall notice in this subject.

1. Adam the first was made a living soul,—a living being. How he was thus made, we are informed in his history, Gen. 1: 26, 27,—"And God said: Let us make man in our image, after our likeness . . . . so God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Chap. 2: 7;—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul;" or living being.

It is plainly true, that the words made, created, and formed, in this connection, have the same meaning. Should it be said that the word created must differ in meaning from the words made and formed, because it sometimes has the meaning of something created from nothing; we reply that this word is applied to the woman; and we are informed that she was made of the rib taken from Adam. The words image and likeness are used in this connection, not to express good character, or moral likeness, for that would imply that there was an immoral likeness in which God might have created man. The connection shows that these words express the difference between the formation of man and the formation of the other beings which the Lord had made. After the formation of the fish of the sea, fowl of the air, beasts and creeping things of the earth, it is said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." This is expressive of the contrast between the form of the man and the form of the beast.

These terms are used in the same sense in the following places; Gen. 5: 1, 3;—"In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him. . . . And Adam . . . begat a son in his own likeness, after his image." 1 Cor. 11: 7;—"For a man indeed [illegible] cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God." Not is [illegible] morally, but so in his formation, [illegible], compared with all [illegible] connected with this earth [illegible] made. Rom. 8: 3;—God [illegible] Son in the likeness of sinful flesh." Phil. 2: 7;—"Was made in the likeness of men." Surely, the word likeness [illegible] places, does not refer to [illegible]. Besides, moral character is based on life, thought and action. Therefore [illegible] no moral character before he lived. But he was created in the image of God, and that, of course, before he lived. Therefore the word image can have no reference to character, but to his [illegible] form. After he was made in the [illegible] of God, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul.

[illegible] objection can be raised to this [illegible] that God has no [illegible]. He is represented [illegible] as having the form of [illegible] God is a spirit? [illegible] finished. But [illegible] material besides flesh and bones.
[illegible]

The last Adam was made a quickening spirit. He was the seed of David according to the flesh. He was born of a woman; hence the son of man. He was begotten of the Holy Ghost; hence the Son of God: divinity and humanity harmoniously blended. It was necessary that he, by whom the worlds were made, should come into the world in this manner in order to stand in the relation of the second Adam to redeem what the first lost. Jesus assumed the form of man—took man's place in the flesh, and under the law. By so doing he could honor the law in his obedience, and then could lay down his life for the sinner; and so answer the demands of the law against the sinner, as that he can be saved on condition he believes in Jesus and accepts his offering. God can be just and justify him that believeth in his Son.

John 5: 21;—"For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Verse 26;—"For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." He is the resurrection and life. In him is eternal life. He will quicken the dead, and raise them to life eternal, who believe in him. Hence he is a quickening spirit.

2. The first Adam was placed on probation to form a character for himself, and by so doing to secure eternal life offered to him. Had he obeyed all the laws of his being he would have been entitled to life and immortality. The principle of probation on which Adam was placed was obey, and live, or, disobey and cease to live,—obey and remain a living soul, or, disobey and cease to be a living soul. Death, in all its forms, has come on man for sin. Adam was told that, "because thou hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, thou shalt not eat of it," etc., "unto dust shalt thou return." Said the apostle,—"The body is dead because of sin." Adam, by his sin, failed of eternal life, and lost every thing God gave him. He lost the garden, the tree of life, the earth as it was when God made it, peace with his Creator, and his life. When he died, his spirit returned to God who gave it; consequently he lost that, and he returned to the ground from whence he was taken, and had nothing left.

So Christ, the last Adam, as man, was placed on probation. He, too, formed a character for himself. He was submitted to trial, to temptation, and to suffering. In the midst of all he kept all the law to which he was subject. The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. See Heb. 2: 10. He was thus perfected, as the faith of Abraham was made perfect by his works. He had faith before the trial referred to, but it remained to be proved that his faith would endure the trial. So Christ was perfect before any severe suffering, still by his suffering was his character known and established. He was, therefore, entitled to life. He could claim, in justice, an exemption from death. Justice said, he shall not die. But had he done nothing more, he would have secured life for himself, and for no more. Having perfected himself, he became a proper subject to help others out of sin and death. Hence is it said, "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him."—Heb. 5: 9. As by the first Adam's "disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one (the last Adam) many shall be made righteous."—Rom. 5: 19. The first man's sin prepared the way for the sin and ruin of his offspring. On the other hand, the righteousness of Christ has prepared the way for their salvation.

Christ laid down his life for the sinner. Not for himself, not as a martyr, but to satisfy the just demands of the law against the sinner. Justice says, let the sinner die. Mercy says, let him live. Not, however, to the expense of justice, but in harmony with it. The law demands the life of the sinner. Christ was not a sinner, hence the law had no such demand on him.

The following are some of the scriptures which show that Christ's death was to meet the demand of the law against us. "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us. For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."—Rom. 5: 6, 8. "Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification."—Rom. 4: 25. "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us."—1 Cor. 5: 8. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins."—1 John 4: 10. "Who his own self bear our sins in his own body on the tree."—1 Peter 2: 24. "Because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bear the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors."—Isa. 53: 12. "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—2 Cor. 5: 21. "Christ the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth."

By faith we have reconciliation to God [illegible]
[illegible] Christ gave his life to meet the de[illegible] of the law against the sinner [illegible]

ed, the law requires his life. Christ having obeyed, his death can be set to the sinner's account. So it is, and the law is satisfied. Hence God can be just and justify him that believeth in Jesus. So mercy and truth meet together; righteousness and peace embrace each other.—Psa. 85: 10.

For the Crisis.

We're Passing Away.

AIR.—"Carrier Dove."

We're passing away, but we're homeward bound;
We shall meet where the holy ones dwell,
Where the sweet gliding waters of life are found,
And the songs of the ransomed swell.
Here, bitter drops flow in our sweetest cups,
And thorns are in all our flowers,
But we'll drink from the fount where angels sup,
And roam 'mid thornless bowers.

We have tempests to brave, and rough surges to breast,
We have sighing, and sadness, and gloom;
But lightly they sit, as a gossamer vest,
For we're going where joys ever bloom.
Oft the unbidden tear forth in bitterness steals,
And the form goes low bending with pain,
And the spirit is pressed with the woes that it feels,
But, oh! why should we ever complain?

We have trials too, but we'll leave them all
At the gate of our Eden home,
Why speak of the pain, of the thorn, of the gall,
When the glory so soon is to come?
We shall meet our King on his bridal morn,
Who a costly ransom hath given,
To waft us away from the fires that burn,
To the glory-clad mountains of heaven.

Then, brother, cheer up and gather thy wings
For thy long-sought Eden home;
For hearken! the trumpet's glad echo rings,
And the angels are bidding thee come.
We're passing away, but we're homeward bound,
We shall meet where the holy ones dwell,
Where the sweet gliding waters of life are found,
And the heart never sighs Farewell!

From "The Gift of Power"

Christian Obligations.

BY REV. S. H. PLATT.

Here we are met with the plea, "But it is fashionable" As if the christian must follow the dictates of fashion, however opposed to gospel principles, and into whatever labyrinth of inconsistency the fickle goddess may lead. Fashion, in the estimation of many, seems a kind of magic crucible, which possesses ample power to transmute whatever may come within its influence into the very gold of righteousness. So that, whatever principle may be sacrificed in the pursuit of her gaudy bubbles, it is all right, because, forsooth, "it is the fashion." Away with such morality as this! It is the moral code of the arch enemy himself! and yet it is the main reason given, by a great portion of those who profess the religion of the cross, for violating as plain and express a command as can be found in the Bible "Is it not right, then, (says one) to follow the fashion?" Here the question arises, How far is it the christian's duty to follow the customs and fashions of the world? Mark the phraseology! It is not how far may he thus conform, etc; but how far is it his duty to conform, etc. We have purposely put the question in this form, that we may be able better to meet a wide spread and destructive sentiment, and a sophism of the adversary, which is doing fearful execution with christian consistency.

This "may do," or "may not do," covers a wide field in the estimation of many They seem to have the idea that God has left a large portion of the trifling affairs of life optional! But in his sight, there is never a may without a MUST! In other words, nothing is left strictly optional. Everything is stern, unyielding duty, one way or the other. In reference to everything, it must be said, it is our duty to do, or it is our duty not to do. There is no neutral ground, which the christian may occupy or not, and be equally innocent in either case. If we may innocently do, it is our duty to do, and our guilt if we do not, and vice versa!

How far, then, is it our duty to conform to the customs and fashions of the world? Ans. As far as we can in things strictly indifferent, and when no compromise of principle is involved. Further than this no one can innocently go under any pretense. If we adopt any other conclusion than this, there will be no landmarks left. The whole field will be open to the caprice of every one, with no limits, and no safeguards: for if we say that principle may be violated at all, every one will be at liberty to say how far he may violate it; and thus it may be carried from one degree of transgression to another, till the whole principle is swept away.

No sacrifice of principle is ever necessary for usefulness; for consistency is the very soul of usefulness.

Another reason, nearly akin to the one just considered, is, "I wear them because others do." As if companionship in iniquity possessed a purifying tendency. If five hundred men combine together to pillage and steal, is it any the less sin for each, than if he alone were guilty? If so, then the quickest way to annihilate sin in our world is to all be as bad as we can, so that the large number of transgressors may make us all innocent in transgression.

Between the prevalence of any wrong [illegible]
[illegible]

wrong in every transgression of a Divine law, and whether that transgression be few or many, each one is transgression still. Wrong is wrong at all times, and under all circumstances. And "every transgression and disobedience will receive its just recompense of reward." If a multitude of transgressions can absolve us from the duty of obedience, the wonder is that the whole world has not long ago received complete absolution from all duty, and all law become obsolete. But "thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil," is the caution of Wisdom, and the counsel of safety.

Others say, "It is well enough for those who make a high profession to avoid them; but for ordinary christians, it makes but little difference." I answer, if it is inconsistent for them, it is equally inconsistent for you; I say equally inconsistent; for, if you do not make such a profession, you ought to, and hence, in view of your obligations to God and your own soul, you are just as inconsistent as they. Besides, if, as you say, "it makes but little difference," that little is the fearful one of obedience or disobedience. Let eternity say whether such a difference is little or great. "But we do not expect to obey in every little particular." Then, I reply, you are founding your hopes of heaven upon a deathbed repentance, concerning these little particulars; or you are just as really presuming upon God's mercy to save you, notwithstanding these defects, as is the believer in universal salvation.

* * * * * * *

3d. Because its first principle and sustaining energy is pride of heart.

This proposition will be stoutly denied. Few will acknowledge a care for such ornaments, much less pride in them. Yet no amount of persuasion will induce them to lay them aside. And if the propriety of discontinuing their use be but hinted, the impatient or defiant glance, or scornful smile, prove how little they are regarded. Little as it is, they will sooner forfeit the esteem, and pain the hearts of fellow-christians, or their ministers, than forego it.

Others assert that they wear them "for the sake of the giver." But would they use a lottery or theatre ticket because it was a gift? Would they wear a stolen watch because a present? Why, then make so great a distinction, when there is no difference? He who uses money for such purposes robs God, and she who wears the purchased article shares in the iniquity The truth is, this very trust in such shallow pretenses proves conclusively that the love of the thing lies beneath, and, however much it may be concealed from the individual, pride and pride alone, is the foundation, as the universal judgment of mankind asserts—there let the stigma rest, and let them who will assume it.

Others wear them, "because they look so much better with them." I have supposed that when the poet said,

"Beauty when unadorned is adorned the most,"

he uttered a philosophical truth, as well as a gem of rhetoric, but it seems that now that truth is obsolete, and beauty needs a little fixing up to be passable. "Oh no, the really beautiful do not need such things, but plain kind of people!" Well, let us have a distinct understanding, only the homely, then, need wear such adornments, so that the fact of wearing them is to be considered as an acknowledgment that you are—not beautiful! But is the reason valid? If so, let us act upon the suggestion, and bid our ministers to preach only when the truth can have such important accessories as good looks always give, and if the comeliness is not there by the stamp of nature, why, let the jeweler supply the defect How much more graceful a jeweled hand would look, waving in oratorical gesticulations during each polished period of a discourse, than the plain, unadorned hands of our present ministers. What a vast improvement, too, might be made by just supplanting the plain bosom buttons with the golden studs, and adorning it with a splendid pin! How nicely, too, a heavy chain would contrast with the jetty color of his vest, and how brilliantly the golden-headed cane would flash back the reflected rays from the jeweled rings. Oh, that would be superb! And with what a grace he would then rise, and preach from "Come out from among them, and be ye separate." etc., after singing that beautiful hymn.

"While in this region here below,
No other good will I pursue;
I'll bid this world of noise and show,
With all its glittering snares, adieu."

And if the world should dare to hint that he was not just right, every member could at once reply, "O, he looks so much better!" and this would be the spell that should effectually silence all objections. But, seriously, christian, can you afford to "look better" externally, at the expense of the guilt necessarily induced in breaking a command of God?

Another wears them "because she likes to see them." So may she also like to see a dance, or a play at the theatre; but would she therefore dance, or attend the theatre? Yet these are not as plainly prohibited as is the very course she is pursuing in wearing these adornments. "Oh! consistency, thou art a jewel!"

4th. Because it is depreciating their [illegible] of the world. [illegible] as the world is [illegible]

[illegible] principle, and makes the inconsistent professor [illegible] beneath the scourge of its ridicule. When we were of the world, we regarded such practices as unbecoming in the christian; and, rest assured, the world is no more lenient, or erring in its judgment now, than then. The unconverted and the ill-disposed love to make such fashionable professors the scape-goats for their iniquity, and they always intrench themselves behind their defects, for safety from the shafts of conviction or remorse. The church feels this in all her borders, and hence arises the despondent cry—"We can never prosper with such professors in our midst." A monstrous wrong is here! and common honesty ought to lead such professors to forsake their evil practices, or leave the church, that she may no longer be stigmatized by their example.

We have before referred to the importance of consistent christian example, and here recall it, in order to present it as our chief reliance in the aggressive movements of christianity. As such, God designed it ever to be considered, and hence he so strongly insists upon it. Next to the direct agency of his own Spirit, this is the hope and the dependence of the church, and the salvation of the world. Whatever, then, mars this example, undermines, to the same extent (if not the foundation stones, at least,) the supporting pillars of the world's hope.

5th. Because it is a sinful use of the Lord's property.

We here assume that no one has a moral right to spend a single penny, except in accordance with God's will. Is it, then, in harmony with his will to violate his own command? "Whose adorning let it not be," etc.

"The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." "The silver and the gold are his," and you, poor mortal, have nothing, absolutely nothing in your own right. That which you possess is only loaned for a time, and if your Lord, when he shall come, finds that you have squandered the means which, if faithfully employed, might have saved priceless souls, fearful will be the account of your stewardship! * * * *

How few there are but what have the price of a soul upon their person! If you knew that every $18 which you give would save a soul, how would you spend your money? Yet statistics show this to be a fact.

O christian! consider this matter well: eternal interests may rest upon the use of a single dime!

The Wall of Self-Denial.

This image among the Life Thoughts of Rev. H. W. Beecher, should lead many a one to such musings as these. Yes, it is even so. This is a wall of which I have thought too little; one which I have never constructed, or kept up with sufficient care. By such neglect, I see that I have suffered great losses of most valuable goods. Often, as I may say in figure, has a valuable beast escaped from my pastures, and often have I suffered from the incursions of depredators upon my garden and fields. More than half that I might have now been worth in the better treasures of life has, I doubt not, been taken from me in this way. But there is more to regret. I have been so long accustomed to a culpable neglect in this matter, that I can hardly hope to establish myself in a true practice. Much have I meditated upon the subject; many good resolutions have I made; but temptations, coming as old friends and eager for their usual entertainment, are with great difficulty resisted. Habits, running in the old ruts, carry me along so much more pleasantly than any attempts to keep new tracks, I am too often persuaded to give up the contest and risk all possible consequences. This I know to be unreasonable, unmanly, even foolish; but still I find it difficult to establish any considerable amendment of practice.

These thoughts are sufficiently humiliating; and they ought to have a salutary effect. But how true the bitter reflection of the poet Young!

"'Tis not in folly, not to scorn a fool,
And scarce in human wisdom to do more."

Is there no divine wisdom within our reach, by which we can do, as well as know, what the merest common sense so obviously requires?

Let us add, as a farther inducement to the stern efforts that may be required for our [illegible] endeavor, Self-denial is not merely a wall, the erection and keeping up of which is absolutely necessary to the security of all our best possessions; it is a tonic and stimulant of our spiritual existence, indispensable to our efficiency in every good work. Many a one, whose life is of comparatively small value, might, by the practice of this single virtue, be raised up to the dignity of a benefactor of his race. Self-indulgence, in even small matters, is a perpetual interference with the real discharge of the higher duties of life. With various customary and mechanical functions, it may have little to do; but wherever mental energies are concerned, or stern volitions needed, the absence of this ministering spirit is a drawback of the most serious character.

Especially is this the case in regard to pious activities, where conscience plays so large a part. A sense of habitual sinning in the refusal to deny ourselves, seems to erect an almost impassable barrier between us and the sphere of activity where the presence of God must be felt. There is a sense of incongruity between a sinner's character and a saint's work, which can hardly be for a moment resisted. Then, too, we cannot avoid the apprehension, that in all such works we require Divine assistance; and that we are [illegible] from God by [illegible]

[illegible] philosopher said, [illegible] self-renunciation alone can the entrance upon real life be said to begin;" and, of course, any signal failure here must issue in everlasting death.—Protestant Churchman.

How to bear Little Troubles.

There is a kind of narrowness into which, in our every-day experiences, we are apt to fall, and against which we should most carefully guard. When a man who is in perfect health has a wound inflicted upon him,—a wound in his foot, a cut in his finger, a pain in his hand—he is almost always sure to feel, even though it be only a small part that is suffering, and the suffering itself be unworthy of the name, that the perfect soundness of all the rest of his body counts as nothing; and a little annoyance is magnified into a universal pain. Only a single point may be hurt, and yet he feels himself clothed with uneasiness, or with a garment of torture. So God may send ten thousand mercies upon us, but if there happen to be only one discomfort among them, one little worry, or fret, or bicker, all the mercies and all the comforts are forgotten, and count as nothing! One little trouble is enough to set them all aside! There may be an innumerable train of mercies which, if they were stopped one by one, and questioned, would seem like angels bearing God's gifts in their hands! But we forget them all, in the remembrance of the most trivial inconvenience! A man may go about all the day long—discontented, fretting, out of humor—who, at evening, on asking himself the question, "What has ailed me to-day?" may be filled with shame on being unable to tell! The annoyance is so small and slight that he cannot recognise it; yet, its power over him is almost incredible. He is equally ashamed with the cause and the result.

We may fall into such a state merely through indifference, and remain there simply because we have fallen into it, and make no effort to get out. When a man starts wrong early in the morning, unless he is careful to set himself right before he has gone far, he will hardly be able to straighten out his crookedness until noon or afternoon—if haply then, for a man is like a large ship—he cannot turn round in a small space, and must make his sweep in a large curve. If we wake up with a heavenly mind, we are apt to carry it with us through the day; but if we wake up with a fretful, peevish, discontented disposition, we are apt to carry that all the day, and all the next day too! I have comforted myself, and risen out of this state of mind, by saying to myself, "Well, you are in trouble; something has come upon you which is painful; but will you let it clasp its arms around you, and shut you in its embrace from the sight and touch of all the many other things that are accounted joys? Will you suffer yourself to be saddled and ridden by it?" It is well to remember that there is a way of overcoming present troubles by a remembrance of present mercies. The apostle Paul knew this, and so exhorted us to "look unto Jesus, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame." All that Christ had to bear, he bore patiently,—he carried his sorrow about with him as a very little thing. Why? Because of the "joy that was set before him!" O, let us apply the exhortation faithfully to ourselves; and when we are worried, and tempted to give way to vexation, let us seek a sweet relief in the thought of the blessedness that is set before us to be an inheritance for ever!—Beecher.

The First Printed Book.

It is a remarkable and most interesting fact, that the very first use to which the discovery of printing was applied, was the production of the Holy Bible. This was accomplished at Mentz, between the years 1450 and 1455. Guttenburg was the inventor of the art, and Faust, a goldsmith, furnished the necessary funds. Had it been a single page or even an entire sheet which was then produced, there might have been less occasion to have noticed it; but there was something in the whole character of the affair, which, if not unprecedented, rendered it singular in the usual current of human events. This Bible was in two folio volumes, which have been justly praised for the strength and beauty of the paper, the exactness of the register, and the lustre of the ink. The work contained twelve hundred and eighty-two pages, and being the first ever printed, of course involved a long period of time, and an immense amount of mental, manual, and mechanical labor; and yet, for a long time after it had been finished and offered for sale, not a single human being, save the artists themselves, knew how it had been accomplished.

Of the first printed Bible, eighteen copies are now known to be in existence, four of which are printed on vellum. Two of these are in England, one being in the Grenville collection. One is in the Royal Library of Berlin, and one in the Royal Library of Paris. Of the fourteen remaining copies, ten are in England—there being a copy in the libraries of Oxford, Edinburgh and London, and seven in the collections of different noblemen. The vellum copy has been sold as high as $1800.

Thus, as if to mark the noblest purpose to which the art would ever be applied, the first book printed with movable types was the Bible.—N. Y. Sun.

Reading for Youth.

Short Sermon for the Little Folks.

Many of our little friends have by some means given themselves a very foolish habit of making use of many words and phrases which are of no use to any one, and do not at all relieve the mind of the speaker. This practice is not only very foolish and silly, but it is decidedly wrong. Let me illustrate this by a case in point. Here is Harry Hills, a smart little boy of six or seven summers, loved by all who know him. His mother is our neighbor, and a low picket fence divides our gardens. A few days ago, while I was weeding a plot near the fence, I heard him exclaim impatiently:

"By jiminy, that's too mean."

I looked up and saw Harry, [illegible]

"What's too mean?" [illegible]

"Why, you [illegible] in the garden, and my rake caught in a root, and three of the teeth came out."

"Yes, Harry, I see; but suppose all the teeth had come out, [illegible] the rake broke so that it would be impossible to mend it, is that any reason you should swear about it?"

"But I didn't swear, I only said——"

"Yes, Harry, I am sorry to say you did. By jiminy, is just as much an oath as is any other. By any thing, no matter how small, is swearing, and the fact is you take an oath. Do you understand?"

Harry did, and the bright tears rolled down his cheeks as I talked to him of "little oaths," and showed him the step was small from these to the time when he would, without thinking, take the name of his Creator in vain.

Since that time I have not heard Harry use any word not necessary to show his meaning. Children, think of this, and remember to "swear not at all."—Independent.

Counsels to the Young.

Never be cast down by trifles. If a spider breaks his web twenty times, twenty times will he mend it again. Make up your mind to do a thing, and you will do it. Fear not if trouble comes upon you; keep up your spirits though the day may be a dark one.

"Troubles never last forever,
The darkest day will pass away!"

If the sun is going down, look up to the stars; if the earth is dark, keep your eyes on heaven. With God's presence and God's promise, a man or child may be cheerful.

"Never despair when fog's in the air,
A sunshiny morning will come without warning!"

Mind what you run after! Never be content with a bubble that will burst, or a firewood that will end in smoke and darkness. But that which you can keep, and which is worth keeping.

"Something sterling that will stay
When gold and silver fly away!"

Fight hard against a hasty temper. Anger will come, but resist it strongly. A spark may set a house on fire. A fit of passion may give you cause to mourn all the days of your life. Never revenge an injury.

"He that revengeth knows no rest;
The meek possess a peaceful breast."

If you have an enemy, act kindly to him, and make him your friend. You may not win him over at once, but try again. Let one kindness be followed by another, till you have compassed your end. By little and by little great things are completed.

"Water falling day by day,
Wears the hardest rock away."

And so repeated kindnesses will soften a heart of stone.

Whatever you do, do it willingly. A boy that is whipped at school never learns his lessons well. A man that is compelled to work, cares not how badly it is performed. He that pulls off his coat cheerfully, strips up his clothes in earnest, and sings while he works, is the man for me.

"A cheerful spirit gets on quick;
A grumbler in the mud will stick."

Evil thoughts are worse enemies than lions and tigers, for we can get out of the way of wild beasts—but bad thoughts win their way everywhere. Keep your heads and hearts full of good thoughts, that bad thoughts may not find room.

"Be on your guard, and strive and pray,
To drive all evil thoughts away."

Faith.

Not long ago, a great drought prevailed in some of the midland counties of England. Several pious farmers, who dreaded lest their expected crops should perish for lack of moisture, agreed with their pastor and others to have special prayer, to petition God to send the needed rain. They met accordingly; and the minister coming early, had time to exchange kindly greetings with several of his flock. He was surprised to see one of his little Sunday school scholars bending under the weight of a huge old family umbrella. "Why, Mary," said he, "what made you bring that umbrella on such a lovely morning as this?"

The child, gazing on his face with evident surprise at the inquiry, replied, "Why, sir, I thought as we were going to pray to God for rain, I'd be sure to want the umbrella."

The minister smiled on her, and the services soon after commenced. While they were praying, the wind rose: the sky, before so clear and bright, became overcast with clouds, and soon, amidst vivid flashes of lightning and heavy peals of thunder, a storm of rain deluged the country. Those who attended the service, unprepared to receive the blessings they sought, reached their homes drenched and soaked, whilst Mary and her minister returned together under the family umbrella.

The Far Off Land.

There is a far off land, they say,
A fairer land than this;
That never knew a dreary day
To dim its hallowed bliss.

It is a land of love, they say,
Where Hate doth ne'er defame;
Where Slander's tongue ne'er dims the ray
Of dawning life's bright name.

The pure and good of earth there dwell
Amid the angel throng,
And ever on the breezes swell
Their notes of magic song.

It hath a shore, a golden shore,
A tide of silver waves,
Which flow a smiling ocean o'er,
That hath no human graves.

It hath a river, clear and wide,
Begirt with scenes of joy;
All through the year, on either side,
Are fruits that never cloy.

Its city fair of gold is made,
All earth's outshining far;
Its gates with purest pearl inlaid,
Beam like a blazing star.

Triumphant swells the song of love
Along the perfumed air;
From all around, beneath, above,—
For all are holy there.

No cause of woe is ever known,
Disease and pain are fled,
For sin that happy clime hath flown—
None mourn the early dead.

And Beauty reigneth there for aye,
And clothes each form with grace,
Of holy Love's divine array,
That time can ne'er deface.

O for a home within that land,
All joys of earth I'll give!
And there to join the holy band,
A life for Christ I'll live.

The Three-fold Blessing of Immortality.

BY L. P. JUDSON.

In our common translation of the Scriptures, we have the word immortality used five times. In 1 Tim. 1 : 16 we are told that the Personage of whom Paul was speaking; "whom no man hath seen, nor can see:" only had immortality. In 2 Tim. 1 : 10, we are told that Christ has brought it to light. In Rom. 2 : 7, eternal life is promised to those who seek for it by patient continuance in well-doing. In 1 Cor. 15 : 53 we are told when we shall put it on; that it will be when the last trump shall sound; when the righteous dead shall be raised and the living righteous changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; and in the 54th verse we are told what shall be brought to pass, when we shall have put on immortality; that then we obtain the victory over death and the grave.

Now this being the entire use of the term in the Bible, as we have it, our friends have been accustomed to construct, what I regard as an incontrovertible argument, showing that God only had that attribute originally; that Christ only hath as yet attained it; that man must seek for it in a proper way, if he would attain it; that it is a blessing foreign to man and that he must put it on; that he will put it on only in the resurrection state; and that then and then only, will man have gained the victory over death and the grave.

Here is consistency. Here are considerations that our opponents have not yet disposed of. This position they have not yet taken from us. I have seen no thoroughly [illegible] carefully labored effort to dislodge us [illegible]. Yet there is a moral obligation resting upon them to meet this point with all the weight of the interests involved in the subject.—By its relations to the honor due to Christ; by its relations to other doctrines; by its relations to the consistency and success of the church; they ought to examine these facts and answer these arguments fearlessly, candidly, conclusively; or else acknowledge that we have the truth.

[illegible] as the position is only [illegible] in [illegible] and its [illegible] lation realized, without referring to the language in which the Scriptures were written. The word immortality is not used in that portion of the Scriptures which was written in Hebrew. Only in the Greek, do we find the word. In this, we find three modes of expression, signifying perpetuity of existence in the future. The eternal life; the uncorruptness; and the cannot-die nature, or immortality in its true or correct sense.

The first of these is used many times, but the terms do not necessarily imply immortality. Life continued eternally would be eternal life; though the person did not possess a nature that could not die. This is said to be the gift of God through Christ. Christ is the almoner of this bounty of the Father; the dispenser of this good. He being the sole personage from whom it can be obtained, how are those to keep alive their own souls eternally, who have nothing to do with him? He having promised it only to character that is definitely pointed out, how are those to obtain it who possess an entirely opposite character? Here is another of our strong positions, to which we invite the attention of those who differ from us. The Bible says (Ps. 22; 29) that "none can keep alive his own soul." Yet there are those who say the soul cannot die. But the controversy is not between them and us; it is between them and the Bible: between them and God. We stand only as God's helpers, as "workers together with God." But, leaving this plain contradiction for those to settle with the Bible who assume a position so directly at variance with it; we ask those christians who are in the light, to receive and enjoy the rich consolation which this feature of our hope is calculated to afford. Christ is the depositary of eternal life. No one else has it to confer. He has promised it to those who love and serve him. The Father has committed all judgment unto him, and he judges us worthy to receive it through grace. How sure, then, is the Christian, of living forever. Because Christ lives, he shall live also. But this is only one feature of the blessing in the immortal state. Others are in reserve.

Another term used to designate perpetuity of existence after the resurrection, signifies the exact and total opposite of corruption. This is twice rendered immortality, and is found in six other places in the Scriptures. It is used (Titus 2 : 7) to designate the purity of the doctrines we are to teach. What an admonition is here; and especially to ministers! We should seek to have our doctrines as free from corruption, as we hope to have our bodies in the resurrection state. How important that we be disciples, learners of Christ. In Eph. 6 . 24 it is used to express the quality of our love to Christ. It is there rendered "sincerity." In 2 Tim. 1 : 10 it expresses the nature of the immortality Christ has brought to light in the gospel. In our present state, we are groaning in bondage and inquiring in every direction for deliverance from this corruption. The medical resources of the world are taxed, the skill of man is brought into requisition; but, alas! it is of little avail. A dark cloud hangs over our horizon. The elements are pressing us to death. But a light comes streaming in amid this gloom. The gospel hope is let down to the joy of the believing. Christ has brought life and incorruptness to light in the good news. Glorious news; joyful tidings, this. Man can now not only know that he may live, but also have an incorrupt nature: a spiritual body, like his Master's, the whole tendencies of which are to life.

Well might the apostle, as in Rom. 2 : 7, present this before us as an object to be sought. How grand and sublime the object of pursuit! Incorruption. How pleasant the way! By patient continuance in well doing. How consistent and reasonable that he should say as in 1 Cor. 15 : 50, where the term is again used, that corruption cannot inherit incorruption. That man does not, and "CANNOT inherit" or possess both natures, at one and the same time! Yet how frequently are we taught that man is both mortal and immortal: That he has two distinctly opposite natures! The Lord open the eyes of such christians to see where they contradict the apostle. In verse 42 we are shown that it is not until the resurrection that we receive it. In verse 53, we are told that we must put it on; and verse 54 teaches us that at that time we shall obtain the victory. Here is the entire use of the term in the New Testament. How clear and definite the instruction, that we do not, and cannot possess this nature until the resurrection! But here again, we must leave the theologian of the common view, to contend with the Bible. The battle is the Lord's. Our present work is, to feed the sheep—to offer to christians the [illegible] comfort the hope of the gospel affords. If [illegible] we have the Spirit of Christ, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken our mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in us. Our bodies are all that need immortalizing. Immortalize the body, and you have eternal-soul as the certain result. This is the work of the Spirit. To give us spiritual, incorrupt organizations, or bodies, instead of or corrupt ones. Christ said, The water he would give, should be in them a well of water springing up into everlasting life. This had reference to the blessings of the Spirit those should receive that believed on him. We have here a splendid view of our spiritual or resurrection state. The whole tendencies there will be to life, as they are here to death. As here, we should certainly die, unless a power is introduced, sufficient to overcome the tendencies to death; so there, we shall certainly live, unless a foreign power is introduced, sufficient to overcome the natural tendencies to life. God, angels and other good beings, will wish us to live. The devil and all his emissaries will be destroyed; it is therefore certain we shall live forever. Here is another feature of the blessing of the immortal state. May it be seen and appreciated by the church.

Another, and the last feature of the blessing to which I referred, is from the use of a term which signifies a nature which cannot die. This is the only term properly rendered immortality, and is used only three times in the Scriptures. It is found in 1 Tim. 6 : 16, where we are taught that He only hath it, "whom no man hath seen, nor can see." The second and third instances of its use, are in 1 Cor. 15 : 53, 54. We are there told that this mortal must put it on, and taught the complete,—the perfect victory, that will be achieved by the saints, through grace, when this nature shall have been "put on." Then shall the shout go up with emphatic consistency, and blend in sweet harmony with the appreciative song of praise that shall come from the lips of the redeemed host, in honor of Christ as "the Resurrection and the Life.

How passing strange, if the present immortality of the soul is a doctrine to be believed and taught, and is as important as christendom would have us believe, that this word is only used in these three instances in the Bible, and that in these connections. But again I must leave the controversialist with the Bible to settle his controversies. Mine is the work of feasting the soul on this heavenly manna. Come ye who have ears to hear and hearts to believe and feel the power of this blessed truth. Take into your hearts the indescribable happiness this hope offers you. Are you obeying Christ? Are you seeking this blessing by patient continuance in well doing? It is yours to enjoy,—now in hope, hereafter in full fruition. Look then at the threefold blessing.

Christ, the judge, takes his seat on the white throne. He now remembers all those who have suffered with and for him. All the despised and hated ones of earth. This one drowned. That one burned. This eaten by wild beasts. That starved in prison. Yea, all—all—are remembered by him. His eye is on their sleeping dust. He is about to speak with the voice that will cause them all to awake. Angels behold! What a moment is that. He speaks. His sentence is that his suffering ones are worthy of eternal life. He gives it as their right through mercy and grace. He bids them come forth to enjoy it. Instantly, the Spirit with which they died moves with his energizing power. The graves are opened. Winding sheets are exchanged for robes of purer white. The sleeping saint being borne to the tomb, leaves his coffin in the hands of astonished bearers, and stands up in shining glory. Another instant and here and there amid that crowd, as elsewhere, are seen shining ones shouting victory over the evils of mortality. On the bright bosom of a calm ocean may also be seen those saints that slumbered beneath its blue waters resplendent with the same lustrous glory that is seen amid the angelic host and around the presence of the stern but beneficent Judge. All are gathered before him, and presented to the eternal Father, with eternal life conferred, as the judgment of the Son; and spiritual or incorrupt bodies, as the work of the Spirit. The Father looks, and loves, and blesses. Approving the judgment of his Son, and the work of the Spirit, he takes from his own athanasia or cannot-die nature, of absolute immortality, and stamps every child of Christ with the same attribute as to the future. "Neither can they die any more" from that period, onward. They are thus honored and blessed and receive in addition the glories that encircle the Father; that surround the Son, and adorn the Spirit. Now, shining above the brightness of the sun, and blessed of the Father, Christ takes them to inherit the kingdom prepared for them at the foundation of the world.

How incomprehensibly glorious, is the blessing of immortality! How reasonable that God should withhold this solemn attribute, to bestow it only on tested virtue. This truly is a gift, worthy of a Christ to purchase—worthy of a God to bestow.

"The Union Movement:"

A MEETING OF THE LAY-MEMBERS OF THE VARIOUS CHURCHES OF THE TOWN OF UNITY, ON DEC. 8, 1858.

CHAPTER II.

The following is a report of the deliberations of the six preachers in the town of Unity, in view of their salaries being suspended after the first day of January, 1859. We shall designate them by the designations of their different churches, as follows: Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Christian, Episcopalian and Lutheran.

Brother Episcopalian being called to the chair, and brother Lutheran appointed secretary, the meeting was opened by the following prayer by brother Baptist:

"O Lord our God! we, thy dependent and erring creatures, have met, we trust, in thy name, with honesty of purpose, and an ardent desire to know thy will, relative to the union of thy people. If it be thy will that we ever should 'see eye to eye,' wilt thou enable us to discover it at this important crisis, and also enable us to determine the scriptural ground of union, that we may unite upon it. May we be guided by the wisdom from above. May we have the mind and spirit of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ: to whom, with thyself, be everlasting praises. Amen."

The chairman arose and stated the object of the meeting, as follows:

Brethren:—You have seen the report of the lay members' meeting, held in our town, in the "Christian Age." You are aware of the contents of that report, and that the matters therein set forth, are of such a nature, that we are compelled to act in some way. Said report, and our peculiar situation, are the matters that demand our attention. I hope, therefore, that you will express yourselves freely on these matters.

Presbyterian. I have looked over the novel proceedings of the members of our respective churches, and from every point in which I can view the subject, I am unable to view it in any other light than an unprecedented species of contempt of ministerial authority, such as should be rebuked in the sharpest manner. How to give them such a rebuke is the question.

Lutheran. I concur with the brother in his remarks; and in not only what he has said, but I must say further, that there is an insinuation of our dishonesty in the report alluded to, that I am not willing to lie under. In withdrawing our salaries, it is implied that we are the cause of all the divisions—that we can effect union, and that withdrawing our support will compel us to do it. Now, it appears to me, that they should be compelled to withdraw the imputation.

Methodist. I fully concur with these sentiments. I think the course pursued, finds no equal in Church history. I am fully aware where all the blame lies, so far as my church is concerned. It grows out of the doctrine of lay delegation—a doctrine that should have been crushed in the bud. There is now no telling where its ruinous effects will lead to. I have it in my mind to bring my church-members to their senses. I have the power to exclude every one of them, sell the house and return the funds to the Conference, and I am tempted to do it.

Episcopalian. Gentlemen, I see no end to this thing. But I hope nothing will be done rashly. Yet, I can not say that I can see what course to pursue. The truth is, our wise men have long seen that the tendency of many Protestant systems is, to destroy all ministerial authority. This unwarrantable and anarchical step, I fear, is but the prelude of many woes. I almost doubt the right of "private judgment." How Romanists would laugh at us, to see, that in the place of our ruling the members of our churches, they rule us! This is beyond endurance.

Baptist. Brethren, I hope you are not so disconcerted as to feel a disposition to renounce the right of private judgment. If you are, I wish it distinctly understood that such a step receives no sympathy from me. I am a Protestant. The fathers in the Baptist Church suffered too much for the right of private judgment, for me to turn traitor and renounce it. The gentleman thinks Romanists will laugh at our churches ruling us. I should prefer letting them laugh forever, to ruling after their model. If the Romanists in the United States were at once to stop the support of the priesthood, which comes from the honest, poor, hard-laboring men and women, the effects would be [illegible] in telling us, we are [illegible] the respective members of our churches. This they could do any day, if they knew it. The priests rule them by ignorance.

Methodist. Brethren, I see that our church is more wisely arranged than any other. You see that I have power to compel my members into measures or exclude every one of them, and sell their house. By this means, I shall stop them in their career.

Episcopalian. Brother Methodist, I think you are mistaken about this power, though I confess, according to the rules of your church, you could exercise it. But suppose you should, what would be the result? Would it bring your members to terms? By no means. Here is Mr. Christian, though in the same situation touching his support with the rest of us; but by his preaching union, has brought about this state of things, and has infused his union sentiments into many of the members of our churches. Now you may exclude your members, but they and many citizens with them, will regard it as an act of injustice, and turn round and join Mr. C.'s church, and what will you gain?

Methodist. I have long seen the tendency of Mr. C.'s doctrine, and warned my members not to hear it.

Baptist. Yes, and the more you have warned them not to hear it, the more they wanted to hear, and the more they would hear.

Christian. Brethren, some of you seem to attach some blame to me, but I think, if you look over the matter carefully, you will see that I am not at all censurable. I admit that my preaching may have had a tendency to bring things to a crisis, but the trouble was coming, and would have reached you sooner or later, if I had not been in the world. Division was here before I preached here, and all its evil consequences; and while I am free to admit, that things might have slumbered if I had said nothing, I do not admit that any one would have been benefited by the delay.

Baptist. Brethren, I think we are uselessly wasting time in disputing about who was the cause of bringing the present difficulty up. The matter is up; our support will be cut off in a few days, for the resolution is passed, and our churches are determined to stand to it. We hold ourselves to be men of principle and conscience. We are bound to do one of two things, viz:—First—To determine scriptural ground of union and unite upon it; or Secondly, Leave Unity and seek a support some place else. In this last event, we know not how soon we may be served in the same way again.

Presbyterian. I am not prepared to drop this matter and make no further effort to ascertain who was the cause of all this trouble. We were getting along very well till this matter was agitated, and as Mr. C. confessed that he agitated it, I think the blame should be placed where it belongs, and report this back to the members of our churches, that they may rebuke those who deserve it, and restore the balance of us to our respective posts.

Christian. My dear sir, I have no doubt that my preaching, indirectly, had some instrumentality in this matter; but the prayer of the Savior and the command of Paul, had much more to do with it than anything I have or could say. If, therefore, you feel like rebuking anybody for our troubles, you should go back to the Lord and the apostles, who first agitated union, and rebuke them. But, my dear sir, you certainly have not read the minutes of the meeting of our brethren the other evening. They attribute no blame to myself, any more than to the other preachers.

Baptist. Brethren, I look upon it as useless and but a waste of our precious time, to debate about the cause of this trouble. The trouble is upon us, and our brethren will not rescind their resolution. Our choice is simply to comply with their request, or leave the place. I confess that I do not see how we can comply with their request; and if we do not, those who preach union will take possession of the place. I am not prepared to leave Mr. C. to take all our members.

Christian. Why do you speak of my being any more likely to take all the members than any one else present? Am I not put upon a level with the balance? My support is suspended also.

Methodist. I can see why, very clearly, they have resolved that we shall do the very thing you have contended for all the time.

Christian. They have simply resolved, that we shall determine the "scriptural basis for union." Do you admit that the "scriptural basis for union" is just what I have contended for all the time? If it is, you are all wrong, certain[illegible].

Methodist. I—I don't admit—the fact [illegible]

Christian. The fact is, my dear sir, [illegible] brethren simply require us to determine the scriptural ground of union and unite upon it, and I pledge myself to meet you upon it.

Methodist. That I can easily show, and shall come prepared to do it this night week; until which time I move to adjourn. Consent.

Medicine.

Musing of all my Father's love,
How sweet it is!
Methought I heard a gentle voice:
Child, here 's the cup,—
I've mixed it,—drink it up.
My heart did sink,—I could no more rejoice.

O Father, must it be?
Yes, child, it must.
Then give the needed medicine;
Be by my side,
Only thy face don't hide,
I'll drink it all,—it must be good,—'tis thine.

For the Crisis.

True Greatness.

In every position, and under every circumstance, it is the desire of man to receive honor. No matter what may be the vicissitudes of life, some peculiar object seems to govern his movements; and whatever may be his desires, whatever his hopes, and however difficult to realize them, he rests not until an effort is made to gratify his ambition. And with what untiring industry does an individual labor to accomplish his end, when the mind is fixed upon some great achievement! If, in the minds of others, mountains of difficulties throng his pathway, he presses onward, defying all opposition. Though he may be compelled to strive long and hard, yet he is contented, if, in the end, he may accomplish his desires. And if we but look around us, we may see men, yea, women, too, daily striving to gather to themselves honor, wealth or fame. Laurels are in the distance, and they are striving for distinction. Some are contending for one thing, and some for another. And how earnestly do they strive!

Notice the "man of letters," and see how zealously he seeks for fame. Early and late he wields the pen, straining his mind, in order to distinguish himself, and to lay his thoughts before the world.

Again: notice the merchant, striving for wealth, and see him sitting, as it were, in a state of mental aberration. Schemes of speculation occupy his brain, and he finds time to think of little else. Avarice is continually crying, "Money, money, MONEY!" He gives ear to the voice, and becomes a willing slave. Every effort is put forth to crowd his coffers; and, to accomplish this end, he toils incessantly from morning till night. And why is it? Simply that he may be honored.

Instances of the above character could be multiplied indefinitely, but these will suffice our present purpose. Man desires distinction, and here arises a question: Should he not seek for honor that will be lasting? Earthly honors soon fade, like the withering flower, they soon pass away, they bloom for a moment, and then they are gone! And what will they profit in the dying hour? Ah! who would ask for wealth or fame as he falls a victim to death? Let each answer for himself. "For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"—Mark 8 . 36.

Ponder well, ye who seek for wealth or fame. The Savior's words are of the utmost importance, and demand attention. If you would receive fadeless honors, be a christian; for it is the christian to whom true greatness belongs; and it consists of holiness of heart. Read the word of God, and obey its precepts. Follow the meek and lowly Savior, by consecrating yourself wholly to God. Do this, and you have the assurance of ETERNAL LIFE. Yes, when the Savior comes the second time, he will say unto you, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 25 : 34. Who could ask for greater honor?

"Shut thy door about thee" means much; it means shut out not only frivolity, but business; not only the company abroad, but the company at home; it means let thy poor soul have a little rest and refreshment, and God have an opportunity to speak to thee in a still, small voice, or he will speak in thunder. I am persuaded he often speaks more softly if we would shut the door.—Cecil.

The First and Second Adam.

BY [illegible]

Continued.

"And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."—1 Cor. 15 : 45.

III. Adam, the first, holds the relation of Father to the human family. The first man, was made a little lower than the angels. He was the noblest of God's works, made in the image of his Creator, and endowed with powers of mind, that [illegible] his Maker; and in relation to thought, word and action, he held a position of which his posterity need not be ashamed.

So Christ, the second Adam, is, and will be Father of all that will be saved. Isaiah 9 : 6.—"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." As Adam the first is father of human life, that is, life mortal, so Adam the second is the father of eternal life. One, father of the present, the other, of future life. One, father of mortality, the other, of immortality.

The following are some of the passages, which show that Christ is the father of future life: John 6.—"Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you. . . . For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. . . . . And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day. . . . . He that believeth on me hath everlasting life. I am that bread of life. . . . . I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. . . . Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

The last day is the time named when those who, by Christ will live forever, will enter upon that state. Said Jesus, "I am the resurrection and the life." Luke 20 : 35, 36.—"But they [illegible] be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

To prove to the Sadducees that there is to be a future life, Jesus said, "Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living." By this the Savior would say that inasmuch as these men are dead, for God to be their God they must have a resurrection. He is their God because they are the children of the resurrection. Who then is the God of the dead, or are they without a Lord? Rom. 14 : 9.—"For to this end Christ hath died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." He said, "I lay down my life for the sheep." He died and went where they go when they die—came out of this place to die no more. Rev. 1 : 18.—"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (hades) and of death." Jesus then has the control of death, and of the place where men go when they die. He has died, and so met the demands of the law against those who believe in him that he can bring them out of death to die no more.

John 5 : 11, 12.—"And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." It follows then that Jesus is the author and father of eternal life. He is "the way, the truth and the life." "The resurrection and the life." He is appointed to raise the dead because he is the Lord of the dead.

IV. The first Adam began his work and finished it on the earth. He was created here, lived and died here. After the fall he was told that in the sweat of his face he should eat bread all the days of his life, [illegible] should return [illegible] was and [illegible] lived [illegible] died. The Far Off Land.

There is a far off land, they say,
A fairer land than this;
That never knew a dreary day
To dim its hallowed bliss.

It is a land of love, they say,
Where Hate doth ne'er defame;
Where Slander's tongue ne'er dims the ray
Of dawning life's bright name.

The pure and good of earth there dwell
Amid the angel throng,
And ever on the breezes swell
Their notes of magic song.

It hath a shore, a golden shore,
A tide of silver waves,
Which flow a smiling ocean o'er,
That hath no human graves.

It hath a river, clear and wide,
Begirt with scenes of joy;
All through the year, on either side,
Are fruits that never cloy.

Its city fair of gold is made,
All earth's outshining far;
Its gates with purest pearl inlaid,
Beam like a blazing star.

Triumphant swells the song of love
Along the perfumed air;
From all around, beneath, above,—
For all are holy there.

No cause of woe is ever known,
Disease and pain are fled,
For sin that happy clime hath flown—
None mourn the early dead.

And Beauty reigneth there for aye,
And clothes each form with grace,
Of holy Love's divine array,
That time can ne'er deface.

O for a home within that land,
All joys of earth I'll give!
And there to join the holy band,
A life for Christ I'll live.

The Three-fold Blessing of Immortality.

BY L. P. JUDSON.

In our common translation of the Scriptures, we have the word immortality used five times. In 1 Tim. 1 : 16 we are told that the Personage of whom Paul was speaking; "whom no man hath seen, nor can see:" only had immortality. In 2 Tim. 1 : 10, we are told that Christ has brought it to light. In Rom. 2 : 7, eternal life is promised to those who seek for it by patient continuance in well-doing. In 1 Cor. 15 : 53 we are told when we shall put it on; that it will be when the last trump shall sound; when the righteous dead shall be raised and the living righteous changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; and in the 54th verse we are told what shall be brought to pass, when we shall have put on immortality; that then we obtain the victory over death and the grave.

Now this being the entire use of the term in the Bible, as we have it, our friends have been accustomed to construct, what I regard as an incontrovertible argument, showing that God only had that attribute originally; that Christ only hath as yet attained it; that man must seek for it in a proper way, if he would attain it; that it is a blessing foreign to man and that he must put it on; that he will put it on only in the resurrection state; and that then and then only, will man have gained the victory over death and the grave.

Here is consistency. Here are considerations that our opponents have not yet disposed of. This position they have not yet taken from us. I have seen no thoroughly [illegible] carefully labored effort to dislodge us here. Yet there is a moral obligation resting upon them to meet this point with all the weight of the interests involved in the subject.—By its relations to the honor due to Christ; by its relations to other doctrines; by its relations to the consistency and success of the church; they ought to examine these facts and answer these arguments fearlessly, candidly, conclusively, or else acknowledge, that we have the [illegible] lation realized, without referring to the language in which the Scriptures were written. The word immortality is not used in that portion of the Scriptures which was written in Hebrew. Only in the Greek, do we find the word. In this, we find three modes of expression, signifying perpetuity of existence in the future. The eternal life; the uncorruptness; and the cannot-die nature, or immortality in its true or correct sense.

The first of these is used many times, but the terms do not necessarily imply immortality. Life continued eternally would be eternal life; though the person did not possess a nature that could not die. This is said to be the gift of God through Christ. Christ is the almoner of this bounty of the Father; the dispenser of this good. He being the sole personage from whom it can be obtained, how are those to keep alive their own souls eternally, who have nothing to do with him? He having promised it only to character that is definitely pointed out, how are those to obtain it who possess an entirely opposite character? Here is another of our strong positions, to which we invite the attention of those who differ from us. The Bible says (Ps. 22; 29) that "none can keep alive his own soul." Yet there are those who say the soul cannot die. But the controversy is not between them and us; it is between them and the Bible: between them and God. We stand only as God's helpers, as "workers together with God." But, leaving this plain contradiction for those to settle with the Bible who assume a position so directly at variance with it, we ask those christians who are in the light, to receive and enjoy the rich consolation which this feature of our hope is calculated to afford. Christ is the depositary of eternal life. No one else has it to confer. He has promised it to those who love and serve him. The Father has committed all judgment unto him, and he judges us worthy to receive it through grace. How sure, then, is the Christian, of living forever. Because Christ lives, he shall live also. But this is only one feature of the blessing in the immortal state. Others are in reserve.

Another term used to designate perpetuity of existence after the resurrection, signifies the exact and total opposite of corruption. This is twice rendered immortality, and is found in six other places in the Scriptures. It is used (Titus 2 : 7) to designate the purity of the doctrines we are to teach. What an admonition is here; and especially to ministers! We should seek to have our doctrines as free from corruption, as we hope to have our bodies in the resurrection state. How important that we be disciples, learners of Christ. In Eph. 6 : 24 it is used to express the quality of our love to Christ. It is there rendered "sincerity." In 2 Tim. 1 : 10 it expresses the nature of the immortality Christ has brought to light in the gospel. In our present state, we are groaning in bondage and inquiring in every direction for deliverance from this corruption. The medical resources of the world are taxed; the skill of man is brought into requisition; but, alas! it is of little avail. A dark cloud hangs over our horizon. The elements are pressing us to death. But a light comes streaming in amid this gloom. The gospel hope is let down to the joy of the believing. Christ has brought life and incorruptness to light in the good news. Glorious news; joyful tidings, this. Man can now not only know that he may live, but also have an incorrupt nature: a spiritual body, like his Master's, the whole tendencies of which are to life.

Well might the apostle, as in Rom. 2 : 7, present this before us as an object to be sought. How grand and sublime the object of pursuit! Incorruption. How pleasant the way! By patient continuance in well doing. How consistent and reasonable that he should say as in 1 Cor. 15 : 50, where the term is again used, that corruption cannot inherit incorruption. That man does not, and "CANNOT inherit" or possess both natures, at one and the same time! Yet how frequently are we taught that man is both mortal and immortal: That he has two distinctly opposite natures! The Lord open the eyes of such christians to see where they contradict the apostle. In verse 42 we are shown that it is not until the resurrection that we receive it. In verse 53, we are told that we must put it on; and verse 54 teaches us that at that time we shall obtain the victory. Here is the entire use of the term in the New Testament. How clear and definite the instruction, that we do not, and cannot possess this nature until the resurrection! But here again, we must leave the theologian of the common view, to contend with the Bible. The battle is the Lord's. Our present work is [illegible] up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken our mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in us. Our bodies are all that need immortalizing. Immortalize the body, and you have eternal-soul as the certain result. This is the work of the Spirit. To give us spiritual, incorrupt organizations, or bodies, instead of or corrupt ones. Christ said, The water he would give, should be in them a well of water springing up into everlasting life. This had reference to the blessings of the Spirit those should receive that believed on him. We have here a splendid view of our spiritual or resurrection state. The whole tendencies there will be to life, as they are here to death. As here, we should certainly die, unless a power is introduced, sufficient to overcome the tendencies to death; so there, we shall certainly live, unless a foreign power is introduced, sufficient to overcome the natural tendencies to life. God, angels and other good beings, will wish us to live. The devil and all his emissaries will be destroyed; it is therefore certain we shall live forever. Here is another feature of the blessing of the immortal state. May it be seen and appreciated by the church.

Another, and the last feature of the blessing to which I referred, is from the use of a term which signifies a nature which cannot die. This is the only term properly rendered immortality, and is used only three times in the Scriptures. It is found in 1 Tim. 6 : 16, where we are taught that He only hath it, "whom no man hath seen, nor can see." The second and third instances of its use, are in 1 Cor. 15 : 53, 54. We are there told that this mortal must put it on, and taught the complete,—the perfect victory, that will be achieved by the saints, through grace, when this nature shall have been "put on." Then shall the shout go up with emphatic consistency, and blend in sweet harmony with the appreciative song of praise that shall come from the lips of the redeemed host, in honor of Christ as "the Resurrection and the Life.

How passing strange, if the present immortality of the soul is a doctrine to be believed and taught, and is as important as christendom would have us believe, that this word is only used in these three instances in the Bible, and that in these connections. But again I must leave the controversialist with the Bible to settle his controversies. Mine is the work of feasting the soul on this heavenly manna. Come ye who have ears to hear and hearts to believe and feel the power of this blessed truth. Take into your hearts the indescribable happiness this hope offers you. Are you obeying Christ? Are you seeking this blessing by patient continuance in well doing? It is yours to enjoy,—now in hope, hereafter in full fruition. Look then at the threefold blessing.

Christ, the judge, takes his seat on the white throne. He now remembers all those who have suffered with and for him. All the despised and hated ones of earth. This one drowned. That one burned. This eaten by wild beasts. That starved in prison. Yea, all—all—are remembered by him. His eye is on their sleeping dust. He is about to speak with the voice that will cause them all to awake. Angels behold! What a moment is that. He speaks. His sentence is that his suffering ones are worthy of eternal life. He gives it as their right through mercy and grace. He bids them come forth to enjoy it. Instantly, the Spirit with which they died moves with his energizing power. The graves are opened. Winding sheets are exchanged for robes of purer white. The sleeping saint being borne to the tomb, leaves his coffin in the hands of astonished bearers, and stands up in shining glory. Another instant and here and there amid that crowd, as elsewhere, are seen shining ones shouting victory over the evils of mortality. On the bright bosom of a calm ocean may also be seen those saints that slumbered beneath its blue waters resplendent with the same lustrous glory that is seen amid the angelic host and around the presence of the stern but beneficent Judge. All are gathered before him, and presented to the eternal Father, with eternal life conferred, as the judgment of the Son; and spiritual or incorrupt bodies, as the work of the Spirit. The Father looks, and loves, and blesses. Approving the judgment of his Son, and the work of the Spirit, he takes from his own athanasia or cannot-die nature, of absolute immortality, and stamps every child of Christ with the same attribute as to the future. "Neither can they die any more" from that period, onward. They are thus honored and blessed and receive in addition the glories that encircle the Father; that surround the Son, and adorn the Spirit. Now, shining above the brightness of the sun, and blessed of the Father, Christ takes them to inherit the kingdom prepared for them at the [illegible] blessing of immortality! How reasonable that God should withhold this solemn attribute, to bestow it only on tested virtue. This truly is a gift, worthy of a Christ to purchase—worthy of a God to bestow.

"The Union Movement:"

A MEETING OF THE LAY-MEMBERS OF THE VARIOUS CHURCHES OF THE TOWN OF UNITY, ON DEC. 3, 1858.

CHAPTER II.

The following is a report of the deliberations of the six preachers in the town of Unity, in view of their salaries being suspended after the first day of January, 1859. We shall designate them by the designations of their different churches, as follows: Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Christian, Episcopalian and Lutheran.

Brother Episcopalian being called to the chair, and brother Lutheran appointed secretary, the meeting was opened by the following prayer by brother Baptist:

"O Lord our God! we, thy dependent and erring creatures, have met, we trust, in thy name, with honesty of purpose, and an ardent desire to know thy will, relative to the union of thy people. If it be thy will that we ever should 'see eye to eye,' wilt thou enable us to discover it at this important crisis, and also enable us to determine the scriptural ground of union, that we may unite upon it. May we be guided by the wisdom from above. May we have the mind and spirit of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ: to whom, with thyself, be everlasting praises. Amen."

The chairman arose and stated the object of the meeting, as follows:

Brethren:—You have seen the report of the lay members' meeting, held in our town, in the "Christian Age." You are aware of the contents of that report, and that the matters therein set forth, are of such a nature, that we are compelled to act in some way. Said report, and our peculiar situation, are the matters that demand our attention. I hope, therefore, that you will express yourselves freely on these matters.

Presbyterian. I have looked over the novel proceedings of the members of our respective churches, and from every point in which I can view the subject, I am unable to view it in any other light than an unprecedented species of contempt of ministerial authority, such as should be rebuked in the sharpest manner. How to give them such a rebuke is the question.

Lutheran. I concur with the brother in his remarks; and in not only what he has said, but I must say further, that there is an insinuation of our dishonesty in the report alluded to, that I am not willing to lie under. In withdrawing our salaries, it is implied that we are the cause of all the divisions—that we can effect union, and that withdrawing our support will compel us to do it. Now, it appears to me, that they should be compelled to withdraw the imputation.

Methodist. I fully concur with these sentiments. I think the course pursued, finds no equal in Church history. I am fully aware where all the blame lies, so far as my church is concerned. It grows out of the doctrine of lay delegation—a doctrine that should have been crushed in the bud. There is now no telling where its ruinous effects will lead to. I have it in my mind to bring my church-members to their senses. I have the power to exclude every one of them, sell the house and return the funds to the Conference, and I am tempted to do it.

Episcopalian. Gentlemen, I see no end to this thing. But I hope nothing will be done rashly. Yet, I can not say that I can see what course to pursue. The truth is, our wise men have long seen that the tendency of many Protestant systems is, to destroy all ministerial authority. This unwarrantable and anarchical step, I fear, is but the prelude of many woes. I almost doubt the right of "private judgment." How Romanists would laugh at us, to see, that in the place of our ruling the members of our churches, they rule us! This is beyond endurance.

Baptist. Brethren, I hope you are not so disconcerted as to feel a disposition to renounce the right of private judgment. If you are, I wish it distinctly understood that such a step receives no sympathy from me. I am a Protestant. The fathers in the Baptist Church suffered too much for the right of private judgment, for me to turn traitor and renounce it. The gentleman thinks Romanists will laugh at our churches ruling us. I should prefer letting them laugh forever, to ruling after their model. If the Romanists in the United States were at once to stop the support of the priesthood, which comes from the honest, poor, hardlaboring men and women, the effect would [illegible] This they could do any day, if they knew it. The priests rule them by ignorance.

Methodist. Brethren, I see that our church is more wisely arranged than any other. You see that I have power to compel my members into measures or exclude every one of them, and sell their house. By this means, I shall stop them in their career.

Episcopalian. Brother Methodist, I think you are mistaken about this power, though I confess, according to the rules of your church, you could exercise it. But suppose you should, what would be the result? Would it bring your members to terms? By no means. Here is Mr. Christian, though in the same situation touching his support with the rest of us; but by his preaching union, has brought about this state of things, and has infused his union sentiments into many of the members of our churches. Now you may exclude your members, but they and many citizens with them, will regard it as an act of injustice, and turn round and join Mr. C.'s church, and what will you gain?

Methodist. I have long seen the tendency of Mr. C.'s doctrine, and warned my members not to hear it.

Baptist. Yes, and the more you have warned them not to hear it, the more they wanted to hear, and the more they would hear.

Christian. Brethren, some of you seem to attach some blame to me, but I think, if you look over the matter carefully, you will see that I am not at all censurable. I admit that my preaching may have had a tendency to bring things to a crisis, but the trouble was coming, and would have reached you sooner or later, if I had not been in the world. Division was here before I preached here, and all its evil consequences; and while I am free to admit, that things might have slumbered if I had said nothing, I do not admit that any one would have been benefited by the delay.

Baptist. Brethren, I think we are uselessly wasting time in disputing about who was the cause of bringing the present difficulty up. The matter is up; our support will be cut off in a few days, for the resolution is passed, and our churches are determined to stand to it. We hold ourselves to be men of principle and conscience. We are bound to do one of two things, viz.—First—To determine scriptural ground of union and unite upon it, or Secondly, Leave Unity and seek a support some place else. In this last event, we know not how soon we may be served in the same way again.

Presbyterian. I am not prepared to drop this matter and make no further effort to ascertain who was the cause of all this trouble. We were getting along very well till this matter was agitated, and as Mr. C. confessed that he agitated it, I think the blame should be placed where it belongs, and report this back to the members of our churches, that they may rebuke those who deserve it, and restore the balance of us to our respective posts.

Christian. My dear sir, I have no doubt that my preaching, indirectly, had some instrumentality in this matter; but the prayer of the Savior and the command of Paul, had much more to do with it than anything I have or could say. If, therefore, you feel like rebuking anybody for our troubles, you should go back to the Lord and the apostles, who first agitated union, and rebuke them. But, my dear sir, you certainly have not read the minutes of the meeting of our brethren the other evening. They attribute no blame to myself, any more than to the other preachers.

Baptist. Brethren, I look upon it as useless and but a waste of our precious time, to debate about the cause of this trouble. The trouble is upon us, and our brethren will not rescind their resolution. Our choice is simply to comply with their request, or leave the place. I confess that I do not see how we can comply with their request; and if we do not, those who preach union will take possession of the place. I am not prepared to leave Mr. C. to take all our members.

Christian. Why do you speak of my being any more likely to take all the members than any one else present? Am I not put upon a level with the balance? My support is suspended also.

Methodist. I can see why, very clearly, they have resolved that we shall do the very thing you have contended for all the time.

Christian. They have simply resolved, that we shall determine the "scriptural basis for union." Do you admit that the "scriptural basis for union" is just what I have contended for all the time? If it is, you are all wrong, certain.

Methodist. I—I don't admit—the fact [illegible]

the scriptural ground of union and unite upon it, and I pledge myself to meet you upon it.

Methodist. That I can easily show, and shall come prepared to do it this night week; until which time I move to adjourn. Consent.

Medicine.

Musing of all my Father's love,
How sweet it is!
Methought I heard a gentle voice:
Child, here's the cup,—
I've mixed it,—drink it up.
My heart did sink,—I could no more rejoice.

O Father, must it be?
Yes, child, it must.
Then give the needed medicine;
Be by my side,
Only thy face don't hide,
I'll drink it all,—it must be good,—'tis thine.

For the Crisis.

True Greatness.

In every position, and under every circumstance, it is the desire of man to receive honor. No matter what may be the vicissitudes of life, some peculiar object seems to govern his movements; and whatever may be his desires, whatever his hopes, and however difficult to realize them, he rests not until an effort is made to gratify his ambition. And with what untiring industry does an individual labor to accomplish his end, when the mind is fixed upon some great achievement! If, in the minds of others, mountains of difficulties throng his pathway, he presses onward, defying all opposition. Though he may be compelled to strive long and hard, yet he is contented, if, in the end, he may accomplish his desires. And if we but look around us, we may see men, yea, women, too, daily striving to gather to themselves honor, wealth or fame. Laurels are in the distance, and they are striving for distinction. Some are contending for one thing, and some for another. And how earnestly do they strive!

Notice the "man of letters," and see how zealously he seeks for fame. Early and late he wields the pen, straining his mind, in order to distinguish himself, and to lay his thoughts before the world.

Again: notice the merchant, striving for wealth, and see him sitting, as it were, in a state of mental aberration. Schemes of speculation occupy his brain, and he finds time to think of little else. Avarice is continually crying, "Money, money, MONEY!" He gives ear to the voice, and becomes a willing slave. Every effort is put forth to crowd his coffers, and, to accomplish this end, he toils incessantly from morning till night. And why is it? Simply that he may be honored.

Instances of the above character could be multiplied indefinitely, but these will suffice our present purpose. Man desires distinction, and here arises a question: Should he not seek for honor that will be lasting? Earthly honors soon fade; like the withering flower, they soon pass away; they bloom for a moment, and then they are gone! And what will they profit in the dying hour? Ah! who would ask for wealth or fame as he falls a victim to death? Let each answer for himself. "For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"—Mark 8 : 36.

Ponder well, ye who seek for wealth or fame. The Savior's words are of the utmost importance, and demand attention. If you would receive fadeless honors, be a christian; for it is the christian to whom true greatness belongs; and it consists of holiness of heart. Read the word of God, and obey its precepts. Follow the meek and lowly Savior, by consecrating yourself wholly to God. Do this, and you have the assurance of ETERNAL LIFE. Yea, when the Savior comes the second time, he will say unto you, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 25 : 34. Who could ask for greater honor?

☞ God is often lost in prayers and ordinances. "Enter into thy chamber," said he, "and shut thy door about thee." "Shut thy door about thee" means much; it means shut out not only frivolity, but business; not only the company abroad, but the company at home; it means let thy poor soul have a little rest and refreshment, and God have an opportunity to speak to thee in a still, small voice, or he will speak in thunder. I am persuaded he often speaks more softly if we would shut the door.—Cecil.

The First and Second Adam.

BY [illegible]

Continued.

"And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."—1 Cor. 15: 45.

III. Adam, the first, holds the relation of Father to the human family. He, the first man, was made a little lower than the angels. He was the noblest of God's works, made in the image of his Creator, and endowed with powers of mind, that honored his Maker; and in relation to thought, word and action, he held a position of which his posterity need not be ashamed.

So Christ, the second Adam, is, and will be Father of all that will be saved. Isaiah 9 : 6.—"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." As Adam the first is father of human life, that is, life mortal, so Adam the second is the father of eternal life. One, father of the present, the other, of future life. One, father of mortality, the other, of immortality.

The following are some of the passages, which show that Christ is the father of future life: John 6.—"Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you. . . . For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. . . . . And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day. . . . . He that believeth on me hath everlasting life. I am that bread of life. . . . . I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. . . . . Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

The last day is the time named when those who, by Christ will live forever, will enter upon that state. Said Jesus, "I am the resurrection and the life." Luke 20 : 35, 36.—"But they [illegible] shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

To prove to the Sadducees that there is to be a future life, Jesus said, "Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living." By this the Savior would say that inasmuch as these men are dead, for God to be their God they must have a resurrection. He is their God because they are the children of the resurrection. Who then is the God of the dead, or are they without a Lord? Rom. 14 : 9.—"For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." He said, "I lay down my life for the sheep." He died and went where they go when they die—came out of this place to die no more. Rev. 1: 18.—"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (hades) and of death." Jesus then has the control of death, and of the place where men go when they die. He has died, and so met the demands of the law against those who believe in him that he can bring them out of death to die no more.

John 5 : 11, 12.—"And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." It follows that Jesus is the author and finisher of eternal life. He is "the way, the truth and the life." "The resurrection and the life." He is appointed to raise the dead because he is the Lord of the dead.

IV. The first Adam began his work and finished it on the earth. He was made here, lived and died here. [illegible] If he should live another life, [illegible] the second Adam. [illegible] him, by faith in a crucified Savior become reconciled to God. He is then prepared to be saved at the revelation of the Son of man. Heb. 9: 28.—"So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many: and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

Christ, in the work of salvation, was to come to this earth but twice. By his first, the way is prepared for his second coming, which is necessary to the completion of his work. It is self evident that man cannot be saved until he has restored to him the life lost by sin. The life lost was not moral life, for Adam could have no such life until he was submitted to trial. When he was tried he yielded to the tempter; and then he was immoral. All the life Adam had, besides the life named in the record, was an immoral life; and this he never lost. The life named in his history is the following: after he was made in the image of God, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. This life he lost, as the only life he had to lose. For whether he would have a good life or a bad life, depended on the course he would take when tried, as before noticed. The life he lost was in opposition to the death the Lord told him he should die. He said to him, "Because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife, in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return!" This is death explained; and by this we know what life man lost. Now to be saved, this life must be restored. And Christ is coming* here to do this work. 1 Thess. 4: 16.—"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." The heavenly announcement at the ascension of our Savior was, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11.

When he shall thus come, he will save those who believe in him from death. Sin being removed, he will remove death, the effect of sin. He is coming here to judge the world and set up his kingdom. 2 Tim. 4: 1.—"I charge ye therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." It then follows that salvation from death, the judgment of the living and of the dead, and the kingdom of Christ, are to be consequent upon the coming of Christ. If, therefore, he should come as described, those events can never occur. The times of restitution commencing with the second coming of our Lord, the work of restoring will be carried forward by him, to its completion in the new heavens and new earth, wherein will dwell righteousness.

V. The children of the first Adam are like him, of the earth, earthy. They are like him bodily and morally.

So the children of the second Adam will be like him. 1 Cor. 15: 49.—"And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." They will be like him no less bodily than morally. Phil. 3: 20, 21.—"For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." The body is to be made alive by the same means that Christ was raised from the dead. Rom. 8: 11.—"But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

By these passages we see that the mortal body is to be raised from the dead and so changed as to be like Christ's glorified body. Our Lord was in the grave bodily, and he came out of the grave with that body so changed that it was immortal, and hence beyond the reach of death—to live forever [illegible].

Christ as the seed being made immortal, his children to be made like him, must also be made immortal. And so the Apostle argues in 1 Cor. 15.—"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption,'; that is, corruptible bodies cannot inherit the kingdom. They must, then, be so changed as to become spiritual. So said the Apostle; "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." Do not get the thought, because it is called a spiritual body that it is no body at all; "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

* Though it be true that Adam lost a good, [illegible]

Why is [illegible] this must? Simply because without this change no man can inherit the kingdom of God. Besides, as man is mortal, as the fruit of sin, to save him he must become immortal: and as this immortality is to be put on at the resurrection of the body, it is not to be done before. And as Christ is the only one of all the human family who hath by virtue of right, immortality, he is the only one who can impart it to others; and this he will do at the time above named. 1 Tim. 6: 14—16.—"That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality." We are here taught that Christ, of all potentates, kings and lords, is the only one who hath immortality. And surely, if they have it not, their subjects do not have it.

As Jesus was made alive from the dead, the first fruits of them that slept, those that are his, and that will be made alive at his coming, will be like the sample. In other words, as Christ did arise from the dead in the relation of first fruits to his people, it follows that they must have a resurrection from the dead; and that, in that state, they must be like him material and immortal.

Immortality belongs to those only, who obey all the laws of their being. Christ is the only one of the human family who has done this; hence it rightfully belongs to him only. This is the reason why it is said, that he only hath it. He has promised to give it to all who believe in him and seek for it. And he has told us that this is to be done in the resurrection at the last day.

Our Savior was, and is, a material being. He was so born, so lived, suffered and died, so did he arise from the dead, ascend on high; so does he live, and so will he return. Therefore to be like him, his people will be, not only immortal but material. Indeed, we have no revelation of an immaterial man, consequently we can have no knowledge of any such being. But if there were such a man, he would be of so little importance as not to be worth a thought, as the word implies; and that would be a good reason for having no revelation of him. As Jesus rose from the dead with the material he had while in life, only changed from natural to spiritual, so will his people rise spiritual, immortal, and material beings. 1 John 3: 2.—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." It is worthy of note that seeing Christ as he is, and being made like him, are at the time of his coming, and of course not before he comes.

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

To my Friend and Bro., L. Boutell.

Your letter safely came to hand, And glad was I to understand That you were on the battle ground, Giving the trump a certain sound. These are the times so long foretold By holy seers in days of old, When men for chaff will sacrifice, And pay for fables any price. The doctrines of old mother Rome Are not beloved by her alone, But many that traduce her name, Her dogmas rigidly maintain; They preach dead saints away to heaven, Where starry crowns to them are given; With strange consistency they say They must be judged some future day. With ardent zeal they sinners tell, That when they die they'll sink to hell, To howl and cry mid flames of fire, While God torments them in his ire; And then upon the judgment day They must come forth to hear him say—"Depart, ye cursed, vent your cries in pangs of death that never dies!" God's word in plainest terms doth say, Man dieth and he wastes away; His sleep in death shall not be o'er Until the heavens are no more; Then, then he shall awake and sing—"O Grave, where is thy victory? O Death, where is thy sting?" To preach the dead have ceased to live, That God takes back the breath he gave, Some say no motive would appear To rouse the guilty sinner's fear. "Preach conscious torment! that's the motive given To make the sinner strive for heaven. Should you declare a soul can die, To enter heaven but few will try." Dear Luther, lift thy voice and cry—"THE SOUL THAT SINNETH IT SHALL DIE!" May God endow thee from above, To preach a Savior's dying love. Proclaim it with thy latest breath—The sinner's wages shall be DEATH! The soul that turns to God shall live,—All such he will their sins forgive. The Lord sustain thee, Bro B. Your face I dearly long to see. But as I cannot greet thee now, God's blessing on thy frosty pow.*

But now old age comes creeping on, It brings infirmities along; Our wants none less, we feel them more Than ever in our lives before. Praise to our God enthroned on high! He knows our wants, he hears our cry; Through faith and hope we soon shall be Redeemed through Christ eternally. Lift up thy head, dear saint, and see Signs of approaching victory; Giants in sin the poor oppress, And nations wail in sad distress. Signs in the sun and in the moon, Have long since told earth's fiery doom; [illegible] the last of all we see, Distress and perplexity. Welcome the hour, when we shall hear The Jubal trump sound in our ear, And earth, with garniture of God, By saints immortal shall be trod. God bless thee, Luther, here's my hand To meet thee in our Father-land, Where we shall live, and sing, and shine, In Christ's own image all divine. God speed the day! fly swift the hour! When saints shall tread fair Eden's bower; Earth bathed in glory then shall be, As waters cover now the sea, Amen and amen.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 26, 1859.

Bills.

We send bills next week, to those who have not paid to the close of the last Vol., which ended Aug. 24th. In the bill we include the advance pay for the present Vol., which will extend to Feb. 29th, 1860.

It will be a great convenience to us, if all our subscribers will adopt the advance pay system. Let every one lay by a little, from time to time, of that which others spend for superfluities, and they will find the money ready in season, without scarcely a sensation in the pocket at the time of payment.

Those who have not paid anything within a year, nor given us information of their inability to pay, must not expect us to continue the Crisis to them, unless we hear from them immediately. If you wish the paper, and cannot pay for it, please drop a note to us at once. Sit down and do it now. Three or four lines will be sufficient.

To our Canadian and Provincial friends we would say that in addition to their subscription it is necessary to send 52 cents per annum for postage, as we must prepay all papers sent across the lines.

Sheol.—No. 2.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in (sheol) the grave, whither thou goest."—ECCL. 9: 10.

This passage shows beyond all controversy that those who go into sheol, go where there is no "knowledge, nor wisdom." As we can find no Scripture that teaches consciousness or knowledge in sheol, but find all the Bible in harmony with the declaration of the wise man on this subject, it seems to us that the idea of there being a semi-reward to the righteous in sheol, and of suffering for the wicked, is entirely contradictory to all the instruction in the word of the Lord, and should not be believed for one moment by those who have confidence in the holy Scriptures. The Bible is not yea and nay, sustaining both affirmative and negative. It is just as true to-day as in the time of Solomon, that there is no knowledge in sheol. Those there are still without "wisdom" or "device," and must forever remain so, if there is no resurrection of the dead. Then let us abandon at once, if we have not already, the pagan philosopher's idea, that sheol is the place of rewards and punishment. We are ready to believe what the Bible teaches on this subject, but we dare not contradict it and say sheol is a place of conscious existence, when that declares the opposite. If the Bible spoils all our creeds, and three-fourths of the theology of the day, and a large amount of the popular preaching, overturning at the same time heathen philosophy, Mohammedism, Catholicism, Swedenborgianism and Spiritualism, we would say let the spoliation come; let the truth be vindicated; "let God be true, but every man a liar." The Bible writers are all harmonious in their teachings. When Hezekiah was sick, he "wept sore," because, said he, "I am deprived of the residue of my years." It is very singular that good man should feel so bad about leaving this world of sin and temptation, if he expected to go into the society of rewarded saints at death. His language shows that he had no such expectation. He gives the reason why he felt so bad about dying: "I said, in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of (sheol) the grave. I am deprived of the residue of my years." Had he lived now, many would say to him, "Why, Hezekiah, do not feel bad about dying; you will soon be praising the Lord in a better state than this." Hear his answer.—"O Lord, . . . (sheol) the grave cannot praise thee. . . . The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day." Isa. 38: 18, 19. He wept, then, because if he died, he should go to sheol, and when there, said he, "I cannot praise thee." David expressed the same truth when he said, "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in (sheol) the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Ps. 6: 5. When in sheol men are dead, hence know nothing, and offer no praise to the Lord.

At death, the whole man goes into sheol, and will be called for at the resurrection, which cannot take place before the coming of Christ—an event yet future. "The Lord killeth, and maketh alive; he bringeth down to (sheol) the grave, and bringeth up." 1 Sam. 2: 6. The idea is here doubly expressed. When they are killed, they go down to sheol; when made alive, they are brought up. Some tell us, when good men die, they go to Christ, and at the same time are obliged to admit that they have gone "down to sheol." Is Christ down in sheol, where there is no knowledge nor wisdom? Let him answer.—After he came up from sheol he says: "I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God."—John 20: 17. When he comes again the second time, he is not coming up from sheol, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4: 17. He descends, and they rise—from whence? Where did they go at death? "Down to (sheol) the grave." Then they must come up from thence. This shows they do not go to Christ at death, for he came up from sheol over eighteen hundred years since, and ascended to heaven; but said he to his disciples, "little children, . . . whither I go, ye cannot come."—John 13: 33. They must go down to sheol, the grave, where they would have no knowledge, but would be called for when the Lord descends; for he says, "I will ransom them from the power of (sheol) the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O (sheol) grave, I will be thy destruction." Hosea 13: 14. When David was looking forward to the time that he should be in sheol, he says:—"But God will redeem my soul from the power of (sheol) the grave."—Ps. 49: 15. When sheol should have power over David, he would be where there was no praise offered to God, but all are silent, and without knowledge; but when ransomed "from the power of sheol," he will sing, "O (sheol or hades) grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. 15: 55.

All the dead, without distinction of character, are said to be in sheol, therefore it can neither be heaven, nor the theological hell of torment. Jacob said, "I will go down into (sheol) the grave, to my son mourning," (Gen. 37: 35,) and the prophet Jeremiah, when speaking of Pharaoh, says, "he went down to (sheol) the grave." Ezk. 31: 15. The wicked are said to "be silent in (sheol) the grave." Ps. 31: 17.

We do not see how the point can be made plainer than it is in the Bible, that sheol is the common receptacle of all the dead, wicked and righteous, where they will remain till they are called for at the resurrection, when they will awake to life and consciousness; till then, they must all remain in the silence of the grave without knowledge or wisdom.

As sheol is the only word rendered hell in the Old Testament, it follows, as a legitimate conclusion, that it is never used to denote the place of punishment for the wicked. If it could be shown that it did, then it would be clear that they had no suffering, because they are silent, and without knowledge, device, work, or wisdom, so long as they remain in sheol.

☞ DO NOT FAIL TO READ the article, on fourth page, on "Preaching upon popular proverbs," by Timothy Titcomb, copied from the Springfield Republican. We have rarely seen more common sense and sound morals condensed into so small a compass. If there is any class that appears to us detestable, it is the double-minded, fence-riding, honor-seeking, conservative, lukewarm professor of religion, turning like a weather vane and drifting with every popular breeze. Read the article, and you will find our own feelings expressed better than we can do it ourselves.

Italy.

There is no prospect of peace in Italy, but strong indications of a terrible crisis in Italian affairs. The King of Naples has offered to lend troops to the Pope because of the withdrawal of the French. Garibaldi has issued an address calling the Italian legation to arms, which indicates an expected contest with the Papal troops. He has been received with enthusiasm at Bologne. It is said the Pope has ordered that the Sardinian minister should be tendered his passports, and that all intercourse between Rome and Piedmont had ceased. It follows then, that the Piedmontese and Sardinian streams which have aided in sustaining the Papacy are now dried up; and we think mystical Babylon will soon be ready to be taken and destroyed.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says,—"Italian affairs are approaching a crisis." He also says, "Gen. Fariti, commander-in-chief of Central Italy, . . . promises that the tri-color of Italy preceded by the old cross of Savoy, will precede them in fresh battles which will forever free Italy from the stranger."

Let the children of the Lord see that they are clothed with the whole christian armor, and stand firm, immovable, for our Deliverer is at hand.

John 15: 5.

Bro. A. P. Small, Bowdoinham, Me., asks for an explanation of John 15: 5.—"I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me (or severed from me) ye can do nothing."

This is a simple and familiar illustration of the relation between the Savior and his children. "I am the vine, ye are the branches." In the vine, some branches bear no fruit and need pruning off; others bear fruit for awhile, and then become unfruitful; others bear fruit for a season, [illegible] by careful pruning, they are made to bear again; others ever remain fruitful. Those branches which bear no fruit are first severed by the vine-dresser, and those which cease bearing and cannot be restored, are finally pruned off to give strength to the fruitful branches; and even these need frequent trimming and training that they may continue fruitful.

So in Christ. Some become united to him, but instead of growing up into him, are turned back into the world, and thus sever themselves from him and produce no fruit. They look green for awhile, and promise prosperity in well doing, but are pulled from the vine by the alluring fashions and charms of a vain world. Others are united to Christ, grow well and bear fruit for several years, when some cold storm prostrates them, and nearly proves their ruin; and they bear no fruit for a season; but by careful nourishing from the kind hand of the great Vine-dresser, and the assistance of those employed in his vineyard, they again become thrifty and bear much fruit; while others, after bearing fruit for a while, become unfruitful, and all efforts for restoration prove a failure. Others ever remain closely united to the vine, never complaining about any pruning they may receive, are patient in tribulation, forbearing, long-suffering, tender-hearted, kind, forgiving, meek and gentle; ever loaded with good fruit, even to a hundred fold.

When we entirely sever ourselves from Christ, we are without his Spirit, and hence can bear no fruit, more than a branch when severed from a vine.

Light Advancing.

We clipped the following from the Christian Observer, a Presbyterian paper, published in Philadelphia, and ably conducted. We are glad to see men giving up a doctrine so dishonorable to our Heavenly Father, as is that of the immortality of the wicked and their consequent eternal misery. Although the writer seems yet to be a little in the dark, he has made some excellent remarks. He says:—

"It is the word of man, and not the word of the Lord, that promises to those who 'trample under foot the covenant, and do despite to the Spirit of grace,' incorruptible, immortal and celestial bodies. If there is even an inferential, 'thus saith the Lord,' for that doctrine, I have been unable to find it, and I have never heard any one point it out. The doctrine seems to me to be as unfounded in the word of God as that of Purgatory. It is only a figment of Rome.

It will be observed that the blotting out of sins, the times of refreshing, the second coming of Christ, and the restitution of all things spoken of by the prophets, are all linked together. God has joined them, and we dare not separate them. They all take place at the same time. Consequently this blotting out of sins cannot take place in this life, and therefore it cannot refer to our sanctification, for that commences with our conversion. Besides, the word which is rendered refreshing, is anapsukseos, and is derived from napsuko, which means to breathe again. Consequently the noun anapsukseos must mean breathing again, reanimation, or living again. . . . .

Unholy man being raised with a mortal body, shall be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where he shall be consumed. Hence we are told in Matt. 3: 12, "But he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Ps. 37: 20.—'But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away.' . . . . Man's second death will in every sense be analogous to the first, only it will be eternal. As Christ has died for man, and his blood extends as far as Adam's sin, every man will be tried. But, if in the great trial, he is condemned, he will die again. And from that death there will be no resurrection. Hence their death will be eternal. They die to live no more. . . . .

I can lay my hand on no portion of the word of God where the wicked dead are promised eternal life or immortal bodies. I shall be thankful to any brother who will point out one plain 'thus saith the Lord' to that effect. I ask not for human speculations or human philosophy—what this great man or that one has said—but I do ask, what has my Father said. If I err, will some brother be so good as to point it out to me in heavenly language, and not in such language as man's wisdom assumes. . . . .

If then the wicked dead will not have celestial bodies, they must, if raised at all, have terrestrial, they must be destructible; and if destructible, they will be consumed by the real substantial flames of 'the lake of fire in the bottomless pit.' Any other conclusion, forces us toward one or the other of two soul-ruiningisms, Universalism, or Swedenborgianism—two master devices of the adversary; their fruits show their paternity.

Paul adds, 1 Cor. 15 53–55: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?" From this passage we learn, that the complete victory is not gained by any one, until incorruption and immortality are put on. The glorious victory is not gained at death, but at the resurrection. THEN the apostle puts the triumphant song into their mouths: O, death, where is thy sting!' There is no life, no immortality out of Christ."

☞ I take goodness in this sense—the seeking the real welfare of men; which is what the Greeks call philanthropia. This of all virtues and dignities of the mind, is the greatest, being the character of the Deity, and without it, man is a busy, mischievous, wretched being, no better than a kind of vermin.—Lord Bacon.

For the Crisis.

Tract Fund for the West.

Sept. 2d. Bro. V. E. writes from Wis.:

"I have read your proposal in the Crisis to raise money to spread the truth in the West, and have also patiently and with anxiety awaited the result. And in the last paper that I received, I read the glad news of your prosperity in the work. Dear Bro., you do not know with what feelings and tears of joy we read of your success. May God help you and bless you, is and has been the prayer of the few of God's children that are living here. God has done much for us in this wilderness; notwithstanding the few that are living here have no regular preaching, we have been able to form a little church according to the Bible—a church which is looking and waiting for their King. We have meetings as often as we can, and hold our regular monthly meetings, at which much good is done; and we often have two or three and sometimes six or more added, of such as we trust shall be saved.

We want a share of those tracts of yours. We need them much, for there is but little sound preaching in this part of the country, and the world generally are perishing for the want of the bread of life. Dear Bro., is not God mighty? Are not his ways wonderful? I have formerly belonged to the Lutheran church by name, but not by faith and works. But about a year ago God was pleased to show me I was on the way to destruction, and also how I could find the narrow way and yet be saved; since which time I have tried to come to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ our Lord. And now feeling it to be duty to do something for my fellow men, yet feeling my inability, but trusting in the Lord and looking for help from him, I last Sunday left, for the first time, an appointment to preach. And as I think this will reach you before the appointed time, I hope you will pray for me in particular. Dear brother, do not forget me, but pray that God would stand by me, and give me wisdom and strength to do that which will be for his honor and glory, and for the good of my fellow men and myself.

Enclosed some of us send $2 to help in this great work. I must confess it is not much, but hope very soon to do more. I cannot withhold my name as some others do, not because I want it sounded abroad, or that my left hand should know what my right hand does; but as I am living in the West and want some tracts, it is needful for you to know my name in order to send them. May the Lord reward you and those dear brethren and sisters East, and in his own good time crown you with a glorious immortality and eternal life. Your Bro. E——."

Some tracts have been sent as directed, I believe. May God's blessing be with you, dear Bro., and help you to fulfill all your Lord's will.

Bro. P. says:—

"I thought I would write a few lines, to let you know the state of the cause in this vicinity. About a year ago, there was a few of us met together once in four weeks to comfort each other, and having no pastor, we concluded to form ourselves into a church on gospel ground, taking the Bible alone as the rule of our faith and practice. They selected the writer for their elder. Since that time I have been laboring in word and doctrine. It has pleased the Father to bless the word to the salvation of precious souls. Over twenty-five have witnessed a good confession. Fourteen have put on Christ by baptism, and others will soon. Praise God! Doors are opening on every hand, and invitations are heard—'Come and preach to us.' But what can be done? I have to work six days in each week, and then on first day travel from seven to fifteen miles, and talk to the people from two to three hours, and then go home again. But I would not complain of this, if I had strength to do it. I am now fifty-two years old. Sometimes I feel as though I would have to lay down the armor, but I am sure that God will do all things well, and if I fall, he will raise up others to take the sword. I have written to brethren south to come and help us, but they have not come. O how it rejoiced my soul when the Tract cause was proposed by you. I told the brethren at first sight, that was the plan to scatter light and truth, and it would be carried out. Every other way seemed hedged up. May God speed the work, and reward those dear brethren East a hundred fold in this world and in the world to come with life everlasting. Now send the little messengers along. O how I long to put them in the hands of thousands who are starving for the bread of life. Make a selection of those best calculated to meet modern philosophy of all grades, for be sure we have a great share of it here. We will do our best to sell and refund money to you as much as we can. I could write about hard times, but others have done it—it's all so. Direct to Wm. B. P——."

Note.—All monies received from sales of tracts given from the fund, are credited to the Tract Fund, and used to issue more tracts.

A Bro. writes from Canada, acknowledging receipt of tracts:—

"These I have scattered abroad far and near. I hope they will have some good effect. If you can send me a bundle of tracts from the western fund, I will gladly accept them for western Canada, and send them almost everywhere. Your views concerning Advent*ism* pleased me. I was anxious to know your position on the matter. I have heard you spoken of as being rather fanatical, but must say do not find you so. . . . I have never met with any thing in the shape of a tract on 'Reasons why we look for Christ.' Is there anything of the kind—something pithy and just to the point? Wishing you every possible blessing, I am yours in the blessed hope, B——."

I shall endeavor to send you some tracts soon. As to my being a fanatic, now that is rich, is'nt it? I met with one man once who tried to prove it to my face. He proved it thus: I had, through the Crisis, requested those who were owing me for books to pray for me, so that I could pay my bills without troubling them with dunning any more; and as he was ever dunning folks that owed him and begging for help to sustain "the blessed cause," it was considered by him prima facie evidence of fanaticism for a man to have recourse to prayer instead of being perpetually dunning men. For my part, although I cannot say as that man said, "I never violated a christian principle in my life," yet I can say I believe God is able to take care of his own cause, and an interest that should keep me eternally dunning must be my own and not God's. [illegible] I have no doubt that "it is reported among the heathen" and written in "an open letter," and that "Gashmu saith it;" but I think the perusal of this paragraph will raise a smile of incredulity among those who have seen my face in the flesh. But enough.

As to that tract you inquire for. Acting on your suggestion, I have, since I received yours, been writing a tract which only needs revising to go to press. It will be entitled, "REASONS FOR THE HOPE THAT IS IN ME;" and is designed to meet just the want you name. It will perhaps be about 32 pages or more, and cost some $2.00 or $3.00 per 100. I hope to issue it soon. Grace be with you.

A preacher writes: "We may manage to deny ourselves of something and give a poor man's mite to the western mission."

Sept. Two more letters from "Pilgrim Brother" in two successive weeks, one with $2, and the other with $3, to close up his instalmints on Tract account. Have received another letter from him since. May God bless and reward him.

Sept. 17th. Through Crisis office received $1.00 of W. F. C., and $2.00 of Bro. M. of K.

Bro. H. writes, Sept. 22d: "I distributed those tracts you gave me among the help about the mill, praying at the same time that God might bless the perusal of them to his honor and glory, and to the salvation of souls. I find there is an ear to hear more of this doctrine. I have endeavored to improve every opportunity to the best of my ability to spread these great and glorious truths. I wish that some of God's faithful ones might come this way and give this people a few discourses upon the coming kingdom, etc. I believe it might be productive of good."

That's the way, Bro., when the tracts are read men will want to hear more; then preachers will have a better chance to work. Keep the tracts flying; by and by we'll see what can be done about preaching. The harvest is great and the laborers are few. Pray God to increase their number.

Sr. B. from Wis., writes: "Tracts will be gladly received by me though I am not able to buy them."

Sr. H. writes: "Struggle on in the cause of truth, and the reward is yours. O may the Lord bless and comfort you is my prayer. Pray for a sister who wants to know and live in the truth."

Bro. A writes: "A few more tracts, if you please, for the people like to read them, especially those "Important Questions." Send 100 setts of them, and I will send pay as soon as I can. Send a few of those on Universalism—"Will all men be saved." God bless you and yours.

Pray for me,
Spread the truth,
Keep the faith,
Eye the crown,
Run the race,
Wield the sword,
Keep it bright,
Then it will cut well.

Yours in faith, hope, peace and good will. A."

Sept. A Bro. met me and quietly said: "I want to take a little stock in your western Tract Fund; and with that he put a gold piece ($20) into my hands.

Sept. Old Bro. —— said, "every little helps," and so he handed in $10.

Sept. 28th. "A sister in Christ" from B. gives $1. By the way I see in some of my late reports blanks left after the dollars, thus $—. This is through the great haste in which I wrote; they should be filled out with one or two. One sister's donation was magnified from 50 cents to 50 dollars!! That is "an hundred fold in this life," isn't it? I hope its fruits will be even more than that!

In the space covered by this letter's report, I visited Canada, preached the word, baptized two and returned. Found one brother there with only one arm, part of one hand, only three fingers in the world, not a thumb or forefinger on his hand, who yet preaches for nothing, and earns his own living, making and selling tin ware, etc., and has something over to give to others who are needy. I thought I would mention his case as an example for some poor, lazy preacher to profit by. God bless you all. Your Bro., H. L. HASTINGS.

Sailors's Tract Fund.

THE BALL BEGINS TO ROLL.

It will not do to occupy too much space in the columns of our paper, so I shall only say a few words to those who are interested on this subject. "The ball begins to roll," slowly as yet; but the salvation of the poor, neglected sailor has touched some warm hearts even now, and I anticipate ere long that an abundant response will be [illegible]. I will make an extract from the letter of Bro. [illegible] Our Irish:

"Dear Bro. Cotton, I see by the Crisis of Oct. 5th, that you propose getting up a tract for sailors. I think it a good plan; for the sailor has been much neglected, especially by our Advent friends, in the great truths of the Bible, as they are now taught by those who believe in the near coming of our Savior, to raise the righteous dead, and change the living, ... to the wicked, death and destruction, instead of giving them eternal life. . . . . I have been a sailor myself, and know something about them. I here enclose you one dollar to aid you in starting the sailor's tract fund. Yours, waiting for that blessed hope."

The next who came was Bro. J. C. Day of So. Lancaster. He handed me a dollar, and wished me God speed. He also has been to sea and feels the subject deeply at heart.

Here is another extract from one who does not wish to appear only as "a reader of the Crisis." "Reading the call for a tract for seamen, and feeling as though I should like a share in the stock, I forward you two dollars to aid in the publication of such. May the good Lord bless his own truth; and cause it to be like good seed sown on good ground, which shall spring up and bear fruit unto eternal life." We say Amen.

Almost the only religious teaching which a seaman receives is from the works which are put into his hands. Let them therefore be of the right sort. If we have the truth let us spread it wide, that the waves and winds may bear it where the foot of missionary or priest has never trod—

That lonely isles, mid boundless sea,
May hear the dear and hallowed name
Of Him who died upon the tree,
A prey to mocking, pangs and shame;
That those who war the christian strife,
Might share the gift, Eternal Life.

The Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

CORRESPONDENCE.—No. 2.

My Dear Sister G.:—Go back with me to Jerusalem, and look for a time upon that company of disciples, who for forty days continued in prayer and supplication, waiting for "the promise of the Father" to be fulfilled in them. Not till "the day of Pentecost was fully come," could they receive the gift of the Spirit—not till Jesus was glorified—not till the time of the offering of the typical "first-fruits" had arrived. "On the morrow after the Sabbath," Christ had arisen from the dead, and become the "first-fruits" of the resurrection, typified by the offering of the "sheaf of the first-fruits" of the harvest; and from thence fifty days were to be counted, bringing Pentecost, which signifies the fiftieth part of a thing. On that day "two wave loaves," made of fine flour derived from the first-fruits, were to be offered as first-fruits unto the Lord. These were first-fruits in a different form from the "sheaf," and signified a different thing. The first signified the gathering of the wheat into the garner, at the resurrection; the other signified the harvest of souls that was to be gathered to Christ, by the saving of the good seed, or gospel of the kingdom. As Jesus beheld the multitudes, with their white garments fluttering in the breeze, approaching him from Samaria, awakened with interest by the strange tidings of the Samaritan woman, he says to his disciples, "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal." Again it is said,—"For the harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth more laborers into his harvest." As the antitype of the sheaf of first-fruits was Christ, the first-fruits of the resurrection of saints, so the antitype of the two wave loaves offered as first-fruits, was the conversion of three thousand, on the day of Pentecost, the first-fruits of a glorious harvest.

When the baptism came with all its wonderful power and tongues of fire, so strange were its effects, that some mockingly said, "These men are full of new wine." (In these days, those who receive the baptism, are said by some to be full of mesmerism.) But Peter, standing up in the midst, declared unto them that it was not so, but that what they then beheld, was what had been foretold by Joel the prophet; "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams; and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy." Here Peter most emphatically pronounces this manifestation of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost to be a fulfillment of what the prophet Joel had predicted respecting the pouring out of the Spirit in the "last days." Did the "last days" embrace only the day of Pentecost, and the day when the Spirit was poured out at the house of Cornelius? Were "all flesh" limited to the one hundred and twenty assembled in that "upper room" at Jerusalem, and Cornelius, with "his kinsmen, and near friends," who were assembled together in Cesarea to hear the gospel from Peter? If so, to be consistent [illegible] into darkness, and the moon into blood, all into that space of time, for these belong to the "last days." Who would take such a position as this? Yet if the outpouring of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost was the thing foretold by Joel, how can we avoid this conclusion, unless we say that it covers the entire ground from that time to the "great and notable day of the Lord?"

What was to be the result of this outpouring of the Spirit? The gift of prophecy was not as formerly to be limited to a few isolated individuals, who should feel the burden of the word of the Lord, and proclaim it to the people, but upon the servants and handmaidens of the Lord would this Spirit be poured out, and they would prophesy. Not to an Isaiah, a Jeremiah, Ezekiel and a Daniel only, would God speak in "dreams" and "visions;" but the result of this general effusion of the Spirit would be, that it would be no unfrequent matter for young men to see visions, and old men to dream dreams. Yet how often is even this sneered at, or disbelieved, as though it were not taught in God's holy Book, and more emphatically as a speciality of the last days!

When will men conform to the simplicity of the Bible? When will the truth, that this is the dispensation of the Spirit, be generally received by the professed disciples of Jesus Christ? If ushered in with such glorious manifestations of power—such happy results in the salvation of souls—such diversified gifts "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ," shall we say that they were to cease ere the end is accomplished, even "till we all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ?"

Yours in love, M. D. W.

Conference at Blooming Valley, Pa.

Met agreeable to appointment on Thursday evening, Oct. 13th, and a good congregation was present. But considerable dissatisfaction was apparent, as we were in expectation of certain preaching brethren from abroad and they were not with us, and did not come while the conference was in session. But notwithstanding the disappointment, we trust the conference has proved a blessing to the church, and to the community around. We were left to look beyond the watchmen, and God grant that we may ever do so.

Friday afternoon,—conference meeting. A good confessing time. Friday eve. Bro. Weeks, from Wells Corners, Erie Co., Pa., came, in company with quite a number of friends from Edenboro and vicinity, and aided us greatly in presenting the truth to the people.

Saturday morning, had a good time in prayer and exhortation. In the afternoon, Bro. Dunn of Hayfield, Crawford Co., Pa., gave us an interesting discourse on the Sonship; but had to leave us, as he had a discussion on the Immortality question to attend to the following day at 10 o'clock. Evening, Bro. Geo. Bush spoke to us on the promises to Abraham, etc.; followed by ourself and others in showing our duty as followers of Christ to earnestly contend for the faith, etc.

Sunday morning, 10 o'clock. Discourse by Bro. Weeks on "The Hope," together with the exhortation of the apostle to fight the good fight of faith, etc., followed by ourself, on the love of Christ, manifested in our behalf, the duties of professed christians and those out of Christ, etc. A short intermission. At one o'clock met for a love-feast of one hour, in which time forty-four spoke, besides singing thirteen different times, after which we attended to the Lord's Supper. Forty partook of the elements; during which remarks were made by brethren and sisters. As there were quite a number present, (besides the professed friends of Jesus,) and by signs manifested, we were satisfied that the Spirit of God, in connection with his word was operating on the hearts of some present, we gave the opportunity to arise and manifest the same. Two arose, showing their willingness to go forward in obedience to the commandments of God, in the ordinance of baptism. After which, Bro. Geo. Nellis, of Ashtabula, Ohio, and sister L. J. Fish, daughter of Bro. Wm. Fish, of Dayton, Ohio, came forward and were united in holy matrimony, and assisted us in singing—

"When shall we meet again?"

From thence a goodly company repaired to the water, where the ordinance of baptism was administered. Yours in hope,

John T. Ongley.

Correspondence.

From Geo. Dillabaugh.

Dearly Beloved:—Ye who minister in holy things, do not slacken your efforts in feeding the flock of God; for soon you will receive a crown of glory. The day begins to dawn. The true morning light is beaming forth with unmistakable evidence, and those who have closely examined the old [illegible] is near. Let the [illegible] our glorious Ancient Hope will keep us steady as long as we have it cast within the vail, where Christ our forerunner is gone. The professed christian world know but little about the gospel hope,—theirs is centered in death,—but the Bible christian's hope is centered in the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ the second time. Should we not love his appearing, and watch every token of his coming, and it be our constant theme? Yes, we will; for it is unto them that exhort one another, and so much the more as they see the day approaching, and are looking for him, that he will appear the second time without sin for the life of them who expect him. (Syriac.) Query. Will he appear for the life of those who do not expect him, and are scoffing at the signs and the fulfillment of prophecy we are holding forth to the world? * * * * Man has been trying to prove, ever since the devil told the first lie, that God does not mean what he says. And the controversy has been going on for about six thousand years, and the war is growing hotter; the old serpent has his mighty host of warriors in the field; and God has his little flock, and tells them to be strong; for one can chase a thousand, and two can put ten thousand to flight. Therefore dearly beloved Brn. and Srs., let us be careful how we deal with the pure word of the Lord. Let us be sure we are standing on the foundation of prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ the chief corner stone. Let us gird on the whole armor, that we may be able to stand against all the fiery darts of the enemy.

Seneca Falls, N. Y., Aug. 27.

From Wm. Whitford.

Bro. Grant:—We have engaged the labors of Bro. D. T. Ross, of Hebron, N. Y., for the year ensuing, whose family are now with us. Our house is well filled with attentive hearers. Several have united by baptism the year past. The cause appears to be rising, and I yet hope to live to see the truth triumph over error. Immortal-soulism (the foundation of harmonial Spiritualism) has had a mighty sway in this vicinity; but its walls are beginning to give way, and I trust the sure word of God will undermine the whole superstructure, and great will be the fall thereof. It is making inroads among the sectarian combinations, and the more candid are having recourse to the law and the testimony; and if they teach not according to these, it is because there is no light in them.

My soul has been made to rejoice at what God has wrought in Poultney, through the faithful preaching of his word; to him be all the glory. Amen. Yours waiting for redemption when Christ comes.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Portsmouth, N. H., Oct. 12th 1859, Alice Burnham, only child of Ephraim H. and Sarah D. Dennett, aged two months and four days.

"Himself hath done it" * all, oh how those words
Should hush to silence every murmuring thought,
Himself hath done it—He who loves us best,
He who our souls with his own blood hath bought.

"Himself hath done it," can it be then aught
Than full of wisdom, full of tenderest love?
Not one unneeded sorrow will be send,
To teach our wandering hearts no more to rove.

"Himself hath done it," yes, although severe
May seem the stroke, and bitter be the cup,
'Tis his own hand that holds it, and we know
He'll give us grace to meekly drink it up.

"Himself hath done it," oh, no arm but his
Could e'er sustain beneath earth's dreary lot;
But while we know he's doing all things well,
Our hearts his loving kindness question not.

"Himself hath done it;" then we fain would say,
"Thy will in all things ever more be done;"
E'en though that will remove whom best we love,
While Jesus lives, we cannot be alone.

And when in his eternal presence blest,
We at his feet our crowns immortal cast,
We'll gladly own, with all his ransomed saints,
"Himself hath done it"—all, from first to last.

Isaiah 38: 15.

Sleeps in Jesus, Jemima, only daughter of Wallace and Lydia Frost, aged two years.

The writer attended the funeral. Text, "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust."

"Yet these new rising from the tomb,
With lustre brighter far shall shine,
Revive with ever during bloom,
Safe from disease and from decline."

Only for the hope of the gospel this life of bereavement would pass heavily away, but the sounds of the Master's returning footsteps, as they fall upon the ear in the fulfillment of prophecy, gladden our hearts, and bid us gird up the loins of our minds and go "forth sounding the Saints' Eternal Jubilee, saying to them of a fearful heart, Be strong, for his reward is with him and his work before him. P. H. L.

Lawrenceville, C. E.

Bro. John Longstaff, aged about sixty years, departed this life on the second day of Oct., at his residence in Carysville, Champaign Co., O.

Bro. Longstaff was among the first believers in the near coming of our blessed Lord in 1844. Although disappointed in not meeting the King in his glory at the anticipated time, he at once fell back on the word—having done the will of God to wait patiently for the fulfillment of the promises; which he has done with christian firmness, bearing about in his body the dying of the Lord Jesus, from day to day, enduring all things and hoping all things in the gospel of God's dear Son; [illegible] spirit of Christ in the face of his enemies. A man of strong faith and untiring in his efforts to promote the cause of his master, under all circumstances, as much as possible,—highly esteemed by all his neighbors, however much opposed to his faith, Brother Longstaff, as a true child of God, has been a living monitor in the neighborhood wherever he has lived since our first acquaintance with him.

May God comfort the hearts of the bereaved, and preserve them unto his heavenly kingdom. E. R. Southwick.

Died, in Chelsea, on the morning of the 9th inst., of consumption, Mrs. Mary Gifford, wife of Capt. J. Gifford, aged thirty-eight years.

She went to her rest in peace and hope.

"How beautiful, on all the hills,
The crimson light is shed!
'Tis like the peace the dying gives
To mourners round her bed.
How mildly on the wand'ring cloud
The sunset beam is cast!
So sweet the mem'ry left behind
When loved ones breathe their last."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Steamship Europa, from Liverpool the 8th inst.

THE ZURICH CONFERENCE.

There is nothing further as to the proceedings at Zurich, beyond the general assertion that progress continued to be made towards signing the treaty of peace. It is said that the treaty will be completed, and will leave Austria a door open to a quarrel with Piedmont.

The Paris Constitutionnel contains an article by its chief editor, stating that the preliminaries at Villafranca had rescued Italy from every foreign intervention, no matter under what name, or from what power it might come. France confines herself to giving the Italians proper advice, which, if followed by them, would have insured the prosperity of Central Italy, but having, in vain, offered advice, she cannot go so far as to dictate orders to Italy.

The latest reports say that the treaty between France and Austria will probably be signed at Zurich on the 10th or 12th inst. Austria had consented to sign on all questions belonging to Lombardy.

FRANCE.

Conflicting rumors are current as to the French preparations against China. The Patrie says a special corps of fifteen hundred will soon be formed and sent to Egypt, thence to be conveyed by steamers to China.

The Bishop of Orleans, in joining the ultramontane demonstration in course of execution by the French Bishops, on account of affairs in Italy, hinted at the possible invasion of Ireland by Marshal Mc Mahon.

The fortifications on the coast between Havre and Caen are being carried on with extreme rapidity.

The London Herald's Paris correspondent says it is strictly true that Napoleon has a secret understanding both with Austria and Sardinia, which will enable him to command the whole Italian seaboard of the Mediterranean as far as Civita Vecchia, and another step in furtherance of the scheme is the expedition to Morocco, as the Mediterranean squadron, which had sailed from Toulouse with ten thousand men for the Morrocco frontiers, will command the African coast from Algiers to Ceuta.

The Times' correspondent is assured that the number of steel plated frigates yet ordered is six, and that twenty large transports, capable of conveying fifteen hundred men each, are building or ordered.

Letters from the Provinces in France confirm the reports of grand armaments at the various ports. The government had purchased land at a high price on the coast, for the purpose of erecting fortifications. At Bologne a floating battery is to be constructed without sails, navigated by steam, and armed with rifled guns.

ITALY.

A telegram from Modena to the Daily News says that on the 5th, Col. Anviti, late President of the Military Commission of the ex-Duke of Parma, was discovered to have arrived at Parma in disguise, having gone there to get up a conspiracy. He remained concealed for some time, and when recognized by the populace, great efforts were made to save him. He finally took refuge in the guard house, where four or five carbineers were stationed, but the door was forced, and Col. Anviti was killed. Perfect tranquility subsequently prevailed.

Letters from Naples say that great agitation continues to prevail there. Fourteen persons belonging to the highest families, have been arrested, among them Baron Gallotte, Marquis D'Affito and Marquis Garaciola. They are accused of holding meetings for discussing politics. The government was taking active precautionary measures against an outbreak.

It was reported that Garibaldi had entered the Marshes, and the rumor caused much sensation at Naples.

The latest letters say that the parties above referred to as under arrest, have been released without prosecution.

It is said that the Pope has informed the great Powers that he will not give up his temporal powers, and will, if necessary, call on all Catholic Powers to support him.

The Times Paris correspondent says: The latest and most accredited report respecting Italy is that the Grand Duke of Tuscany will regain his throne, not by forcible means, but by an appeal to universal suffrage, accompanied by the grant of a constitution and by a general amnesty, that the Duchess of Parma will have Modena, and that Parma will remain annexed to Piedmont. The warmest and most sanguine partizans have now given up hopes of being emancipated from Papal rule.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

THE ZURICH CONFERENCE.

A prolongation of the Conference is anticipated. Difficulties still remain unadjusted, and it was considered doubtful when the treaty of peace would be signed.

The Plenipotentiaries of all three Powers held a conference on the 9th, and couriers were afterwards dispatched to Vienna and Turin.

The Times Paris correspondent says the delay is attributed to Austria. The Vienna Cabinet was doing all it could to win over the French Emperor to its views, while at the same time it was reported to be preparing a coalition against him in Germany.

FRANCE.

It was stated that the Emperor had been unwell for a week or so, but the malady was not serious.

The Emperor and Empress quitted Biarritz, and arrived at Bordeaux on the 10th. Their reception was enthusiastic, and Bordeaux was en fete, notwithstanding the weather was unpropitious.

The return of the Emperor to Paris was expected to be marked by a very active policy in the highest political regions.

An immense floating battery, being built at Bordeaux, is to have bulwarks three feet in thickness.

The Post's Paris correspondent says that the Imperial Government is contemplating [illegible] what are called outrages against the Church. All the Bishops have received orders from Rome to preach for the restoration of the Italian Dukes.

The Paris Journal says that the Emperor Napoleon is becoming disgusted with the procrastination of Austria, and for the moment French policy inclines to a more intimate understanding with England. King Leopold's visit to Biarritz is also said to have contributed to improve the relations between the English and French Governments.

The national subscription in Italy, for the purchase of a million of muskets, was proceeding with great success.

The organization of military forces for the Italian League was daily becoming more complete. Gen. Fanti had his headquarter at Modena, Garibaldi, at Bologna, and Mezzacapo at Rimini. Volunteers in great numbers had arrived from Venitia, and deserters from the Papal army were flocking in.

The Dictator Farini had gone to Parma to see signal justice administered to the murderer of Anviti.

[One day later. Per Ocean Queen.]

ITALY.

Gen. Garibaldi had issued a proclamation to the army of Italy. He says: "Soldiers, the hour of a new struggle approaches. The enemy is threatening, and will, perhaps, attack us before many days are over. In addressing my old companions of Lombardy, I know I am not speaking to deaf men, and that it is enough to tell them that we are going to fight the enemy of Italy. I shall look to see you, then, firm in your ranks." Dated Bologna, Oct. 5.

The Pope was to have an interview with the King of Naples at Castle Gondolfo, where he will prolong his stay on account of the agitation reigning in Rome. After his departure, a demonstration took place in honor of the Sardinian Ambassador, and a crowd of visitors, estimated at ten thousand, called and left their cards at the Ambassador's residence. The French gen d'armerie preserved order, but the effect of the demonstration was profound. The Ambassador was to leave on the 10th, when another slight demonstration was expected.

TURKEY.

Additional discoveries had been made at Constantinople concerning the late conspiracy. It was asserted that incendiary machines had been discovered, which were intended to burn the European part of the town.

☞ The Rev. John Angell James died in Birmingham, England, on the first inst., in his 75th year. He was well known as a philanthropist and a religious writer.

Married.

In Blooming Valley, Pa., on the 16th inst., by Eld. J. T. Ongley, Mr. GEO. NELLIS of Ashtabula, O., and Miss LOUISA JANE FISH of Dayton, O.

In Danielsonville, Ct., Oct. 19th, by Eld. H. F. Carpenter, Mr. SMITH H. RANDALL and Miss PHEBE M. CHASE, both of Danielsonville.

Notices, &c.

Please say in this week's paper that I arrived home in Buffalo Oct. 14th, and shall be there for two months. J. BLAIN.

Notice.

I wish to say through the Crisis, that our appointments are all filled six or eight weeks ahead. We have preaching every other Sabbath, regularly. When brethren wish to preach in Bristol, Ct., if they would write to the corresponding secretary, it would save us much trouble. John H. Sutliffe.

Notice.

Bro. Grant.—Please inform those Brn. with whom arrangements have been made to come West, that I am living near the County Infirmary, four miles north of the City of Ravenna, Portage Co., O., and would be glad to have any of them stop and preach in this vicinity. Here is a large field, with but few, if any, laborers. May the Lord of the harvest send some of his faithful laborers this way. Wm. C. Peck.

Notice.

There will be a Second Advent Conference held in Worcester, Mass., with the brethren worshiping in Warren Hall, commencing Wednesday, Nov. 16th, at 2 o'clock P. M., to hold over the following Sunday. At this meeting in addition to the usual religious services, there will be a suitable portion of the time occupied in the investigation of doctrinal truths, among which, and not least, will be considered the evidences that exist in proof of the fact that the coming of our Lord is especially near. The brethren in that region, both preachers and lay brethren, are cordially invited to attend as the Lord may direct. The following preachers have declared their intentions to be present, and others are expected: J. Hemenway, J. Billings, J. G. Smith, H. Pratt, C. Goodrich, J. G. Hook.

S. W. Bishop, for the Brethren.

Conference

Will be held in Brown Co., Ill., at Mt. Pleasant, commencing Wednesday evening, Nov. 2d, to continue over Lord's day following. Let there be a general gathering.

Walter Pratt.

P. S.—I intend to visit our friends in Jersey Co., Ill., in Nov., Providence permitting. Due notice will be given. W. P.

Bound my tempest-tost bark now the dark billows [illegible];
And above me red lightnings in wrathfulness flash!
[illegible] world, a mere speck—
But the angels are present to watch and protect;
And through high rising billows my bark would o'er-[illegible]
I am safe, for a hand that's unseen grasps the helm.

Though fiercely and wildly rolls on the dark storm,

Jubilee! and ere long on the horizon verge,
Beyond the blue waters—beyond the wild surge,
I shall greet on my home in the fair promised land,
And shall anchor my billow-rocked bark by its strand! H. L. B.

From "The Gift of Power."

Christian Obligations.

BY REV. S. H. PLATT.

(Concluded.)

6th. Because it is practically estimating the fashions of the world as of greater value than the souls of brethren, and personal innocence!

"There are always some who are liable to be hindered, or turned aside by such examples. They are conscious that they cannot indulge in such things themselves, yet they see almost the whole example of the church against them; and they soon conclude that it is over-righteousness in them to be so scrupulous. They yield; the conscience is enthralled, and they suffer loss, or perhaps go back to the world.

Others seeing such inconsistency, cannot admit that the true christian would be guilty of it; and hence denounce all such, as self-deceived, or willful hypocrites; and thus their charity is blasted, and Satan gains a fearful advantage over them. Would it not be well to ask, not whether we can practice such things with no injury to ourselves; but "can we do it with no injury to others?" St. Paul declares such injury to another to be "sin against the brother, and sin against Christ."

"But take heed lest this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak. For if any one see thee, which hast knowledge, sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him that is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols, and through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish for whom Christ died. But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ."—1 Cor. 8: 9–12. The facts referred to in this language were as follows. Many of those to whom the apostle wrote, were converted Gentiles. While heathen, they had considered meat offered to their idols as sacred; and after their conversion, they thought that if such meat were eaten, it must be as sacred to the idol still. Others, who felt that "an idol is nothing in the world," regarded such meat as common like other meat, and to be eaten with no more scruples. But the apostle prohibits it, "lest the conscience of him that is weak (i. e., who regarded it as sacred still) be emboldened," etc. We have been thus particular on this passage, because it involves a great principle, of equal force in all ages, viz., "That the lawfulness of men's actions, depends not solely, either upon the lawfulness of the subject matter, nor upon the conscience of the doers of them, considered in itself, but as considered with reference to the conscience of others, to whom, by the law of charity, they are bound so to behave themselves, as by none of their actions to give them occasion of sin."—Stackhouse, Body of Divinity.

This principle might be abundantly confirmed by an appeal to other Scriptures were it necessary, but let us make the application. Even granting for the moment that this practice is right in itself, and meets the approval of your conscience, still you have no right to do it if it wounds the conscience of a brother; for, by so doing, you sin against him, and sin against Christ.

It will not do to demur against this; for God has said it! and with him be your quarrel; not with me.

7th. Because it is an open violation of the important Scripture precept, "avoid the appearance of evil."

The necessity of observing this precept may be seen in a single consideration. As we have no other measure by which to judge men, we are compelled to judge of them by what they openly seem to be, rather than by what they inwardly are. [illegible] if the appearance be evil, our [illegible] confidence are lost, and consequently [illegible] avenue of good to the [illegible]. Whether we can innocently [illegible] of the probability [illegible] exceedingly questionable [illegible] guilt of negligence [illegible]. But this, too, [illegible] and unfounded assumption ... We should be [illegible] of the commencement of this article, 1 Tim. 2: 9–10, and 1 Peter 3: 3–4. To show that there is no possibility of evading the force of these commands, and that they are binding upon all who profess the religion of Christ, and that he who tramples upon them, does it at his peril, let us inquire—what degree of respect should we render to the express prohibitions of Scripture, and how far may we qualify them in our interpretations? In regard to the first part of the inquiry, it is evident that a prohibition emanating from the same source, and attended with the same sanctions, is equally authoritative as an express command. The Decalogue itself places this beyond question, for eight of the ten commandments are in the form of prohibitions.

As to the interpretation which we are to give to such, a high authority has said: "I hold it for a most infallible rule in expositions of sacred Scripture, that when a literal construction will stand, the furthest from the letter is commonly the worst. There is nothing more dangerous than this licentious and deluding art, which changeth the meaning of words, as alchemy doth, or would do, the substance of metals, maketh of everything what it listeth, and bringeth in the end all truth to nothing."—See Hooker's Eccl. Polity, book 5. chap. 59.

Dr. Peck, before quoting the above, says: —"Language is always to be understood in its literal or natural sense, unless there is something in the nature of the subject to which it is applied which requires the restricted meaning." Applying this rule to the subject before us, we conclude that the passages with which we commenced signify only what the words, used in their plain, natural, obvious meaning convey, and all that meaning, without evasion or limitation. To this it may be objected—"that they were undoubtedly intended to be understood thus, at the time they were written, but were not designed to be of perpetual obligation."

In reply we may state another rule of interpretation. (See Horne's Introduction abridged, p. 152.) "Negatives are binding at all times; that is, we must never do that which is forbidden, though good may ultimately come from it."

Another consideration which shows it to be of general application is, it was first written by Peter to all christians, and about four or five years afterwards, was deemed of sufficient importance to form a part of St. Paul's instructions to Timothy, as pastor of the Church at Ephesus, thus giving it a fresh sanction, and rendering it obligatory upon the ministry to enforce the rule given for the government of all.

Besides, the same reasons exist for it now as then. In confirmation of all the above, it may be well to consider the fact, that no such moral text ever has but one meaning, which meaning is to be ascertained just as we would that of any other writing, viz., by the whole scope of the context, taken in connection with the general sentiments of the writer. The scope is here plainly announced, to "win the husband," see 1 Peter 3: 1; and in order to do this, they are to behold "your chaste conversation, coupled with fear," "whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, of wearing of gold, or of putting on of (costly) apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God, of great price." "For after this manner, in the old time, the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves," etc. Let common sense say which would be the most likely to win the husband or others from the world to Christ, the exhibition of the spirit of vanity, which loves to be decked in the gaudy trappings of the world, or the meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God, of great price! The general sentiments of the writer, none can deny, favor a total separation from the world, in spirit and in practice.

It would be needless to quote passages in illustration of the fact, see chap. 1: 13, 14, chap. 2: 9–12, chap. 4.: 1–3, etc. We conclude, then, that if there is any meaning at all in those passages, it is that which is borne out upon the very face of the words employed, and we have no right to bend them to any other.

By what authority can any one expunge this commandment from the sacred oracles, or, what is equivalent to it, explain away its force, and make it a mere form of words, with no meaning and no sanction? Let such beware, lest he practically bring upon himself the curse denounced against such as "take away from the words of the book," etc. Rev. 22: 19.

Others justify themselves by quoting Scriptural example. They point to the splendid ritual and magnificent accompaniments of the Mosaic dispensation, and triumphantly read, in the costly fabrics, and golden ornaments, and gem-set decorations of the consecrated priesthood, the Divine sanction for their use in all coming time: forgetting alike that that was a system of types and shadows, [illegible] and externals, while ours is the very reverse in all, and besides is guarded against such an unwarrantable application by the express prohibition of our Lord. As well advocate the [illegible] system of the Jewish polity, their sacrifices and all—as rest the justification of this practice upon their example. Since, then, the argument from this example proves too much, we may pass it by as proving nothing.

9th. It is one of the greatest obstructions to God's cause that now exists.

An evil that paralyzes almost every arm, and palsies the energy of nearly all good influence, and threatens at no distant day to obliterate all the landmarks of vital christianity, must be of sufficient magnitude to awaken the earnest solicitude of every true lover of the sacred cause. Were it confined to a small locality, or to a single class, it might be uprooted, or at least curtailed in its progress and restrained in its influence.

But pervading, as it does, all places, and commanding the hosts of every rank, it spreads its tides of desolating worldliness wherever the cross casts its shadow, and triumphs most within the sacred precincts of God's own sanctuary. Its upas breath is everywhere, instilling its subtle poison into the life-current of the young convert, and transforming his warm, active zeal, and earnest prayers, and burning love, into the cold, apathetic breathings and fitful starts of this charnel dream-land of his soul: and it calls the myriads of modern Israel to dance around the Golden Calf of their own making, while their offended God from Sinai beholds their base ingratitude. O! "when will He arise to shake terribly the earth?"

But the remedy! Where is that? Chiefly, fellow-christians, in you! The church authorities may, and ought to do something to prevent all such accessions to her membership hereafter, but they already swarm within her pale. Let your light shine. Be the first to renounce the unhallowed practice, and ere long the sacred leaven will work out through the masses of the church and purify the whole. Ministers have here a most solemn duty. "Not to mend our rules, but keep them," is one of our acknowledged obligations; yet, in the face of it, we have been filling up the church with those who do not, and never did keep them! Verily, there is recreancy somewhere that should make us blush, and consider well whither we are tending!

For the Crisis.

The Besetting Sin.

Amid the catalogue of God-dishonoring sins, what one is so constantly beguiling the christian, and leading him into deep clouds of despondency and sadness, oft threatening to overwhelm him utterly, as that of unbelief? "Believe in God, believe also in me," was the command of our blessed Savior. One great object of his mission to the world was, to restore to man that confidence in Jehovah which had been lost through the influence of that wily serpent, who, creeping into Eden, impugned the veracity of the Holy One, and is still at work with his six thousand years of experience to scatter the dismal shades of unbelief over our erring planet. For we walk by faith, not by sight, saith the apostle.

Just so long as faith is in exercise, is the christian progressing in the pathway of holiness. But let unbelief enter, and he is "departing from the living God." And, while continuing in that state, every step is bearing him still further in a retrograde course. How dishonoring to God is this sin! Does not man feel insulted and abused, when he is distrusted by those to whom he has proved himself true? How much more then the holy God, who has in ways without number proven himself "just and true" to his children, is abused by their distrust!

We are to "walk by faith"—"live by faith"—"fight the good fight of faith," and so on. That unbelief is the sin against which we are particularly warned, is shown in Hebrews. In the tenth chapter we are presented with a long list of those believing ones, who through faith did many wonderful things, lived in a manner singular indeed to the worldling, and died in the triumphs of that faith, assured that their "light afflictions would work out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And then, in the first verse of the succeeding chapter, the apostle says,—"Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience," etc.

Your besetting sin, then, and mine, fellow christian, is unbelief. While we hold on, as it were, to the hand of our Leader, we are safe. But, if we let go our hold and turn aside to the right hand or to the left, or, in other words, if we cease to walk by faith, and fail to believe with all our hearts what "God the Lord hath spoken," we are in imminent danger. Foes are on every side, and only the shield of faith will "quench the fiery darts of the wicked one."

EXHORTATION.—If there is anything which I dread and abhor in a prayer meeting, it is the professional rattle of exhortation. The church should preach better than the pulpit, but it must be through the narration of heart-experiences—through the unfolding of christian living. This alone benefits those who speak, and edifies those who hear.

Selections.

Preaching upon Popular Proverbs.

BY TIMOTHY TITCOMB.

"Speak the truth, and shame the devil."

"He can never be God's martyr who is the devil's servant."

"Neutrals are soused from above and singed from below."

"The way to Babylon will never bring you to Jerusalem."

"Truth may be blamed, but shall never be shamed."

There is a great deal of confusion along the line of fence which divides the good people of this world from the bad. The fence itself is bestridden by an uncounted host, on the right side of which there is a multitude, standing and looking wistfully toward the wrong, and on the wrong side, another multitude looking toward the right. We cannot count those who are undecided in their convictions; still less can we count those who, with their convictions correctly formed, have voluntarily chosen a neutral policy, and taken position upon the fence. Undecided, compromising, neutral, negative, these men form a portion of humanity as respectable in numbers as they are contemptible in quality. Asses between two bundles of hay, dogs in the manger—eating not and hindering others from eating—houses divided against themselves, men of putty who always flatten under pressure, men of pewter who never take an edge under any rasping, slaves in the market and tools for the crafty, self-seekers, and self-losers by self-seeking, soused from above and singed from below, these neutrals are as uncomfortable and unhappy in themselves as they are powerless as positive forces in society.

Manhood demands that a man shall take a position on the side of truth, and, in some way, declare himself in that position. It bids him, if it be necessary to achieve this step, to cut off old companionships, to compromise apparent momentary advantages, to incur enmities, and endure hardships. It demands that he plant himself upon the ground of right, and stand there though all the world forsake him—stand there and fight there if necessary. Self-respect—always requisite for the attainment of the respect of others—is of vastly more value than the respect of others. There can be no manhood without it, and true manhood will always hold it above mercenary advantage, or temporary popularity, or dread of singularity, or personal peace and comfort. A man who voluntarily refrains from taking a position toward which his convictions urge him, because it will disturb pleasant relations, or interfere with his pecuniary interests, or compromise his comfort, does not deserve the name of a man. He is always a coward—often a knave.

There are always in society two marked classes of neutrals. One of these is, on the whole, more to be pitied than blamed, being composed of men of weak will, with excessive love of approbation and great good nature. It seems to be impossible for them to withstand the fire of opposition from any quarter. They become accustomed to yield or dodge every disputed point. They cannot stand up before a strong will and assert themselves, without experiencing emotions akin to guilt. They half doubt their personal right to an opinion. For walking boldly out upon the field of right and wrong, and taking a position, and maintaining it, they do not appear to have the legs. I say that such men are in some respects the objects of pity, because their mental and moral constitution is at fault. They feel themselves almost obliged to take position on the fence, and to spend their lives in bowing in about equal measure to each of the opposition camps—afraid to dismount for fear of being in somebody's way, or treading upon somebody's toes. I suppose there may be the germ of manhood in many of these men, and that it might, under favorable circumstances, be developed, but the most of them consent to be nothing and to be good for nothing while they live, and to die "without an enemy in the world," simply because nobody deems it worth while to be their enemy.

The other class is made up of men who, in all matters of principle and policy, make it a point to take middle ground. They delight to be called "conservative men," but their conservatism always relates to their own reputation and interests. They desire the good opinion of all classes, and imagine that their moderation and their location between two extremes will enable them to use both for the accomplishment of their purposes. They are ambitious of preferment, perhaps, or greedy for wealth, or desirous of popularity. They aim to make themselves stronger by drawing to their support the sympathies of all parties, through direct or indirect alliance with all parties. To some of them, "there is something good in all parties"—to others, "all parties are equally bad." Others, still, convey the impression that they are but passengers in the social vessel, having no interest in ship or cargo, and indifferent as to the name and qualifications of the captain. Now I despise these men—though there may be among them those whose talents I admire. Conservative and reputable, negative, neutral and contemptible, I recognize in them no element of manhood—no chivalry, no bravery, no devotion to conviction, no true self-respect, and no supreme love of truth and the right.

Humanity demands that a man shall take his position on the side of truth and the right, and maintain it. We look around us and see how positively pronounced are the agencies engaged in the prostitution of humanity. Despotism enforces its power at the lips of the cannon, error preaches upon the mountain-tops, cruelty and wrong work out their ends by systems cunningly devised and openly defended, drunkenness displays its enticements at the corners of the streets, prostitution flaunts its colors in open day and crowds purity from the streets at night, corruption—recognized and unrebuked—riots in the various departments of government, mobs rule cities and perjury presides at the ballot-box. All that ambition, avarice and lust can do to prostitute humanity to their purposes is done, and done boldly. Humanity, therefore, demands that all true manhood, shall stand boldly pronounced upon the side of right. It demands that the power arrayed against the infamy and wrong that afflict it shall be positive—that there shall be no middle ground, no neutrality.

What manhood and humanity demand so plainly, christianity demands with still a more pronounced authority. In christianity, there is no middle ground. He that is not for it is against it. There is no such thing as being God's martyr and the devil's servant at the same time. We know those to-day, and have known many others, who profess to have a great deal of respect, or reverence, for religion. I have no doubt that much of this respect is honest—that it is not all a hypocritical pretense. They love to have their families attend church. They never interfere with the religious instruction of their children. They are willing to pay their share toward the support of the institutions of religion. They attend church themselves, perhaps, and shun all profanity and debauchery, but they fail to show their respect for religion by embracing it, receiving it as the ruling element of their life, and declaring themselves to be its adherents and possessors. I suppose that such men imagine that, on the whole, they are on the side of religion—that their influence, in the main, is in its favor. They declare with their lips and their intellects that religion is a good thing, while with their hearts and lives they declare that it is not worth personally securing and possessing. How much is such favor as this worth? How valuable is that testimony which the heart and life belie? Ah, no! There is no middle ground here. It is either everything or nothing.

Christianity asks for no man's patronage, and seeks for no man's favor. It is something given, for man to accept or reject, as he may see fit. It is something bestowed, for a man to incorporate into his own life, if he will. It is an infinite favor from an infinite benefactor, and does not go around seeking the endorsement of those who do not care enough about it to receive it. To all those who decline to make its personal acquaintance, it says: "take me or leave me. No service that you can render me, by words and patronizing deeds, can counterbalance the contempt which you manifest by refusing to me a dwelling place in your heart. I ask for no friends, and I can possibly have none, who are not willing to take me into their life, and acknowledge me to the world. I reign supreme, or I reign not at all. If you fail to accept me, you reject me, and are, to all intents and purposes, my enemy. If I can do nothing for you personally, then you can do nothing for me. If you gather not with me, you scatter abroad."

There is another class for whom Christianity has no more favors than for this—a class which holds a relation to Christianity no more honorable than this. I refer to those who profess to be christians, but who accommodate themselves—their thoughts, habits, pleasures and pursuits—to whatever society may envelope them. They are exceedingly pious at a prayer meeting, and uncommonly sharp in business, devotedly attendant on the public religious services of the Sabbath, and very forgetful of their religious obligations during the week; perfectly at home in a respectable carousal, not particularly conscientious in their politics, careless in the use of their neighbors' names, indulgent often in a kind of mongrel profanity—a cross between slang and swearing—that would be wicked if it dared to be, and meanly powerless always before the scoffs and bold iniquities of the infidel and the scoundrel. Riding the horse of selfishness with a christian profession in one pocket of their saddle-bags and a worldly life in the other, sailing the sea of life with religious papers and a black flag, professedly bound to Jerusalem, yet taking the well known Babylon road, these men occupy, in fact, no neutral ground. They are not for Christianity, but against it.

There is still another class—and in the history of Christianity it was never larger than at the present time—which openly affects a kind of neutrality in its relations to Christianity. This class holds the Bible as, on the whole, an excellent book, and Jesus Christ as, without doubt, the best man that ever lived. There is much in Christianity that they admire, but much that has been superseded. They have a kind of religious philosophy that embraces all there is that is good in Christianity, and discards all that is not up to the wants of the present age—particularly all with which it does not harmonize. With such men, reason stands above revelation, to approve or condemn it, point by point. Some of these men go so far as to call themselves christians, while others adopt, with more consistency, other names. Now, Christianity is what it pretends to be, or nothing—a complete and authoritative system of religion, or an imposition. It is something above all religions and all philosophies, in that it is divine, or, like all other religions and philosophies, in that it is incomplete, incompetent and human. I am utterly at a loss to know how any man can call himself a christian—much more at a loss to know why he should desire to be called one—who denies the supreme authority of Christianity as the one true and complete religion revealed by God to men. I declare there is no middle ground here for philosophical eclectics to occupy. The denial of a part of Christianity is the denial of the whole as a complete and true religion.

What manhood, humanity and christianity conspire so evidently to demand, must be in the line of a sound policy. No man can prosper in wealth, reputation and happiness who strives to win them against the force of such demands as these, so that self-interest, intelligently consulted, demands that a man shall pronounce himself on the side of the good, the pure and the true. All the men who have won a name that will worthily live, who have attracted to themselves the admiration and love of the world, whose words and lives have become powers, felt and acknowledged, upon the hearts and life of mankind, whose influence has mingled in the tide of good that gathers volume from age to age to whelm at last the black continents of wrong, have been positive men—self committed, self declared—men of manhood, humanity and christianity, who shunned the fence, voluntarily cut off their own retreat, and battled bravely where they stood and while they lived. The policy of neutrality is suicidal. It is not only cowardly and mean, but it is thriftless and disastrous.

Positiveness is both a prerogative and a privilege. If it be a privilege to live, it is a privilege to live for a purpose, and be recognized as a true man. To add a single ounce to the propelling power of human progress, to remove one stone from its path, to reform one abuse, to rectify one wrong, to add a single ray to the gathering flood of light which is to envelop the world, to [illegible] intelligently [illegible], battle for it and [illegible] accept a privilege which gives us a place among all good intelligences, and makes us co-workers with God himself. It is to achieve self-respect, to make a place for one's self in the world, to enter into the sympathies of the noblest, the bravest and the best that live, to make life savory and significant, to put away the temptations to meanness, and to be upon the side that will as surely win as there is a God in Heaven.

Let every man be something or other. A misguided zeal is better than lukewarmness. It is better to be a living cock on a dunghill, telling a sleepy village of the coming of the morning, than a gilded cock on a church spire, voiceless and wheeling to the touch of every wind. In some place, in some office, by some means, let every man assert himself, and exert his measure of power for the redemption of the world to goodness.—Springfield Republican.

An Evening Prayer.

How gladly at this evening hour
I come before thy throne,
To thank thee for the many gifts
Around my pathway strewn.
Oh may I feel that in thy love
A shelt'ring rock I find;
Help me to do thy will each day,
With uncomplaining mind.

A little thing it seems, this hour,
To give my heart to thee;
But there are times when round my soul
Earth flings her witchery.
Oh, in that hour, be dearer thou,
Than all earth's charms to me—
I ask on earth no higher joy
Than's found in serving thee.

Oh watch o'er those that smile to-night
Around the fire at home;
Perchance their thoughts are wand'ring now
With one whose footsteps roam.
I can but weep to think of them,
The loved so far away;
Father, be round them at this time,
And guide them day by day.

I praise thee for this gracious gift,
Though far from them, and lone,
I still can bow in earnest prayer
For them, before thy throne.
And should they when this eve is spent,
Come not with thanks to thee;
Forgive whate'er they 've done amiss,
Forgive it all for me.

And when we pass beyond this vale,
With disappointment rife,
Bring us to where thy glories beam
Around the tree of Life.
Not for the good that we have wrought,
Nor aught that we have done;
Oh not for this, but for His sake,
Thy well beloved Son. S. M. R.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Hygiene and the Ministry.

BY JAMES C. JACKSON, M. D.

TO CLERGYMEN.—(Concluded.)

There is a disease, which many of you suffer, which is called MINISTER'S SORE-THROAT. This of late years has largely crippled your influence, by rendering you unequal to your duties. Great numbers of you have sought relief at the hands of physicians unavailingly. Except in the last stages, when the disease has spread itself along the mucous linings to the substance of the lungs, establishing consumption, it is curable. It is generally supposed that it is generated by your pulpit efforts. This is a mistake. While it is clear to all sharp observers that you talk too much for your own good, as well as for the good of your hearers—that in the light of sound philosophy no man should hear more than he can readily digest, than he can appropriate, and that therefore no one should utter what no one is competent to hear, it is not your duty to talk less, because to talk makes, or directly tends to make, your throat sore. No man has disease of the throat from talking. This produces the reverse effect. John Wesley never had sore-throat. Whitfield never had bronchitis. The plow-boy, who drives stolid oxen day after day, hollowing whoa! haw! gee! a thousand times a day, comes up the lane at sunset singing a ditty with a voice as clear as a whip-poor-will's. The captain or mate of a vessel, who screams vociferously amid wind or storm-howlings, is not in the hands of a physician. The auctioneer, who the year round peddles his wares daily for hours together under incessant and rapid vocal effort, is not a consumptive. It is a mistake that you bring on the disease by preaching. That has only an aggravating effect, when the disease is already established. Generally the difficulty originates in the stomach, and the seat of it is the mucous coat. It is caused by improper food and drink, whose direct and necessary tendency is to inflame the mucous membrane. In many instances it is induced in consequence of the scrofulous poison introduced into the system under the eating of the flesh of animals. As a class, ministers eat largely of animal food. It stimulates you, makes you feel strong, rouses you to exertion, gives you vivacity, and therefore you think it just what you need. Now, while you are getting what so many of you think you need, you are also getting what has sent thousands of your profession and hundreds on hundreds of thousands of others to untimely graves; you are getting scrofula into your blood, to lodge with tenacity on your mucous coat, and give you the [illegible] dyspepsia, unless nature, who is wise and strong, shall be able to [illegible] the stomach, by sending the poison to [illegible] in the bowels, giving you the worst form of piles. If you reflect, you will find that many of you who are suffering now have suffered with the ailment before it showed itself, were troubled with more or less severe forms of indigestion. Nothing is more common than that then, by a process called metastasis, trouble at the stomach suddenly ceases, and trouble at the throat as suddenly begins. To seek a cure of the difficulty by burning the throat with lunar caustic, is useless. It is the expedient of the hour, and instead of curing the disease, only transfers it. The disease is curable, but in no way which does not involve the sufferer by it in the use of most rigidly simple diet, judicious bathing, and abundantly vigorous muscular exercise. * * * *

One difficulty to which I would call your attention is the remorseless violation by the people of all, or nearly all, the laws on which life on earth depends.

Let me classify our population for your ease in estimating the probabilities of christianity becoming supreme with them:

1. Children who when born show that they are hereditarily poisoned. These are always re-poisoned by drugs.

2. Children who when born are healthy, but from ignorance or carelessness become sick, they are also poisoned by medicine.

3. Persons of all ages—females especially—poisoned by tea.

4. Persons of all ages poisoned by coffee.

5. Persons who are made scrofulous by eating fattened meat.

6. Opium eaters, who, since the crusade against alcohol, have increased 75 per cent.

7. Tobacco users—a constantly increasing and filthy host.

8. Drinkers of alcoholic liquors, who are to-day as numerous as twenty-five years ago.

Now, of the whole people, what per cent. are thus abnormally excited and induced to live so as to make all your attempts to convert them, while thus living, vain? Let us see.

Thirty per cent. of all the children born in the United States are hereditarily diseased.

Eighty per cent. are poisoned before five years old by medicines.

Ninety-five per cent. of the whole population are poisoned by medicines.

Forty per cent. are, additionally to the drug-poisoning, poisoned by Tobacco.

Fifty per cent. by Tea.

Forty-five per cent. by Coffee.

Ninety per cent. by fattened meats.

Sixty per cent. by bad air.

Ten per cent. by patent medicines.

Twenty-five per cent. by alcoholic drinks.

As these persons are drugged, drunken, and debauched, you cannot make them see heaven, however clear the sky, nor hear its music, however grand the symphonies.

Intense as is my faith in christianity, I know that it is a system needing for its success a good understanding, on the part of its friends, of the means it has on hand, and of the way to use them, and I must say that I am daily pained at the wasteful expenditure of its munitions of war. For large experience and long and serious reflection have perfectly convinced me, that before anything remarkable can be done for the improvement of the spiritual condition of our people, better ideas must obtain in regard to physical life. Your batteries must be turned against the evil habits of men, against the vices which grow up under physical indulgence and a violation of the laws of life. You must bring christianity to bear in the sphere of the appetite and passions, and hold men and women to such purity and simplicity of bodily conditions as shall insure capability of appreciating truth and possibility of receiving it. Then you will make headway, and not till then.

HOW TO MAKE SLEEP REFRESHING.—Take sufficient exercise in the open air during the day. Eat light suppers, always two or three hours before retiring. Avoid tea and coffee, and all unnatural stimulants.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..........$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..........1.00
For a single copy 3 months..........50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months...15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months 22..00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

For the Crisis.

Not the Earthly.

Vain are all terrestrial pleasures—
Mixed with dross the purest gold;
Seek we then for heavenly treasures—
Treasures never waxing old.
Let our best affections centre
On the things around the throne;
There no thief can ever enter;
Moth and rust are there unknown.

Earthly joys no longer please us;
Here would we renounce them all;
Seek our only trust in Jesus,
Him our Lord and Master call.
Faith, our languid spirits cheering,
Points to a brighter home to come,
Bids us look for his appearing,
Bids us triumph in his love.

May our light be always burning,
And our loins be girded round,
Waiting for our Lord's returning,
Longing for the welcome sound.
Thus the christian life adorning,
Never need we be afraid,
Should he come at night or morning,
Early dawn or evening shade.

For the Crisis.

The First and Second Adam.

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

(Concluded.)

"And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."—1 Cor. 15: 45.

VI. The first Adam, by losing life, became a victim to death. Death over him and his posterity has reigned, and the whole creation has groaned and travailed together in pain until now.

On the other hand, the second Adam has achieved a victory over death and the grave. He rose triumphant from the grave; and death can have no more dominion over him, as he has said, "Behold I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of death and hades." As he has gotten the victory, so will he give it to his servants. Said he, "As I live ye shall live also." Again, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." The victory they have when free from death, and of course not before. The idea that man has the victory over death when dead, is an absurdity. Every one, after a moment's reflection, must know that there is no truth in it. The fact is, when man dies he is the victim and death is the victor. This relation would be forever, but for the resurrection. It is at that time, that mortality is to put on immortality. It is plain that there can be no victory over mortality until it is swallowed up of life.

Death is the gate to the grave. The resurrection is the way to heaven and glory, life and victory. Christ said to Peter, upon this rock—that is, on himself—will I build my church, and the gates of hell (the grave) shall not prevail against it. None of the many ways that lead to the grave shall prevail; for if they should, the church would be lost. But Christ will give victory, by opening the way and bringing the church out of the grave. Then will they claim the victory over the last enemy, which is death. 1 Cor. 15: 54.—"So when . . . this mortal shall put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory." Victory is at the time man is freed from death, which cannot be until the mortal ceases to be mortal. The apostle adds, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." This will be given at his coming. Paul said that Jesus would give him a crown of righteousness at his appearing.—2 Tim. 4: 8.—Said Peter, "when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."—2 Peter 5: 4. Said Jesus, "Ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." The victory, crown of life and glory, and the recompense, are all to be given by the second Adam at his coming and the resurrection of the just. [illegible] things should be where God has placed them. "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder."

VII. The first Adam had a kingdom. All the creatures God made before he made Adam, in which was the breath of life, or living soul, were put under his control. They were subject to his will, and would have remained so, if man had properly regarded the laws of his being.

He had for his dominion the whole earth. This was the place of his abode. He knew no other, he needed no other. The place was very good. Man was adapted to his place,—made capable of enjoying it forever. Had every thing remained good as God made it, man would not have died; and he would have remained in his kingdom forever. Continuing through a probationary time he would have secured eternal life, and consequently could not have died. The idea that man would have died from some other cause, if he had not sinned, is without the least foundation; it is opposed to reason, scripture, and fact. "The body is dead because of sin." "Death has passed upon all men for that all have sinned." "The wages of sin is death."

The second Adam is to have a kingdom.

Jesus was not only to be a Prophet to inform the people, and a Priest to offer sacrifice and be a mediator for the people, but was to be a King to reign over them. To this end, we have the following: Isaiah 9: 6, 7,—"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and of peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

In confirmation of this prophecy, the angel Gabriel was sent to say to the mother of our Lord, Luke 1: 31—33,—"And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Acts 2: 30, 31.—"Therefore, (David) being a prophet, and knowing that God hath sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before spoke of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption."

In these passages several things are worthy of note. First, Christ is to have a kingdom. This kingdom is the establishment and perpetuity of the reign of David. This kingdom is to be without end. Christ, the son of David according to the flesh, is to reign on the throne of this kingdom. This being true, he will reign in the flesh; for he was David's son in this, and in no other sense. His reign, therefore, will be literally and personally. In fact this is the only reign of our Savior spoken of in the revelation. He did not enter upon his reign while here, and of course not when he went away. After he had left the earth he said to John, Rev. 3: 21, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." He was then not on his throne but on his Father's throne. He has not yet changed his position. And he will not until he comes to judge the world. 2 Tim. 4: 1.—"Who shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and kingdom." The appearing of our Lord, the judgment, and the kingdom are to take place at the same time. Because this kingdom is in the future, we are taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come." Until this prayer is answered, the kingdom will be in the future.

Where is the kingdom to be? The prayer of our Lord answers,—"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." It is to be on the earth. David's throne was on the earth and it is on this that Christ is to reign.

It is reasonable that the second Adam should have the kingdom which the first Adam lost. He came to seek and save that which was lost. By his obedience, all that the first Adam had, and would have had, had he obeyed, belongs to him by right. The revelation gives us the earth for his place of reign. All the promises to Christ and to the saints point out the earth as the place of the kingdom of our Lord and his people. That Christ was to reign on any other place, in any other sense than the seed of David—personally on the earth, is [illegible], without reason or scripture [illegible].

VIII. The above view of the kingdom is sustained, in what is said of the inheritance and final abode of the saints. Psalm 37: 11.—"But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."—Ver. 29.—"The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever." Dan. 7: 27.—"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." This is the same dominion that was given to Adam; and it is the kingdom God prepared from the foundation of the world for holy persons. Adam lost it by sin: Christ restores it by obedience. It will be given to all who shall be counted worthy through him to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead. Matt. 5: 5.—"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Luke 12: 32.—"Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." John, in the Revelation, heard the representatives of the church in prospect sing, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God, kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. 5: 9, 10. Said the prophet Isaiah 65: 17, "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth." Said Peter, 1 Pet. 3: 13, "We, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

The earth in its present state is to undergo such a change by fire, in its restitution, as will make it a new earth. That is, it will be brought back into its original condition. That state, in contrast with the present, will be new. In the earth thus redeemed, the saints, with the second Adam, will dwell forever. This view of the subject is so fully sustained in the Bible, that we need say no more. There is nothing in reason to oppose this view. Why should not the earth be the dwelling place of Adam's posterity? In the Lord's view it was so at the beginning. Why should it not be so in the end, if the earth shall be made as good as it was at first? The heaven of Christ and his people, may as well be on the earth as on any other place, if the earth may be as good as any other locality. If the Lord shall make it as good as at first, and surely, the above passages show that he will, it will be "good, and very good."—Reason does not justify fallen man in setting up his judgment against his Creator's, that the earth thus made will not be good enough for his abode. And more especially, in view of the fact, that man in his present state,—provided he could remain comfortable in all his circumstances,—would never wish to change it for a better.

God has said that the earth is his footstool. And that he will make the place of his feet glorious. Again, "As surely as I live, saith the Lord, the whole earth shall be full of my glory." When the Lord's prayer shall be answered, "Thy kingdom come and thy will be done in the earth as it is done in heaven," who will be able to tell the difference between heaven and earth?

It is evident from the whole of revelation that, in the end, the second Adam will have as much as the first Adam would have had if he had not sinned. And reason says, why not? The first would have had the earth in its goodness forever. He would have had a posterity to have shared the inheritance with him, and had they not sinned, their inheritance would have been without end.

The second Adam did not sin, and by right he will have the inheritance. Unto him shall come the first dominion. See Micah 4: 8. The first dominion is the one God gave Adam. Christ will save his people from their sins, and they will share the inheritance with him forever.

We think it is not unreasonable to say, that the number of the children of the second Adam redeemed, will be equal to the number of the children of the first Adam, had there been no sin. In the latter case the number must have been limited. How large the number would have been is not for us to say. It is evident that there were to be many more persons born, than would have been if man had not sinned. See Gen. 3: 16.—"Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." This increase of posterity is a part of the result of the woman's sin. God saw that the world would not turn to him and be saved, though they might have the opportunity. Hence to secure the number that would have been without sin, God permits as many more to be born, as will produce the number, who, by their voluntary acceptance of a Savior, will make good the number that would have been if man had not fallen. As Christ has it in the parable, Luke 14: 23, "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." This number must be made up; if not by entreaty or persuasion, it must be done by a kind of compulsion. This number being filled, the old serpent will have no advantage. Otherwise he could boast that he had defeated, in part, the design of God in peopling the earth with a race of holy beings.

Again, the people saved must have the same bodily form, that is, the same materiality that Adam had, and that his children would have had; else the serpent will have the advantage, although not in lessening the number, yet in preventing the salvation of the man God made out of dust; that is, if Satan succeeds in destroying what God made when he made man; in other words, the man that he made, and God only saves the man he did not make, if there be such a man, Satan will have the victory. Nor will he succeed in driving God and man from the field—earth, by sowing tares among the wheat, and so getting the earth cursed, and then compelling God to provide some other place for the redeemed. God will have the territory he made restored.

Satan will be defeated in all his attempts to thwart the plan of God in the creation of man. The earth will be redeemed; and the house will be filled; and the man made, will be saved. The body is to be raised from the dead, made immortal, made like Christ's glorious body. The second Adam will be victorious. Groaning creation will be delivered. The heavens and earth will be made new. Paradise will be restored. The tabernacle of God will be with men. The serpent's head bruised, his works destroyed. God will be honored, Christ glorified, the sinner saved, and the restitution will be completed. Amen.

Incompleteness.

Nothing resting in its own completeness
Can have worth or beauty, but alone
Because it leads and tends to farther sweetness,
Fuller, higher, deeper than its own.

Spring's real glory dwells not in the meaning,
Gracious though it be, of her blue hours,
But is hidden in her tender leaning
Towards the summer's richer wealth of flowers.

Dawn is fair, because her mists fade slowly
Into day, which floods the world with light,
Twilight's mystery is so sweet and holy,
Just because it ends in starry night.

Life is only bright when it proceedeth
Toward a truer, deeper Life above;
Human love is sweeter when it leadeth
To a more divine and perfect love.

Childhood's smiles unconscious graces borrow
From strife that in a far-off future lies;
And angel glances veiled now by life's sorrow,
Draw our hearts to some beloved eyes.

Learn the mystery of progression duly;
Do not call each glorious change decay,
But know we only hold our treasures truly,
When it seems as if they passed away.

Nor dare to blame God's gifts for incompleteness,
In that want their beauty lies, they roll
Toward some infinite depth of love and sweetness,
Bearing onward man's reluctant soul.

For the Crisis.

Hints to Ministers.

MINISTERS, YOU HAVE GOT TO DO IT.

You must do it. Put it off? Suppose you do, brother, put it off again and again—year after year? Suppose you continue to hush the question of "holiness to the Lord"—entire sanctification in this life—and let your people go on as they have been, in a cold, formal, half-hearted, backslidden state—sinning and repenting, resolving and re-resolving—and still live and die the same! What do you gain by this policy; by omitting to open your lips wide for a full salvation? Will the people, over whom you preside as pastor, make any advances in the divine life, while thus halting between two opinions, neglecting a known and positive duty—and while you, as a watchman on Zion's top, do not wake up to this momentous subject—pour in the oil and the wine of this redeeming, sanctifying grace? Brother, have you not waited too long already; lost much by this procrastination? Had you commenced, in the outset of your pastoral labors, to preach holiness to the Lord, brought home to every heart, powerfully, the indispensable duty, the glorious privilege of living wholly for God—of giving up all for Christ—time, talents, property, friends, influence, lands, houses, homes—all, everything—for time and eternity; the coming out entirely from the world; the putting on the whole armor of God, and living as Christ did, as Paul did, James and John? what now? Would you not have accomplished infinitely more in the cause of truth, in the salvation of sinners—the building up of Zion in her most holy faith? Would not Christ have been more highly honored; you and your charge enjoyed in a far greater degree the grace and smiles of your heavenly Father?

"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples."

Angels, also, would have tuned their golden harps afresh, "Glory to God in the highest."

Brother, do you not know there is something wanting in the churches, every where? that God's professed people are, generally, in a cold, formal, back-slidden state, living far beneath their privileges? that Zion languisheth, and few, comparatively, come to her solemn feasts? Very many professing christians are dissatisfied with their present attainments; they feel and know there is something better for them in the Gospel—they feel and know it is an evil and a bitter thing to sin against God. They look into the Gospel record, mark the foot-steps of Paul and the primitive disciples flying on wings of faith, hope and love. They hear the language of Paul to the Thessalonians, saying, "the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless, unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." "And this is the will of God, even your sanctification." On reading these, and a multitude of similar passages on the subject of entire and unreserved devotedness to God's service, they are constrained to believe that Jesus Christ did, in very deed, come to destroy the works of the devil, and that it is their privilege and duty to accept this offered mercy.

This inquiring spirit, on the blessed doctrine of holiness, is increasing more and more in every evangelical denomination of christians. The hand of the Lord is in it. The church must arise, shine, put on her beautiful white robe—she must do this—the world calls for it—salvation, God's honor. All heaven—all earth—cries out, "Awake to righteousness and sin not." Brother, why delay; why hesitate a moment to embrace with all your heart this super-abounding grace, and to publish it? God is waiting for this! your people need this heavenly manna—angels' food. There may be some at this very time in your congregation, hungering and thirsting after this inner life, this tongue of fire—longing and praying for you to open your lips wide in declaring "all the words of this life." Beloved, will you do it, will you obey God now in this matter—commence this very day, this very hour, to honor God by preaching holiness to the Lord, entire sanctification, or perfect love? Will you be in earnest about it, definite, decided, positive, heart-searching? Make it a special, specific, all-important, indispensable thing—something to be done now? Will you bring it home to every heart with power, pour in the liquid flame of holy inspiration touching this question—come life, come death? Will you let your people know, and sinners know, that your soul is alive and on fire with this glorious truth? Will you publish this blessed Bible doctrine, sound it out, and keep sounding it out, till heaven and earth shall hear?

"Forward, brethren! let us forward,
And forget all things behind—
Toward the prize of our high calling
Pressing on with single mind.
Let our eyes be fixed on Jesus,
Not on evil here below
But with hearts and hopes in heaven.
Forward, brethren! let us go!"

"The Union Movement."

A MEETING OF THE LAY-MEMBERS OF THE VARIOUS CHURCHES OF THE TOWN OF UNITY ON DEC. 8, 1858.

CHAPTER III

A meeting of the preachers in the town of Unity, to determine the basis of union. The meeting was called to order by the chairman; prayer by brother C.

Methodist. I proposed at the close of our last meeting, to show that my Church is founded upon the scriptural basis for Christian union. I have come prepared to enter upon this important work, and I feel greatly encouraged in anticipation that I shall succeed, and thus show that the Methodist Episcopal Church shall fill the whole earth. Thank God! our Church is but little over one hundred years old, and there are already more than one million Methodists. It is stated on the 6th page of our Discipline, that "we believe that God's design in raising up the preachers called Methodists, in America, was to reform the continent, and spread Scripture holiness over these lands." I trust we shall soon realize this.

Baptist. My dear sir, are you not aware that your Discipline represents Mr. Wesley as being "the father of the great revival of religion now extending over the earth by means of the Methodists?" If Mr. Wesley is the father of this revival, it is entirely too young for my notion of things; it must have begun in the flesh, and will certainly end in the flesh. I acknowledge no revival of religion that has not God for its Father—that did not begin in the Spirit. Not only so, but your Discipline does not pretend to be founded upon a scriptural basis, but "upon the experience of a long series of years." I do not understand this to be a scriptural basis.

Episcopalian. Mr. Wesley was never a member of the Methodist Church. He lived and died in the Episcopalian Church.

Presbyterian. Mr. Wesley never regarded the Methodists as a Church, but merely as reformed Episcopalians. He never aimed to establish a separate organization, but called the little band in the habit of meeting for frequent prayers, "Societies." His object was to obtain greater holiness of life in the Episcopalian Church, but not to found a new church. In these social prayer-meetings, he was careful not to have them on the stated hours for worship in the Episcopal church.

Methodist. Gentlemen, nothing will stand the test if we are to carp in this style, upon whatever may be presented. I had hoped that our object was to unite and not to see how much fault we could find. We can do nothing without the disposition.

Baptist. I presume, sir, we have as much disposition to do something, and to do it right, as yourself. But we are required by the members of our respective churches to determine the scriptural basis of union. If we should unite upon any other basis, the members of our churches would not accept it, and we should not have our support restored to us.

Methodist. I see the Baptists are accusing Mr. J. L. Waller, with Campbellism. I suppose you are with Mr. Waller, and that you will be satisfied if you can compel us all to unite upon Mr. Campbell's basis of union.

Baptist. Brother Waller denies being tinctured with Campbellism, and I deny it also. We stand upon the original Baptist platform.

Methodist. I am aware that Mr. Waller denies preaching Campbellism; but Mr. Campbell has certainly converted him on the New Translation question. Some fifteen years ago, he opposed the new translation movements of Mr. Campbell with all his power. But now he stands side by side with Mr. Campbell, and has adopted all of Mr. Campbell's arguments, and they are both compassing sea and land, trying to make one new translation; and when they get it made, I predict it will be twofold worse than the old. Indeed, I see but little difference between them; they are both constantly on Mr. Campbell's favorite theme—"the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

Baptist. Is Brother Waller bound to differ with Mr Campbell on every point, even at the expense of truth? Brother Waller and myself intend to maintain truth, even if we have to do it by believing and teaching the identical same things with Mr. Campbell.

Christian. Brethren, I presume we shall not soon find the scriptural basis of union, in talking of Wesley, Campbell and Waller. How near we agree with, or how far we differ from these men, is not a vital question, nor at all the question before us. Can we determine the scriptural basis of union, and unite upon it? If we can, our way is open before us; if not, what will be the consequences?

Lutheran. That is my mind; we must have some point before us. Will you, Mr. C., present some method of procedure?

Christian. It appears to me we should discuss something like the following questions:—1. Have our churches acted righteously in the course they have taken? 2. If they have, can we determine the scriptural basis for union? 3. What is it? 4. Shall we unite upon it? If the private members of our churches have acted without reason, and required something wrong, we should not submit to it.

Episcopalian. We are bound to submit, or starve.

Christian. If we are conscientious men, as I trust we are, we will starve before we will submit to anything wrong. I, for one, will scrape the streets for a living, before I will submit to anything wrong in principle.

Bapt., Meth., Pres., Luth., Epis. That is right, we will all stand to that.

Christian. Is the requirement of our brethren then, right?

Episcopalian. No, sir; it is not right. They have required unreasonable things of us, and treated us with disrespect, and I feel almost a determination not to submit to it.

Christian. I have examined the matter from the beginning, and am compelled to admit that they have done right, and that if I had been in their place, I should have acted as they did. Suppose we [illegible] situation, and the members of [illegible] families were separated so that they could not fellowship [illegible] whom he acknowledged to be a Christian! The parents could not sit at the Lord's table with their own children, though they acknowledged them to be Christians; brothers and sisters, all professors of religion, admitted to be children of God, but will not fellowship each other! Do you believe, brethren, such a state of things should be tolerated any longer?

Lutheran. But why should the whole blame be cast upon us, and we be stripped of our support, and cast off upon the world? Are not the private members of our churches as much to blame as we? Besides, sir, I have not admitted the blame to be so great as you represent it.

Methodist. I do not admit the blame is as great as Mr. C. thinks. The evil that he speaks of, grows out of bigotry, in thinking nobody right but ourselves. This is a pharisaical spirit, that thinks I am better than you. We should treat each other with kindness and Christian feeling.

Christian. You are mistaken, sir; the bigotry grows out of the system. Is it bigotry that forbids that Baptist and his Methodist wife to commune together? I deny that it is their bigotry that forbids their communing together. They love each other, have all confidence in each other, and desire to commune together; but their system forbids it. They are not to blame for it, but their system.

Methodist. This is all attributable to Baptist close communion. It is a bigoted doctrine, and I am glad to see it exposed.

Baptist. My dear sir, suppose a Baptist should desire a place in your class-meeting or love-feast; how often could he be admitted without becoming a member? Only twice or thrice, and this with the utmost caution! This is as exclusive as close communion. Yet, you admit Baptists to be Christians, but not good enough for your class or love-feast! You admit that the Baptist will be saved; that you can live with him in heaven; but he is not good enough for your class-meeting! Is a Methodist class-meeting more sacred than heaven? or why not admit any person to the class, that you admit to be in the way to heaven?

Christian. Brethren, can you not see that it is the doctrine that keeps so many good people separated, and not the desire of the people? It is the natural working of our present systems to infuse division through society, and the systems should be held accountable for it.

Episcopalian. Then why justify our brethren in punishing us for what our systems have done?

Christian. Because we have sustained these antagonistical systems, and enabled them to do what they could not have done themselves. We defend these systems, and make the people believe they are scriptural. We practically carry out their spirit, in refusing to fellowship each other, and in shutting each other out of our houses of worship. We beg their money to build four or five times as many houses as are needed, and support a similar superfluity of [illegible]. Then we divide the few people of our village off into five or six little parties, thus discouraging and crippling their energies in their efforts to serve God. We divide the members of their families off into our parties, and infuse through society, so far as possible, all the antagonism of our systems. We squander their money in [illegible] colleges, academies, etc., to three or four times the amount of any possible demand, and thus in the place of [illegible] union on earth, and among men, concentrating the strength of all the children of God, we confuse their minds, confound their tongues, and set all Christendom into a Babel. I say, in view of all this, they are not to blame. They are right, and I am glad that something better shall be done in our town. I shall sustain them in it at all hazards.

For the Crisis.

[illegible], and Wis. Christian Conference.

(COM. BY WM. SHELDON.)

The third annual meeting of this body was held at Springville, Wis., commencing on Thursday, 2 P. M., Oct. 6th, 1859.

Meeting was called to order by the Clerk of the preceding Conference, and prayer was offered by Eld. W. Sheldon.

Voted, that Eld. S. D. Deyo officiate as President of the Conference, and Eld. P. S. W. Deyo as Clerk.

Voted, that Eld. W. Sheldon prepare a report of the doings of the Conference for publication.

Voted, to receive no person into the Conference with a minority negative vote against him, until the objections against his christian character be removed.

Voted, to open the doors of the Conference for the reception of ministers and churches, through their delegates. During the session the following ministers were received into Conference; viz.: Elds. Wm. Sweet, and C. L. Page, Brn. G. W. Turner, J. F. Willcox and S. K. Gibson. Also three additional churches united by their delegates.

Voted, that every church belonging to this Conference numbering fifteen members, or less, be entitled to one vote, and to an additional vote for every additional fifteen or fraction thereof.

Voted, to invite visiting brethren to participate in the social deliberations of the meeting. Adjourned to meet at the call of the President.

Thursday, 6 o'clock, P. M. Preaching by Eld. W. Sheldon from Rom. 5: 11, showing from the Scriptures of truth that we have had a Divine sacrifice, instead of a mere human sacrifice. The sermon was listened to with thrilling interest by a large and attentive audience. Interesting remarks were then made by Elders Sweet, Deyo, Teeple, and Bro. Turner. It was a solemn and profitable meeting, and a good commencement for the Conference. All appeared to drink into the good spirit of the meeting, and the joys of redeeming love. A holy flame was kindled in the hearts of the saints, which continued to burn during the entire meeting.

Friday, 9 o'clock, A. M. Met at the call of the President for business. Prayer by Eld. G. L. Teeple.

Voted, to appoint three Evangelists for the coming year, recommending them to the public as faithful and efficient laborers in the cause of Christ, to be supported upon the free-will offering principle.

Voted, to appoint, as Evangelists, Elds. W. Sheldon of Castle Rock, Co., Min., P. S. W. Deyo of Strawberry Point, Clayton Co., Iowa, and Y. Higgins of Springville, Badax Co., Wis.

The Conference being in its infancy, and having as yet no Conference fund, can only recommend its Evangelists as worthy of patronage and support where the work of an Evangelist is required. Isolated brethren who are not acquainted with our western ministers, have felt like making an effort in their respective localities, to get the truth before the people, but have felt delicate about inviting to their midst a stranger, at their own expense, who might not prove to be an efficient workman; but this act will remove such apprehensions.

At 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M., Eld. G. L. Teeple preached a cheering sermon from John 3: 3, and was followed by remarks from Eld. Sheldon. It was a time of rejoicing among the saints. The proper fuel was added to the fire of devotion. At 2 o'clock, P. M., Eld. Wm. Sweet preached a good sermon from Rom. 10: 17, and was followed by profitable remarks from other ministers, which gave a new impetus to the already rising spirit of devotion. At 6 o'clock, P. M., Eld. P. S. W. Deyo preached an enlivening sermon from 1 Pet. 1: 3-5. Brn. Sheldon, Barnes and Turner followed with appropriate remarks. The saints were cheered, and solemn impressions were riveted on the minds of the people.

Saturday, 9 o'clock, A. M. Met at the call of the President to transact business. Prayer by Bro. G. W. Turner. Motion, by Eld. W. Sheldon, that a committee of three ministers be appointed to ascertain the truth concerning certain slanderous reports which were in circulation about Bro. Yates Higgins, and report to the Conference the result of their investigation at their next business meeting; whereupon the President appointed Eld. W. Sweet, Eld. G. L. Teeple, and Eld. G. W. Barnes said committee. A few moments were then spent in listening to brief reports from the churches and ministers belonging to the Conference.

[illegible] Creek Church, Iowa. "Prospects [illegible] monthly preaching for the [illegible]. Brn. Deyo and Sheldon had [illegible] for them some during the past year. They number fifteen members.

[illegible] Church, [illegible]: Not in a prosperous [illegible]. Had numbered over [illegible], but for certain reasons, is [illegible] condition. May the [illegible]. When it [illegible]. They [illegible]

[illegible] Church, Minn.: Was raised during the last year under Bro. Teeple's labors; numbers nineteen members. In a prosperous condition. Have preaching a part of the time, and keep up their prayer meetings regularly. Have built them a suitable house of worship.

Springville Church, Wis.: Organized during the past year by Eld. Higgins. Has regular periodical preaching, interspersed with occasional sermons from traveling preachers. Numbers seventeen members, with a prospect of a generous addition soon.

Several other churches, failing to send delegates, were not reported.

A few moments were then spent in listening to ministerial reports, which are here presented in a condensed form :—

Eld. W. Sheldon had held several protracted meetings during the past year, which had been blessed of God, had organized two churches, aside from his labors near home; has many pressing calls for labor from brethren who are too poor to defray his traveling expenses, which poverty forbids his complying with, although it cuts him to the heart to neglect the calls of the poor saints. He preaches not for money, yet it requires money to pay his traveling expenses.

Eld. P. S. W. Deyo had labored with success during the past year; had held several large meetings in Iowa, and thought that the cause was prospering in that state. He preaches a portion of the time for Strawberry Point Church.

Eld. Y. Higgins had preached with success in various portions of Wis., during the past year; many had been led to see a difference between truth and error. He had also organized two churches in Wis.

Eld. G. W. Barnes had preached in Fairfield, Wis., monthly, during the past year. Good prospect, and good congregations. Had preached in Ironton with success, and also in several other places.

Eld. S. D. Deyo had preached what he could in the region around his home. Felt stimulated to continue the war of truth.

Eld. G. L. Teeple had labored with success in his new field, in different localities; had raised up one church. Prospects bright for future good.

Hour for public worship having arrived this meeting adjourned to meet again at the call of the President.

At 10 1-2 A. M., Eld. G. W. Barnes preached an interesting sermon from John 14: 1-3. The interest of the meeting continued to increase. At 2 P. M., Bro. G. W. Turner preached from Eph. 6: 10. After the sermon, stirring exhortations were given by Brn. Wilcox, Deyo, Barnes, and Teeple.

At 4 o'clock, P. M., met for business, at the call of the President, when the report of the investigating committee was presented:

"TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN."

"Whereas certain reports have been in circulation injurious to the christian character of Elder Yates Higgins and the cause of God, said to have had their origin in Ind. and Mich., we the undersigned committee would report, that from all the evidences in the case, we consider that the reports against Elder Yates Higgins' character are without foundation, and utterly false; and that we consider him a worthy brother."

GEO. L. TEEPLE,
G. W. BARNES, } Committee.
WM. SWEET,

Voted, to accept the report.

Voted, that the three Evangelists select the place, and appoint the time, for our next annual conference.

At 6 o'clock, P. M., Eld. W. Sheldon preached a sermon upon the kingdom of God to a large and deeply interested audience. The power of truth was felt by the people, and the saints rejoiced.

Sunday morning, at 9 o'clock, we met for a love feast, and truly divine love burned in the bosoms of God's children. The Spirit of God was the predominant element in the meeting.

At 10 o'clock, Eld. W. Sheldon preached to a crowded house from 2 Thess. 3: 5; in which sermon he presented first the nature of Christ's second coming; secondly, its necessity; thirdly, its object. This discourse was listened to with remarkable candor, and appeared to produce conviction upon the minds of all who listened. The people saw that the Bible was on our side.

After the sermon, by vote of the conference, Bro. G. W. Turner of Ironton, Wis., was publicly ordained. The pledge was received by Eld. W. Sheldon; the prayer was offered by Eld. P. S. W. Deyo; the charge was given by Eld. Y. Higgins; and the right hand of fellowship given by Eld. W. Sheldon. At 2 o'clock, P. M., Eld. W. Sweet preached from Matt. 7: 21. A good sermon. At 6 o'clock, P. M., Eld. P. S. W. Deyo preached from Matt. 24: 44, and was followed by Eld. W. S. Sheldon. It was a solemn meeting. We then surrounded the Lord's table. It was a time of tears and heart searching, to be often looked back upon by those who participated.

Thus closed our third annual meeting. It commenced and ended in the Spirit, without a note of discord. Two years ago, but three preachers belonged to it, but now it has fourteen ministers. May the Lord prosper this Western Conference.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 2, 1859.

Sheol.—No. 3.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in (sheol) the grave, whither thou goest."—ECCL. 9: 10.

In our previous articles on sheol, we have endeavored to show from a plain harmony of the Scriptures, that sheol represents the state of the dead in general, without regard to character, and that when in that state they know nothing, as expressed in Eccl. 9: 10. It follows then, that all who go into sheol or hades, go where they will be "silent" and without knowledge; and no argument to the contrary can overturn the Scriptures on this point. If our translators think best to render sheol by the word hell, and then attach a meaning to hell directly the opposite of sheol, to which shall we adhere? The Pagan, Mohammedan, Catholic and Protestant hells are places of conscious suffering, while the Bible hell, as we have seen, is a place of entire unconsciousness. Hence, it matters not what theologians may say, or what words they may employ, in translating sheol and hades, the Bible settles the point forever, that sheol must not be represented by a word that denotes either consciousness or knowledge, then it follows that, so long as one can work, or has any wisdom or knowledge, he is not in sheol or hades; therefore we must conclude that no one in sheol has any suffering or enjoyment.

Having settled this point by the Scriptures, we will now give all the passages where sheol occurs, premising that it should be rendered grave, or by the same word, in all the sixty-five passages where it occurs. The words in italics in the following Scriptures are translated from sheol.

"And Jacob rent his clothes . . . and . . . said . . . I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning."—Gen. 37: 34, 35. "And he said, My son shall not go down with you; for his brother is dead, and he is left alone; if mischief befall him by the way in the which ye go, then shall ye bring down my grey hairs with sorrow to the grave."—Gen. 42: 38. "If ye take this also from me, and mischief befall him, ye shall bring down my grey hairs with sorrow to the grave."—Gen. 44: 29. "It shall come to pass, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die; and thy servants shall bring down the grey hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave."—Gen. 44: 31. "A fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains."—Deut. 32: 22. "If the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit, then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord . . . And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses. . . . They and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them."—Num. 16: 30, 32, 33. "The Lord killeth, and maketh alive, he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up."—1 Sam. 2: 6. "The sorrows of hell compassed me about, the snares of death prevented me."—2 Sam. 22: 6. "Do therefore according to thy wisdom, and let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace."—1 Kin. 2: 6. "Now therefore hold him not guiltless, for thou art a wise man and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him; but his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood."—1 Kin. 2: 9. "He that goeth down to the grave."—Job 7: 9. "It is as high as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know?"—Job 11: 8. "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave."—Job 14: 13. "If I wait, the grave is mine house; I have made my bed in the darkness."—Job 17: 13. "They shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest together is in the dust."—Job 17: 16. "They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave."—Job 21: 13. "Drought and heat consume the snow waters; so doth the grave those which have sinned."—Job 24: 19. "Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering."—Job 26: 6. "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"—Ps. 6: 5. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."—Ps. 9: 17. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."—Ps. 16: 10. "The sorrows of hell compassed me about; the snares of death prevented me."—Ps. 18: 5. "O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave; thou hast kept me alive."—Ps. 30: 3. "Let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in the grave."—Ps. 31: 17. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling."—Ps. 49: 14. "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."—Ps. 49: 15. "Let death seize upon them, and let them go down quick into hell; for wickedness is in their dwellings and among them."—Ps. 55: 15. "Thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell."—Ps. 86: 13. "My soul is full of troubles, and my life draweth nigh unto the grave."—Ps. 88: 3. "What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?"—Ps. 89: 48. "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me."—Ps. 116: 3. "If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there."—Ps. 139: 8. "Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth."—Ps. 141: 7. "Let us swallow them up alive, as the grave, and whole, as those that go down into the pit."—Prov. 1: 12. "Her steps take hold on hell."—Prov. 5: 5. "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death."—Prov. 7: 27. "He knoweth not that the dead are there; and that her guests are in the depths of hell."—Prov. 9: 18. "Hell and destruction are before the Lord."—Prov. 15: 11.

"The way of life is above to the wise, that he may depart from hell beneath."—Prov. 15: 24. "Thou shalt . . . . deliver his soul from hell."—Prov. 23: 14. "Hell and destruction are never full."—Prov. 27: 20. "The grave . . . saith not, it is enough."—Prov. 30: 16. "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9: 10. "Jealousy is cruel as the grave."—Cant. 8: 6. "Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure."—Isa. 5: 14. "Hell from beneath is moved."—Isa. 14: 9. "Thy pomp is brought down to the grave."—Isa. 14: 11. "Thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit."—Isa. 14: 15. "We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement."—Isa. 28: 15. "Your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand."—Isa. 28: 18. "I said, in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave; I am deprived of the residue of my years."—Isa. 38: 10. "The grave cannot praise thee."—Isa. 38: 18. "Thou . . . didst debase thyself even unto hell."—Isa. 57: 9. "He went down to the grave."—Ezk. 31: 15. "I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit."—Ezk. 31: 16. "They also went down into hell with him, unto them that be slain with the sword."—Ezk. 31: 17. "The midst of hell."—Ezk. 32: 21. "They . . . are gone down to hell with their weapons of war, and they have laid their swords under their heads."—Ezk. 32: 27. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction."—Hosea 13: 14. "Though they dig into hell, thence shall mine hand take them."—Amos 9: 2. "Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice."—Jonah 2: 2. "Enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied."—Hab. 2: 5.—Total. 65.

"What is the Matter?"

The above is the heading of an article in the Cent. Presb. Herald, which begins as follows:—

"We have had a good deal of correspondence during the past year with both ministers and churches. Many of the ministers want to change their field of labor, there are a large number of vacant churches, and yet it is almost impossible to find men to suit the places, or places to suit the men. Something is the matter. What shall be done?"

In answer to the inquiry, "What shall be done?" we think it will be best for those in this sad condition to humble themselves before the Lord, and ask forgiveness for their pride, covetousness, worldly-mindedness, selfishness, that has characterized their fashionable sectarianism—we cannot call it christianity. Yet, with this sad state of things around us, there are some blind guides who tell us the world is growing better, and the church more prosperous. When will such awake from their sleep?

The Suspense of Faith.

The following extract from an able address, on the "suspense of faith," delivered before the Alumni of the Divinity School of Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., July 19th, 1859, by H. W. Bellows, of New York, shows that some are getting their eyes open to the true state of things in nominal christendom; but the half is not yet told. He says:—

"As a necessity of this state of things, the Protestant Church has lost its hold of the two ends of society—the cultivated and the uncultivated end—of the head, because it is under the dominion of paralyzing ideas, which leave faith a fiction and worship a mockery; of the foot, because it is no longer controlled by that authority which a living and satisfied faith can alone put into the wills and into the actions of the governing classes. The infidelity of our age is not commonly an insolent, self-satisfied flippant criticism of evidences, or a sour and bitter assault upon christianity, although we still have that. It is, in the cultivated classes—and with frightful frequency there—a silent, thoughtful, sad consciousness that the soul has no faith, and possesses no religion except the religious sentiment, and knows no God and no Savior—with a tender reserve toward others, a gentle unwillingness to bring into their own condition those in whom faith still has an existence. And in the uncultivated classes, it is a loss for the time being, in the absorbing interest of life itself, enriched with the emancipated rights and opportunities which this self-asserting epoch has given to the masses—of any sense of a need of religion, with a decay of the affections, instincts, and usages connected with it—a state frightful to consider—not in its immediate, but only in its coming social consequences! . . . .

Nor is this all. It is not only an unreligious age, but it is becoming more and more unreligious. For religious institutions and ideas in our day flourish mainly in the strength of their roots in a religious past, a strength which is constantly diminishing."

Insurrection.

A bloody insurrection took place Oct. 19th and 20th, at Harper's Ferry, a place near the junction of the Shenandoah river with the Potomac, in Va. It was headed by Capt. John Brown, who took an active part in favor of the slave in the Kansas troubles, and had four sons killed there. He is fifty-five years of age, rather small sized, wiry and active.

He had made arrangements at Harper's Ferry to liberate the slaves by a general insurrection in that section, and succeeded, in company with eighteen others, five of whom were free negroes, in taking possession of the armory, and before his capture, between thirty and forty were killed and wounded. Great excitement prevails, and it is claimed that Joshua R. Giddings and Gerrit Smith are implicated in assisting Brown in efforts to free the slaves. The political aspects of our country look very stormy.

In answer to an inquiry from the Herald Reporter, Brown said:

"I have nothing to say, only that I claim to be here in carrying out a measure I believe perfectly justifiable, and not to act the part of an incendiary or ruffian, but to aid those suffering great wrong. I wish to say furthermore, that you had better—all you people at the South—prepare yourselves for a settlement of that question that must come up for settlement sooner than you are prepared for it. The sooner you are prepared the better. You may dispose of me very easily. I am nearly disposed of now; but this question is still to be settled—this negro question I mean; the end of that is not yet. These wounds were inflicted upon me—both sabre cuts on my head and bayonet stabs in different parts of my body—some minutes after I had ceased fighting and had consented to a surrender, for the benefit of others, not for my own. (This statement was vehemently denied by all around.) I believe the Major (meaning Lieut. J. B. Stuart, of the United States Cavalry,) would not have been alive; I could have killed him just as easy as a mosquito when he came in, but I supposed he came in only to receive our surrender. There had been loud and long calls of 'Surrender' from us—as loud as men could yell—but in the confusion and excitement I suppose we were not heard. I do not think the Major, or any one, meant to butcher us after we had surrendered."

It appears that the plot was deep laid, but failed in its execution. Some prominent citizens have been killed. Brown received nine wounds, none of which will prove fatal. He is calm, and feels assured that he is acting for the good of his fellow men. A provisional constitution was found among his papers, containing forty-eight articles. The thirty-sixth article made provision for the confiscation of all the property of those who should persist in holding slaves, or oppose the insurrection. The movement will only tend to draw the slave chains tighter than ever.—O Lord, let thy kingdom come.

Progress.

The following from a Mexican correspondent of the New York Herald, dated Mexico, Sept. 13th, '59, shows the kind of progress in that place. We see the same in the United States. He says:—

"Notwithstanding the very brief period since the date of my last letter to you, we have had events enough crowded upon us to fill a whole year's calendar of crime in any other country. Individual murders are really becoming of too little importance to attract special attention. Every thing in the way of the horrible is sought to be produced on a large scale—the reality of what tragedy writers are so fond of treating as the morbid tastes of stage maniacs. From one end of the clergy dominion to the other, we have nothing but reports of blood, blood. In the district of Cuernavaca, which is the limit of the clergy rule, to the southwest of us, and but sixty miles from here, the country is in such a state that no one can with safety venture outside the walled enclosures of the haciendas, and notwithstanding sentinels are kept on the tops of the large houses, hardly a day passes without some person being murdered within sight of private dwellings."

Theological Hell.

The popular view of hell is well expressed in the following language of Thomas Vincent. He says:—

"The torments of hell will not be in one part only, but in every part, not in a weaker degree, but in the greatest extremity; not for a day, or a month, or a year, but forever; the wicked will be always dying, never dead; the pangs of death will be ever upon them, and yet they shall never give up the ghost; if they could die they would think themselves happy; they will always be roaring and never breathe out their last; always sinking and never come to the bottom; always burning in those flames, and never consumed; the eternity of hell will be the hell of hell."

MYSTERY.—In the mysteries of religion, for well-regulated minds, there is always to be found an explanation sufficient for faith, but never as much as is necessary for comprehension. The what it is is sufficient for us; but the how is beyond our comprehension, and is not at all necessary for us.—Leibnitz.

For the Crisis.

The Tract Fund.

Oct. 3d. Returning from the Dedication at Foster, I find a letter from Eld. C., of the West, who desires an Englishman's Greek Concordance. He writes: "I am trying to preach the gospel of the kingdom, and need books to aid my inquiries. I want to do something for the "Tract Cause," and I think you will hear from me again in reference to this. God bless you, dear brother. In hope."

May the Lord be with you, my dear brother, and make the path plain before you. I had heard through friends at W., of your deep affliction—may God cause the gold to brighten as the fire increases within the furnace. You have my prayers.

A letter from Bro G——, who feels that he ought to preach. Well, if you feel so, and can preach, go at it. If God does not call you, you will not want to keep at it long, and if he does, go ahead. Go out into the darkest, wickedest place you can find,—appoint a meeting in the old schoolhouse, or where you can,—pray God to help you, and go at it. Tell them about Jesus. Have the leaves all turned down in your Bible to lots of passages and read them out to them. And be very careful, and do not cut and slash at "the churches," preachers, and their views. Preach Jesus Christ, and let the railing and fighting alone. One man asked another what he should do when he got short of something to preach. "Pitch into popery," was the reply. A great many persons get so far from Christ that they have no good news to tell, and then they can pitch into popery or something else. Remember it is a great deal harder to follow Christ than it is to fight anti-Christ. But we must follow Christ.

A sister writes about her husband who is groaning beneath the burden of the word of the Lord. Well, keep praying for him. That is what must be done.

R——, from away out in Wisconsin, writes, Sept. 25th. "Bro. H., enclosed I send you $5, as I notice in the Crisis you are taking quite an interest in the Tract cause west. Please use this in that way or in some other way to spread Bible truth as you in your wisdom think best; or if you are in want, appropriate it to your own use. May the Lord bless you in all your labors of love is my prayer. I should like to know if ever you get this, as there may be more forwarded. Yours in the blessed hope, R——."

Well, Bro. R——, it is received, and shall be used as soon as I can get time and opportunity to do it. I do not know who you are, but the Lord does; may he reward you.

Oct. 4. Here comes a neat, little letter, with neither date or place, containing $2. It reads on this wise: "Bro. Hastings, husband and I send you $1 each, for the Tract cause. It is but a mite, but it is given freely. We have been greatly blest and comforted by reading your tracts, which we obtained of you at the Wilbraham campmeeting, and we pray that you may be able to go on with the Tract cause. Yours truly, G. & M. E."

Now, I like that letter. Who wrote it? I do not know, but it sounds good to me. Let's see, "Husband and I"—both then are interested in the work,—both serving God together. That's one good thing. Then we send you "one dollar each." Each have something to send. Not like some families where the man has all and the wife nothing. He "carries the bag" and acts like Judas, too, sometimes; while the must beg if she wants a dime for any purpose. Then she has no disposition or motive to save or earn for such an old curmudgeon, and only thinks how to get all she can from him, while he plans how he can keep all he has away from her. I like this man and wife partnership; it's about the only kind that is good for much, is njt it, Bro. J——? I like to have man and wife both plan, both work, both earn, both save, both have and both use the money for each other's good and God's glory. Third, "For the Tract cause;" that's good. Fourth, "freely;" that's good too. I hope all who give, will give freely. Fifth, "blest and comforted by reading tracts." Glad of that. Hope others who cannot go to campmeeting, as you did, may be blest and comforted by the tracts which your bounty will send to them "in the regions beyond." May the blessing of God come back richly into your own bosoms; and when you bow around your family altar at eve and morn (you have a family altar, of course), will you not pray God to follow these little tracts by his own Spirit, and bless those that may read them? Your $2 will pay for 800 four page tracts. How much good gospel you may send thus into eight hundred families by this "mite" so freely given. You will pray God to water the seed and give the increase, will you not? Good bye, brother and sister, I hope to meet you in glory; and if, on the banks of Life's bright river, we hear some one saying, a little tract from the western Tract Fund, with God's blessing, brought me here to sing "Worthy the Lamb that was slain," we shall not regret that we have done what we could. O God help us to be faithful.

A brother at the West, who has scattered very many tracts, and only stopped when compelled by "hard times," now has gone at the work again, with the Tract Fund to back him a little. He says, "I took account of tracts on hand, and, agreeable to your wishes and advice, have been distributing them to preachers and others to distribute gratuitously, and am distributing myself freely where I think they will do good. . . . . They will be gone soon. Tracts are read eagerly by a large class of people in the West. It would do you good to see them taken and immediately read so earnestly. I am satisfied they are the means of doing a great work. I hope nothing will discourage you, or cause you to 'come down' from this 'great work.'"

Go on, brother, I will try to keep you supplied with tracts. I feel that this is a great work. I felt so when I began some six or seven years ago to move in the matter. Others have since taken hold of the work, for which I praise the Lord. I have had plenty of invitations to "come down" to "the plains of Ono." Gashmu and Sanballat have done their worst, and have finished off by saying, "Come now, therefore, and let us take counsel together;" but having obtained help of God, I continue to this day, and my prayer is, "Now therefore, oh God, strengthen my hands."—Nehemiah 6: 9. Pray for me that God would keep me humble and near his side. O for help from on high to do this great work!

Here is a letter from the brother to whom the money, $5, was sent—partly from three sisters, and the rest from some one else:

"Dear Bro. Hastings, I write a line to say I have arrived here and find the letter containing the money, and I know it was received with gratitude and thanksgiving. O when shall I learn to put unwavering faith in God? O praise his name! He doeth all things well, and dealeth better and better with me. I cannot keep all the money for my benefit, although I and my family need it, but it is not quite winter yet, and there are those famishing for the word of life, and I must have some tracts to scatter. Enclosed is $1. Will you be so kind as to send by mail some of your tracts? I would like some of Bro. Grant's tracts on the soul and spirit. I wish I could send you instead of 100 cts. 100 dollars. I feel that my heart is in the work, and I want to do all I can to save men from error and death. I am now on my way to the Conference, and last night I had a blessed time presenting the resurrection to the people in O——. God be praised, truth is spreading; and I expect to see when I haul in the gospel net that there has not been a long toiling for naught. Where I preach the hearers increase in numbers, and the meetings increase in interest. God is good, and I for one will devote all my talents and time to his service. * * * If I had the means I would have a host of tracts to scatter this winter, but I must leave all with the Lord. The reason I send (the $1) to have them come by mail is, I know of no way to take them from the Express office, for when they come the expressage would be $4 to $6. I can scatter them here and on my travels to the advancement of the cause of truth and the glory of God. God bless you. Pray for me. Wife joins in love to you and yours. . . . .

P. S. I have just come across a poor brother that is going among foes and wants some books and tracts to help him scatter light and truth. He gave me 24 cents in stamps to pay the postage. You will find them enclosed. Send a copy of each kind of tracts that will help him. You probably know what he will need."

Bro. T., you need not have sent me back the dollar. I will try and send you a good supply of tracts as soon as I can. We want to reap bountifully on those western prairies, and we cannot afford to sow sparingly where the soil is so rich and there is so little seed sown. We must work fast, or the Devil will be round with his old tare-basket and get before us. Keep at the work, brother. God's ravens know where to find bread and meat for you, and the meal and oil shall not fail till the Lord send rain upon the earth.

A preacher writes from I——, where he is at work as a carpenter, to earn bread, I suppose; when, if he had a little of the money that some of my readers have laid out for gold and ribbons, or spent for tea and tobacco, or put out on interest, or used in buying land enough to work themselves to death on, he might be out in the regions beyond, preaching the gospel of God to the perishing. He says:

"I received a letter from Sr. A——, in which she tells me of seeing you, and that you would send me some tracts if you had my address, etc. I should be exceedingly glad of some to distribute where I go, and have been hoping for some time to be able to send you a little money for some; but as you say, those who preach the truth are pretty sure to be poor. I am so indeed, or I should not be here. But if the Master sees fit to supply you with means to help me, and others like me, I suppose it is my duty to be not only content, but thankful. So if you have them to spare I shall be glad to take a few, and will do all the good I can with them. P."

Bro. A. writes from Wis., Sept. 8th. "I am not uninterested in the tract distribution. It is a dry time for cash at present, but I expect in a short time to spare something that will produce the necessary article. Then I will send $1 for tract distribution."

Oct. 1st. Sr. B. W. H. writes: "Enclosed is $1 for the West. You will not know who I am if I tell you, having never seen you but twice. If time lasts, and the Lord prospers me, I will send you more. From your sister." I have not the faintest idea who sent it, but trust the Lord will bless her.

Another letter from [illegible], Sept. 24th. "I have a little money I [illegible] you for the Tract Fund. I send you $[illegible] my prayers with it, that it may be the means of good. O that it might be the means of awakening some poor sinner, and bring him to the knowledge of Jesus. Sr. O. M. N."

In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand, for thou canst not tell which shall prosper, this or that. That God to whom you pray, "giveth the increase." May he by his grace "multiply your seed sown," and "increase the fruits of righteousness."

A brother writes for some tracts: "I am poor in this world's goods. Have to work through the week to support a small family, and walk from one to ten miles Sundays to hold meetings. Bless God, the rest will come soon. Jesus is soon coming, and the work must be done while the day lasts. T——."

Bro. M.——, away out amid the waters of the Atlantic, sends $2 for Tract fund. May the angels who watched John on Patmos be with him.

I must close. I go to-day to N. Y., D. V., to do work there. I believe I have acknowledged all receipts to date, Oct. 5th. My faith in God grows strong. If the work be of God it will stand. O that we may be found in our lot and place is my prayer. Pray for me, and may the God of all grace, who hath called us to eternal glory, make you perfect in his kingdom.

Your Bro., H. L. Hastings.

Tracts For Sailors.

Bro. Grant:—At the Old South Chapel this morning, I heard from Capt. Bartlett (who is laboring in behalf of seamen), something of their wants. He says he distributes all he can get, but cannot get enough to meet the demand. He says he can find use for a thousand to one he now receives. He can make use of old papers, etc. He mentioned one case of a sea captain, to whom he gave some tracts, who distributed them on Sabbath morning to his crew. He wrote to him that they were exhausted, but the sailors came every Sabbath morning for their tracts. I think a door is opened for the dissemination of the truths we love, among seamen, and hope soon to see a tract for their special benefit.

For the Crisis.

A Financial Report of the Savoy Campmeeting.

In order to remove wrong impressions from the minds of some individuals, we wish to say that all the money raised by collection was distributed to the preachers. We wish to say further, that the profits arising from the boarding tent were sufficient to pay the Committee who furnished it, 50 cents per day for their labor, also to pay the preachers' horse keeping; leaving $16.00, which was distributed to needy preachers and others of the Lord's poor.

We make this statement, hoping that it will remove all wrong impressions, and that all the brethren will be satisfied. Yours endeavoring to do the will of God.

Maine Mission Fund.

It seems to be an experiment in trying to open a treasury and seek to collect funds from all quarters, to keep the ministers of the word in the field, so that the gospel of the kingdom may still go abroad; but some of us had much rather fail after trying to do our best, than to let the work go undone without it. When we do what we can, we do something; and "if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath," and this is enough.

I would say to all interested, that the work of collecting for the Mission has begun. A Bro. W—— subscribed $5 for this mission. That would help a man to preach a month, if he could live on faith three fourths of the time, as some seem to think the minister should. Bro. P—— subscribes $10; that will preach several sermons at the rate some of us do it. May the Lord direct it to the salvation of some poor lost sinner, when it is put to the use designed. Bro. S—— hands in $3 for the mission. This will aid one of God's ministers to go to some destitute place and sow the good seed of the kingdom. Sister H—— hands in $1. This begins to look just as we have long prayed it might. God knows what we want the money for. Sister F—— gives $1, and it is not given in vain. The Lord will have it used. Brn. L——, H——, and B——, gave $1 each. That makes three. This will do one day's work in giving the trumpet a certain sound. Better let the money go in to help preach the everlasting gospel, than spend it in folly, as too many do. Bro. H—— gives $1 in books full of truths; just what the starving people of this age of fables need. They will preach, and to some who would not go out to hear a life-believing man preach. This is a beginning. Do not know how many may think best to sacrifice a little to send something to this cause. Some do it cheerfully, heartily, and God blesses such.

Oct. 7th. I passed the Post Office on my way into the country. Called and took out a letter from Bro. S——, in Mass., running thus: "Dear Bro. Wellcome: I send you $10, for your missionary fund. You shall hear from me again soon. Bro. —— says you are to have some tracts. Your brother in the good cause." This is help from abroad. It is what we expected, for we have heard from this brother before, in time of need. Lord bless him, and all others who love the gospel.

As soon as a little more is offered in this direction, somebody, who is now diligently plying nerve and muscle to earn bread for his family, will go out and spend all that time, extra (above what he now can), in sounding an alarm, in preaching the word of life, in calling sinners to repentance, in giving the cry, "Behold he cometh, go ye out to meet him!" to awaken the slumbering virgins, and "speak all the words of this life." Say, brother, sister, do you want that your mite shall aid in this work? You can preach not only by a holy life, and word of mouth, but by taking some of what you earn, to keep the true gospel minister at work all the time, wherever the people have an ear to hear. Some of you do so. Will others follow? But some will say, "If they will come here and preach we will help them." Perhaps God wants them to go where more will hear and obey. Some may say, "If God calls men to preach, he will take care of them, and of his cause, too." Yes, he will do that; but they may have to spend half their time to work their passage through, and be saved in God's cause, and you be lost out of it. Here is the danger. We will do all we can, while the day lasts. Yours in behalf of the Mission. I. C. Wellcome, Secretary.

Richmond, Me., Oct. 15, 1859.

Correspondence.

From Eld. P. B. Morgan.

Bro. Grant:—Having the pleasure of sending you a few subscibers, I will add that we are being refreshed with "a little reviving;" have recently had the pleasure of baptizing four willing souls in the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection. Last Lord's day morning the scene was most delightful; the sun shone beautifully, the water was placid, and all nature seemed serene, when, without noise or bustle, we quietly gathered, sung hymns of praise, invoked the blessing of God, and then in obedience and imitation of Him, who eighteen hundred years ago, to fill all righteousness, was buried beneath the yielding wave—"went down into the water and came up out of the water" with disciples happy to walk in the steps that Jesus trod. Oh how blessed are the ordinances of God's house!

Oct. 10th. Our Conference has met, deliberated, resolved, and adjourned. Our Conference, all agree, has been a success. But the Minutes will appear shortly and all can judge.

Union Mills, Ind.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

Bro. Grant:—I had the pleasure of attending the conference at Yarmouth, Me. The meeting was a good one. The brethren present seemed determined, by the grace of God, to put forth more effort for the spread of truth, and I could but respond Amen. The Spirit of the Lord was evidently in our midst, comforting and quickening the disciples. We were abundantly cared for by the church, which, under God, have been gathered by the indefatigable labors of Bro. York. The main subject discussed was, the need of more effort and missionary labor for the saving of our fellow men; and while little difference existed how we should raise the means, all were of one mind, that we, under God, are called to a "specific work," to bring out and preach those truths (plainly taught in the Bible) so wofully neglected by the teachers of all denominations; and that we should be doubly guilty not to introduce, on all occasions according to our best ability, these harmonious links of the great chain which bind together the plan of redemption.

I know of no way to shun reproach, or to rub off the mark of a "peculiar people," only by a sacrifice of the truth, so I say—

"We'll bear the toil, endure the pain," and run the risk. O how neglectful of our high privileges! The gospel which is the power of God to save—give life—committed to us, and the door open on every hand; and shall we wait the lack of means? Only a few golden moments of probation left, and will the church hold on to their dollars, and refuse to help bear the burthen, or shall we have their hearty cooperation with material aid? Now there is a call upon us all for self-denial and personal sacrifice. Shall we heed and live?

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Scitico, Enfield, Conn., Sept 1st, 1859, of pulmonary consumption, Miss Ellen C. Parker, daughter of Wilder and Laurette L. Parker, aged twenty-three years.

Sister Parker, who has been so ruthlessly torn away from her large circle of relatives and friends, was an amiable young lady, naturally kind, friendly and cheerful. She was by consequence beloved by both the old and the young, in all her circle of acquaintance, which was large indeed for one so young, and it is believed she died without a single enemy. She experienced religion about eight years ago, and, under the labors of Bro. Walter Pratt, she became an Adventist in sentiment, in which faith she died, triumphing in the hope of a real, literal resurrection of the dead, and an eternal inheritance in the kingdom of God, (the earth made new) believing that the kingdom would soon be established under the whole heavens. Sister Ellen, like the young generally, at some seasons in her experience, was to some extent influenced by the world, but she never sold her birthright.

The consumption of which she died, originated through the effect of measles, and hence the approach of the destroyer was gradual though certain, until a very few months before her death, from which time his work was hurried on. At the time her recovery became really doubtful, her future was bright with hope. She was expecting soon to be united to one to whom she had already pledged her troth and accepted his, and it was not without a struggle, that she relinquished her cherished prospects; but she did, her gospel hope gave her victory, and she gave all for Christ and the coming glory.

Before she died, she took an affectionate leave of all the friends present, and left her message for those she could not see, entreating all, father, mother, brothers and sister, together with her chosen heart-friend, to meet her in the kingdom of God. She forgot no relative, no associate, but left her dying warning and exhortation for all, and fell asleep in Jesus.

Her funeral was attended by the writer of this notice, and a sermon preached to a large, attentive, and tearful audience, from the words, "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth." It is hoped some good will be the result. A large procession followed her to her resting place, and lingered about her grave, as if loth to say farewell. May this afflictive bereavement be sanctified to the good of all the mourners, even to him, who without the ostensible privilege of burying a life-companion, has, nevertheless, buried with a bosom friend, for the present at least, his earthly hopes of social happiness.

The following lines were written by a relative of Ellen, and contain the sentiment of Ellen's dying adieu.

Farewell, father, I must leave thee,
Though it fills thy heart with pain,
Nevermore on earth to meet thee,
But in heaven we'll meet again.

Farewell, mother, I am going,
Death is stealing o'er my frame,
And my breath is coming feebler,
Good bye, till we meet again.

Farewell, brothers, seek the Savior,
Seek to have your sins forgiven,
Hear your dying sister's warning,
Brothers, dear, meet me in heaven.

Farewell, sister, thou wilt miss me,
And thy little heart be sad,
But if thou again wouldst meet me,
Give thy youthful heart to God.

Farewell, dear one, thou art lonely,
And thy heart with grief is sore;
Willie, Jesus soon is coming,
Then in heaven we'll part no more.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per steamer Persia, from Liverpool the 15th ult.

A Paris dispatch of the 14th. to the London Post, says the Congress which is to follow the Conference at Zurich has been convened. All the Great Powers, including England, will be represented.

The Paris Constitutionnel of the 14th publishes an article, signed by Secretary Boniface, stating that the only question to be settled at Zurich is the Lombard debt, the contracting powers being agreed upon all other points, the early signature of the treaty is expected, and the questions not settled will be submitted to a Congress, the assembling of which all the European powers are agreed upon.

The London Times' Paris correspondent corroborates the statement from Zurich that the French government has demanded an indemnity from Piedmont for the expenses of the late war; also the payment of the arrears of pensions in connection with the first empire, due from the Lombardo Venetian Monte fund. The correspondent looks upon it as highly probable that these demands have been made, knowing the limited finances of Sardinia, with the object of obtaining the cession of the provinces of Savoy and Nice to France.

FRANCE.

A report was current that Prince Napoleon was about to pay a visit of five days duration to London.

It is stated, by way of Brussels, that on the occasion of the visit of the Emperor to Bordeaux, most of the Italian residents in the town were arrested during his stay, and were released after his departure. These arrests were made on account of a dispatch having been received from the Prefect of Algiers, stating that four passports had been stolen from the Sardinian Consulate in that place, and with which four Italians had started for France and passed through Montpelier, where further track of them was lost.

Two more steel-plated line of battle ships, to be called the Mincio and the Ticino, were soon to be commenced.

The French troops assembled for operations against Morocco are estimated at about 22,000 men. The advance was to take place on the 15th inst.

It was rumored that the French government intend to construct a new fort and arsenal in the land-locked bay of Arcachon, a few miles Northwest of Bordeaux.

A French gunboat was trying to make its way by the Languedoc Canal and Garonne to the Atlantic, the object being to ascertain whether war vessels of small draft can proceed from one sea to the other without passing under the guns of Gibraltar.

ITALY.

The news from Italy is interesting, and indicative of approaching trouble.

Letters from Rome state that the Pope will have an interview at Castle Gardolfo with the King of Naples, and will prolong his stay there, owing to the agitation at Rome.

A manifestation took place at Rome after the departure of the Pope, in honor of the Sardinian Minister, whose passports had been sent in by the Pontifical government. Fifteen thousand persons left their cards at his house. The French General issued orders to prevent any external demonstrations. French gend'armes guarded the approach to the residence of the Sardinian Minister, and patroled the streets in the neighborhood.

LATEST.

A dispatch from Florence states that the exequatur of the American Consul at Leghorn had been withdrawn, on account of his having engaged in political intrigues. An explanatory dispatch had been sent to President Buchanan by the Florentine Cabinet.

The Duke of Tuscany had written to his partisans to abstain from every attempt in favor of the re-establishment of his dynasty.

The idea of occupying Parma with Sardinian troops had been abandoned.

The report that France requires Piedmont to pay an indemnity for the expenses of the late war was everywhere discredited in Italy.

It is stated that the whole Neapolitan frontier was lined with troops, and Mont Cassini fortified with cannon.

AUSTRIA.

The Archbishop of Vienna had addressed to all the Bishops of his diocese a pastoral letter, to be read in all the churches. The clergy are directed to offer up prayers for the integral preservation, without separation, of the temporal power transmitted to the Sovereign Pontiff by his predecessors.

The Archduke Albrecht was to go to Warsaw to meet the Emperor of Russia, and an early interview between the Emperors of Austria and Russia was considered not unlikely.

RUSSIA.

The Russian Ambassadors at London, Paris, Berlin, and Vienna had been summoned by telegraph to meet the Emperor Alexander at Warsaw on the 15th inst. The Emperor was expected to arrive at Odessa on the 17th.

[Per Nova Scotia, four days later.]

THE ZURICH CONFERENCE.

The Moniteur officially announces that on the 17th, a treaty of peace was signed at Zurich between France and Austria.

Referring to the contemplated European Congress, the Paris correspondent of the London Times says eleven powers will meet, viz: Sardinia, Spain, Sweden, Portugal, Naples, Rome, and the five great powers.

The Times of this morning states that the terms of the Zurich treaty are almost identical with those agreed to at Villafranca, and that peace, as one of the questions which disquieted Italy and Europe, seems settled.

The Morning Post says that, assuming its information to be correct, the further proposals concerning the questions left, upon which it is intended to submit to the approval of the Congress, are of such a nature that the diplomatists at Zurich have only heaped up materials of fresh difficulties. England can and will take no part in any Congress of which the first principle be not the recognition of the rights of the Romagnese and Tuscans, no less than the Modenese and Parmesan States to self-government. The first cannon shot fired to force on the people of Romagna, Modena and Tuscany, any other rulers than the Italian prisoners, in whom they so fondly put their trust, will be the signal of a conflict as deadly as that just brought to a close.

Le Nord says that the deputations of Parma and Tuscany had interviews with Napoleon on the 16th, and that the result was satisfactory, but the details are not given.

ITALY.

It is said that the Pope, acting in concert with the Emperor Napoleon, will address a manifesto to the States of the Church.

The Neapolitan army on the frontiers was continually increasing, and will amount to 30,000. General activity prevailed in the arsenals, and the whole army was gradually being placed on a war footing.

Central India is still unsettled. The frontier districts of Nepaul are occupied by the Nana and his followers.

The Waghers are still in insurrection, and a force was to be sent against them.

The ferment in Hungary is so great that additional troops are being sent there.

LEAFLETS.

1. Peace in Christ (envelope size)	4

A new Tract or Pamphlet—"Reasons for the hope that is in me." It will occupy about 50 pages,—large, clear type. Price hereafter.

Bibles of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Minion, references between the verses, $1.50 to 2.25. Nonpareil, marginal references, or references between verses, $1 30 to $2.10. Pearl, references between verses, $1.75. Marginal references, $1.30 to $1 75. Diamond, marginal references, 75 cts. to $1. Bindings, Roan, Calf and Morocco: these make the difference in prices.

Terms for Bibles cash with the order, as I am not able to send them out on credit. 20 per cent. off to those who order ten dollars' worth, i. e., for $8 in cash I send by express $10 worth of Bibles. These prices are very low, much less than those of booksellers generally. I have not all these kind on hand now, but expect to have them in a few days, as soon as they can be imported.

The Englishman's Greek Concordance, $4. Hebrew Concordance, $20. Greek Testament from 50 cts. to $4. Greek Lexicons from $1.25 to $6 25. Hebrew, $1.50 to $10.50. Cash with order.

Directions. 1. Write as soon as possible, if you wish Books or Tracts.

2. Do not expect me to send any or many except such as are on this list. I sometimes have others, but not always. If you want them, say so, and I will send if I have them; but if not, get them at the Crisis office, and do not expect me to write and hunt them up and send them to you. I have too much to do.

3. Do not make me answer needless questions or useless letters. I have not the time nor strength to do it. I write day after day, and still am behind with my correspondence.

4. Tell me where you live, your town, post office, county and state, and sign your name plainly to your letter, and put your address under it. Do not forget this.

5. If you want tracts to scatter, send $1, or $5, or $10, and get a lot. 1600 pages for $1. If you are too poor to pay, and want tracts, send in and you can have them free. Send stamps to pay postage if you can, if not, I will do it. Let the tracts fly!

6. Tell how to send the tracts—by mail or express. What express? What is the nearest depot?

7. My address is always Providence, R. I., and my office in Providence is 43 Weybosset street, near the post office, and opposite the Bank of North America, up stairs, in a watch shop with H. W. Pray.

9. After Nov. 10th till Dec. 1st, orders may be sent "care of G. W. Young, Box 3124 New York city P. O." During that time I can be found at 138 Williams St., New York. I want all orders, so far as possible, sent in by that time, that I may fill them and have it done with.

9 Cut out this paper and read it over when you order books and tracts of me.

10. If you want any Greek or Hebrew books, I can get them for you as cheap as any one when in N. Y. I can get you any other books you need. Yours, L. H. Hastings.

Notices, &c.

Notice.

There will be a Second Advent Conference held in Worcester, Mass., with the brethren worshiping in Warren Hall, commencing Wednesday, Nov. 16th, at 2 o'clock P. M., to hold over the following Sunday. At this meeting in addition to the usual religious services, there will be a suitable portion of the time occupied in the investigation of doctrinal truths, among which, and not least, will be considered the evidences that exist in proof of the fact that the coming of our Lord is especially near. The brethren in that region, both preachers and lay brethren, are cordially invited to attend as the Lord may direct. The following preachers have declared their intentions to be present, and others are expected: J. Hemenway, J. Billings, J. G. Smith, H. Pratt, C. Goodrich, J. G. Hook.

[illegible]

For the Crisis.

[illegible]

[illegible]
A scene of toil and gloom,
[illegible] period of sojourning,
Away, away from home.
Here joy is but a mingled cup
[illegible] and woe;
[illegible] how soon they pass—
[illegible] away they go.

II.

[illegible] friends how soon they fall,
[illegible] their pleasing stay;
Our fondest love can ne'er avail
To keep death's shafts away.
[illegible] of love are broken
By the cruel tyrant's sway;
Our friends, alas! how soon they pass,
To silence called away.

III.

[illegible] bare pinches,
And woes and wants distress;
[illegible]
[illegible] for a short time bless.
How short lived then the phantom
That's destined to decay;
[illegible], alas! it soon must pass—
With eagle's wings away.

IV.

But soon these days of mourning,
This scene of toil and gloom;
This period of sojourning,
Will end—and Jesus come.
Oh, let us then be ready
To hail the joyous day;
Our faith and hope be steady,
Till sorrows pass away.

For the Crisis.

The Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

CORRESPONDENCE.—No. 3.

My Dear Sister G.:—Perhaps it may not be wholly unprofitable to consider the following question: For what purpose was the special manifestation of the Holy Ghost to Christ's disciples given? We say special manifestation, for we do not for a moment believe that there was no Holy Spirit in the world previous to the day of Pentecost. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." John was filled with the Holy Ghost. Zacharias and Elisabeth were filled with the Holy Ghost. Simeon had a revelation from the Holy Ghost. "Very true," says one, "but its miraculous power had not then been given, and it was for this special endowment that the baptism was poured out." Nay, not so fast, my friend. Did not the disciples work miracles previous to Christ's ascension? Certainly they did, therefore this was not the "power" which they were to receive after that the Holy Ghost was come upon them.

While all of Christ's disciples possessed to some extent the influence of the Spirit, its abundant effusion of graces, its plenitude of gifts, was not granted until the baptism was received. Let us look over some of these, as they are portrayed in the teachings of Christ and his disciples. "Comforter." The word rendered Comforter signifies also an "advocate, a defender of a cause, a counsellor, patron, mediator." "The Holy Spirit is thus called because he transacts the cause of God and Christ with us, explains to us the nature and importance of the great atonement; shows the necessity of it; counsels us to receive it, instructs us how to lay hold upon it, vindicates our claim to it, and makes intercessions with unutterable groanings."

Teacher. "He shall teach you all things." He is the divine instructor in the things of God. Witness. "He shall testify of me." This the Holy Spirit did, accompanying the word preached with power, and witnessing also with divers signs and gifts.

Reprover. "He will reprove the world of sin, by showing them what sin is, and their need of an atonement—of righteousness; the Spirit would so vindicate the mission of Christ and his divinity, as to convince the world that he was sent from God to be the Savior of sinners—of judgment, the great day when all would appear before the bar of God to receive their righteous sentence.

Guide. "He will guide you into all truth." It was by the influence of the Spirit that the eyes of their understanding were to be opened, enabling them to understand the revelations given by the prophets concerning Christ and his kingdom, also the teachings of Christ himself, which were often so hard to be understood by them; and, as that "Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," he would take of those things, and show them unto Christ's disciples, and reveal to them things to come. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." This is not to be limited to instruction in regard to what God has revealed in his word, but may also apply to guidance in respect to duties not directly specified therein, and to various temporal matters, concerning which the child of God needs [illegible]

[illegible] The Spirit said to Philip, [illegible] rode by, "Go, join thyself to [illegible] He obeyed the voice of his [illegible] the result was, the conversion [illegible] At one time Paul and Silas, after they "had gone [illegible] the region of Galatia, were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to [illegible] Troas, Paul had a vision, and saw before him a man from Macedonia, who prayed him, saying, "Come over into Macedonia and help us." He says that he believed then assuredly that the Lord had called them to preach the gospel in Macedonia. Now Philip, and Paul, and Silas, were "led by the Spirit," not only in the study of the written word, but in reference to their journeyings from place to place to preach the gospel. Yet there are men, ministers too, who reject such guidance and go wholly of their own wittings and choosings, and some oppose those who claim that they are directed by the Spirit and providence of God, to go to any specific place to labor, although the result shows that they had a work there to do.

There is too much departure from primitive simplicity and apostolic ground. If the apostles needed guidance in their labors—forbidden here, and directed there—do we not need the same? What though some are led by their own spirit, their own fancies, deeming them to be the impressions of the Holy Spirit, shall we therefore reject the divine guidance? Just as consistently might we reject all coin and bank-bills, because some thought they had the genuine, and were mistaken. The fact that there is counterfeit money, should only lead us to greater carefulness, and to consult the "detector" diligently, in order to learn the marks of the spurious coin and notes, and so in regard to the inward voice, we must compare its teachings with the Heavenly Detector, knowing that whatever leads to a violation of its spirit, or laws, is not of God.

There was nothing in the revealed Word directing Philip to go join himself to the chariot—nothing there forbidding Paul and Silas to go into Asia—nothing directing them to go to Macedonia, yet they violated no law of God in thus obeying.

There is nothing in the Scriptures requiring A. B. and C. to forsake all and go into the world and preach the gospel, for this divine call they are wholly dependent upon the inward Teacher, and the providence of God. The call comes to them by inward revealings, and to substantiate them, there is a voice in the church, and a voice in the providence of God.

The Holy Spirit, then, is essential as a Guide. Happy they who follow its counsels, and heed its admonitions. Yours in the fellowship of Christ, M. D. W.

For the Crisis.

Who are Christians?

Bro. Grant:—With a heart full of sorrow for the sins of my people, I take my pen in hand, praying God to direct my thoughts, that I may be able, at least, to write nothing wrong, or rash, but as the Spirit of God may quicken my understanding and give ability to say things that shall be in accordance with the word.

The question arises in my mind, what is it to be a christian? What is it to follow the Lord? Is it to attend meeting when some favorite preacher of ours is to hold forth some doctrine we love? or is it to go to conference meeting, so we can have an opportunity to give a long exhortation, and make a long prayer? Is it to say amen, when some favorite truth is held up? is it to give to some particular ones, because they are favorites of ours? Is it to spend our money to buy some tract written by a favorite writer, that we may be able to get the advantage of our opponents in argument, supposing that gain is godliness? Is it to go to meeting some miles, through the mud and rain, to have an opportunity to hold up to the people some peculiar notions of ours, supposing that in them is embodied all present truth? Is it to preach and exhort until we are all exhausted, to prepare people for the reign of Christ, and then act as if Satan reigned over us? Is it to preach the non-resurrection of the wicked, or the resurrection of the wicked? Is it to preach the wicked will be destroyed, or that they will exist forever? Is it to preach that the dead do not know anything, or that they know more than you and I do? Is it to preach that the day of the Lord hasteth greatly, or to preach that he will come on some particular day that we have set? in other words, is it following the Lord to serve the Lord, or is it following the Lord to serve ourselves?

I fear when we come up to the judgment, God will not ask us if we believe in the destruction of the wicked, or sleep of the dead, or that he was coming on some particular day, when he never revealed it; he will not ask us, what did you believe, but what did you do? He will not ask us if we talked pretty loud and long in prayer meeting about loving our brethren, but if we showed it by our acts of kindness toward them out of prayer meeting, when we knew that they were in distressed circumstances, and needed our assistance. He will not ask us if we had to work hard for a living, to get all that we and our extravagant wives wanted, when we wanted a great deal more than we needed; but if we worked hard to help the fatherless and the widow in their affliction. A great many seem to think that it is a very nice thing to visit the fatherless and the widow; but God never told us he would reward us for visiting them [illegible] half their substance, but he says pure religion is to visit them in their affliction [illegible] in their affliction. This is a good way to visit the poor: enclose one dollar or five, according as the Lord has prospered us, in a letter, and send to them. If we forget to do so, God may not recollect to enroll our names in the book of life, for God will not have any selfish ones in his kingdom. If he did, we do not know but they would be picking up the gold in the streets of the New Jerusalem; for if we distrust God here, when he says he will take care of us, if we will take care of the poor, we might distrust him in the kingdom. The Lord never will give us entrance there, unless we keep his commandments here.

I wish to call the attention of those who love their neighbor as themselves, to the notice in the Crisis of Sept. 14th, concerning Bro. Timothy Dodge. The notice says the sick family are in distressed circumstances. Now that does not mean comfortable; it means distressed. If we were in like circumstances what should we wish to have the brethren do by us? I have taken pains to ascertain the condition of the family, and also to find out how much has been given them since this call; and I find that by the thousands that read the paper, there has been just one dollar sent them up to this time, besides a little sent them by a very few brethren in Danielsonville. When I find that such is the case—calls like this are not answered, it pains my heart, and I am led to cry out, Lord, where are thy people?

I know that hundreds of those professing to be the chosen people of God in these last days, can just as well as not send from one to five dollars to relieve those that are in distress. Brethren, shall we obey God, or shall we serve our own selfish propensities? If we want a coat, we can buy one. If our wife wants a new hat, we can get it. If we want tea, we can get it, and if we want tobacco, we can get it. If we take it into our heads that we want a great many things that are needless, we can get them. There is money enough when we want, but how is it when our neighbor wants?

O! my prayer is, that God may give us strength to examine ourselves, to see if we are in the faith. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; and he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." How are we to sow to the Spirit? Says the apostle, "Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." He does not say, let us not be weary in loud talking or in loud praying, but, "in well doing." If we do not look well to ourselves, we shall be destroyed at last.

We may not be worth much money, that is not the point; money will never condemn a man, it is the love of money that will condemn us at last. Which do we love best, to lay up money for ourselves, or to do the commandments of God? In the judgment it will be said, I was hungry, and you fed me, I was ragged, and you clothed me, and they shall say, When, Lord? Inasmuch as you did it unto one of the greatest of these, you have done it unto me? No! but, inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these you have done it unto me. D. A. Jones.

How it Was Done.

One evening, as one of the Crisis patrons took his paper from the post office, a brother stepped up to him and asked,

"Have n't they stopped publishing those pieces on tobacco yet?"

"No," was the response; "and if they don't stop publishing them before I leave off using it, it will be a long while I guess."

That expression kept running through his own mind afterwards, and he could not get rid of it. So, said he, "I won't use any tobacco to-day just for that." He went through with one day without using the weed. The next day he thought—"Well, there, I've kept from it one day, and why not two?" So he abstained from its use two days with no inconvenience, and neither did he hanker after it. Then, said he, "I won't use any more!"

One year has passed, and the weedy enemy has not found a place within his mouth, and he means to have it so forever. He lays the ease with which he left off its use to the making up of his mind to that end. This is an example worthy of imitation. He made up his mind, and the thing was within nine hundred and ninety-nine thousandths of its accomplishment. Who else is able to make up his mind, and have something to thank God for, viz., a clear mind and sound judgment? Tobacco stupefies and insensates, and for a christian to use it is the same as his saying, "God shall not have the benefit of my energies and talents—I will stupefy them with tobacco." Yes, and that is the way the devil trips him into the abuse.

Brother, you'd better "make up your mind." If you smoke tobacco, you say by so doing—"I will burn incense to Baal, and run the risk of being saved by the God of Heaven." Better not do it, brother. It won't pay in the end. R. H.

The Crowning Truth in our Lord's great Prayer.—John 17: 20-24.

There is no portion of our blessed Savior's instruction more important or subduing than this, embraced in his most extended prayer. It comprehends the relations of redemption beyond all other portions; and yet it specifies these relations with a minuteness that is most wonderful. It opens with a reference to the revealed glory of God—embraces "all flesh," and by consequence all time, from creation to the "restitution"—Acts 3: 21; Rev. 21,—presents the power of his personal ministry, in the calling and keeping of his disciples from "the evil one"—specifies the Word as the truth of God, and the appointed means of their sanctification, and also the sole ground of faith to "all who shall believe through their word" throughout the gospel age—makes this class the subjects of his then special intercession; and thence till they are "made perfect into one," (ver. 23; Eph. 4: 13; 1 Thess. 4: 13-18; 1 Cor. 15: 50-55; Heb. 12: 23—the just made perfect by the resurrection,) and crowns the whole with God's gracious purpose; "that the WORLD may know" it!

Remarks. 1. Here is the whole gospel—the plan of salvation in its wonderful outline, from its first commencement on to its consummation.

2. This was "praying in the Holy Ghost."—Jude 20. It was praying according to the Spirit's fullest teaching.

3. This outpouring of the Spirit's mind in prayer agrees with the gospel preached before to "Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." Amen.

4. Thus the Holy Ghost spoke by "Paul in all his Epistles," saying, "There shall be a root of Jesse ... to reign over the Gentiles. In Him shall the Gentiles (nations) trust."—Rom. 15: 12.

5. In vision, the last and most loving apostle saw how the prayer of Jesus will be fulfilled! Babylon (the present system) will fall, Satan be bound, the apostles and martyrs will be resurrected, when the living saints shall be transformed, and so "perfected into one body" politic. And so shall they "reign with Christ a thousand years!" "The nations" are THERE in Matt. 12: 17-21, Rev. 15: 4; 20: 3, and scores of other Scriptures. All these "words of the Holy Ghost" find their place in this prayer of Him who is the Great Example of the christian life. Amen.

6. Let us be consistent, and CUT OUT THE CROWNING TRUTH of our Lord's prayer, or else let it stand in other Scriptures in all its majestic pre-eminence! They must harmonize.

7. "THE KING of kings" can not, as such, either "reign," or even exist, only as there are subordinate and associated kings to reign with him in the kingdom. It is only then that the saints shall be "perfected into one." Short of this, they can not "receive the promise." Heb. 11: 13-39. And in their manifested regal "glory" alone will they share in the glory given to Jesus—"the glory of the kingdom."

8. Then (saith the Lord Jesus) shall the world "know that thou hast loved them as thou hast loved me!"

Conclusion. It is obvious that our Lord's prayer (and the general scope of "the Law, the Prophets and Psalms" harmonizing therewith) can not be ignored, explained away and so DENIED, save by "another Spirit." The good Lord deliver us from "every spirit" which would cut down or crowd back the prayer of the Son of God and the word of life to a dying world! Nay, let it be realized in all its fullness and all its blessedness; and may we as BELIEVERS in God's loving will, so revealed, be there when his saints shall "be made perfect into one!" "The world (the nations not deceived, Rev. 15: 4; 20: 3,) shall know" then the love of God to them as well as to Jesus. Amen and amen.

The King in his Beauty.

BY H. L. H.

"We would see Jesus," said some in other days; and this favor was granted to many of that generation who afterwards could joyfully testify concerning that which they had seen with their eyes, which they had looked upon, and their hands handled, of the Word of Life. This was considered as a special favor, and was recognized as such by one who said. "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear; for verily I say unto you, that many prophets and righteous men have desired to see these things which ye see, and have not seen them."

Highly were they favored who could say, "He dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory; as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

This desire to see Jesus, is beautifully illustrated in the case of Simeon. He was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel; the Holy Ghost was upon him, and while he mused on the desolation of his people from whom the prophet and king alike had departed, and upon whose altars Ichabod seemed written, it wrought upon his inmost soul a deep and glowing impression, that, ere his eyes were dimmed by the shades of death, they should behold the Lord's Anointed. This seemed to have become the [illegible] which he lived; and when, after waiting long, he received the infant Redeemer in his trembling hands, the object of his life seemed to be obtained, and he exclaimed, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Though seeing Jesus was the especial, yet it was by no means the exclusive, privilege of the generation then living on the earth.

We may each one of us, if we walk uprightly and work righteously, receive the precious words of the prophet as a cheering and comforting assurance that we shall see him for ourselves.

Thine eyes, lone, sorrowing pilgrim—thine eyes, that, tired of earth, have long been uplifted to God—that have beheld affliction, misery and woe—that have gazed in sadness on this sin-smitten world—that have been turned away from beholding vanity, and that are now employed in looking unto Jesus—thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty!

The positiveness of this declaration gives us reason to rejoice while anticipating its fulfillment. Unlike the promises that are made by men, this is immutable—it is unfailing, and hence we have strong consolation.

You have longed to gaze upon the Lamb of God and behold his glorious countenance. You have exclaimed, "whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none that I desire on earth beside thee." But still you see him not. You turn away in sadness and wait upon the Lord that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and look for him. You weep for his comforting presence. "his absence hangs like a mountain of iron" on your "heavy heart."

But dry your tears! hush your plaintive moans—list to the declaration that comes from lips kindled with seraphic fire—"thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty." Here is no uncertainty—no mistake—the pure in heart "shall see God."

This king is not a mere spirit, an intangible, immaterial, invisible existence. He shall be seen. The vail, "that is his flesh," that hid Christ's glory from the gaze of men, and the clouds and darkness that are round about his throne, shall render him invisible no longer, but the throne and him that sitteth on it, shall be seen rising in peerless majesty, and shedding a glorious baptism of splendor on the paradise of God. Visible to all his people shall he be, and thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty.

Thine eyes shall see the king. Others have spoken of the things concerning him—have looked for him—have spoken of his "reign in righteousness"—of "his days when the righteous shall flourish,"—they have longed for his appearance, and with "all nations" have desired him: but thou shalt see him.

Others have seen his trial, thou shalt behold his reward. Others have seen his shame, thou shalt see his glory. Others have witnessed the sorrows that he endured, thou shalt behold "the joy that was set before him." Others have seen him a captive, thou shalt see him a conqueror. Others have seen his cross, thou shalt see his crown. Others have seen him dying and dead, thou shalt see him living to die no more!

Thou shalt see him! Not the bruised, thorn-crowned victim on Calvary's bloody brow! but the glory-crowned king on Zion's sacred summit! The king,—the king over all the earth, the righteous king, the king of glory, the blessed and only potentate, the king of kings, the king eternal, immortal, the only wise God. Thine eyes shall see him.

"In his beauty."—his beauty. No borrowed charms surround this glorious king—no reflected radiance encircles his glorious throne. God needs no gilding,—perfect beauty needs no adornment. The regalia of earth's noble ones hung about him would be seen in all its tawdryness, like varnish on a diamond, or paint upon the rainbow.

But his visage was marred—there was no beauty in him and they desired him not, his eyes were dim with weeping, his brow was wrung with agony, his bosom heaved with sighs, his heart throbbed with anguish, his head was lacerated with a thorny diadem, his back was gored with scourges; his hands were torn with nails, his side was pierced, and now my weeping, guilty soul, would come beneath the shelter of the cross and wash from every stain in that outgushing, crimson stream!

But this shall not be so when the Son of man shall come in his glory and in his beauty. 'Mid the flaming myriads of holy ones—'mid the mighty shouts of his attending angels—'mid the glory that curtains the abode of the eternal, faith's eye beholds the coming king!—girt with rainbow splendors—flying on the wings of the wind—his brow adorned with many crowns—his countenance like the sun, shining in its strength—his voice like the sound of many waters—his feet like fine brass, burning in a furnace—his herald the thunder, and his guards the lightning!—his reward with him—his work before him.

"He that planted the ear, shall he not hear?" He that formed the eye, shall he not see? He that hath robed the earth in verdure, and clad each flower with beauty,—He that hath hung the rainbow's splendor on the tempest's gloom—He that hath placed so much beauty in a world cursed of God and ruled by Satan—will he not appear in beauty when the earth shall be at rest—the usurper destroyed—the curse removed, and the blest day of his own coronation fully come?

Thine eyes shall see him, and if thy heart be pure, thou shalt be made like him then. Sweet hope,—hope of earth's holy men. We shall see him in his beauty, and we are not the first who have longed and looked for that event. Says the "perfect and upright man," while surrounded with grief and sorrow, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And ... in my flesh shall I see God. Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold."

This was his earnest expectation and his desire, and fearless of disappointment, he desired that it might be graven in the imperishable rock, as the record of his faith and hope in God.

This prospect rose in enchanting loveliness before the mind of the sweet psalmist of Israel, and became the sole object of his desire, for with this came all else that was desirable. He says, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." [illegible] shield; he will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

The pure in heart are blessed, for they shall see God; they shall behold his face and see his beauty. "How great is his goodness and how great is his beauty."

Lift up your heads, look up, ye mourning saints, your king is coming! A little while, and he will appear, and if faithful in his service you may share his kingdom; for "Behold a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." O that we may be among the holy ones who shall reign and dwell in that new kingdom, and shall with songs of thanksgiving "circle the eternal throne,"

"And the king in his beauty adore."

Our Rest.

"The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us."

My feet are worn and weary with the march
Over rough roads and up the steep hill-side;
Oh, city of our God, I fain would see
Thy pastures green, where peaceful waters glide.

My hands are weary, laboring, toiling on,
Day after day, for perishable meat;
Oh, city of our God, I fain would rest;
I sigh to gain thy glorious mercy-seat.

My garments, travel-worn and stained with dust,
Oft rent by briars and thorns that crowd my way,
Would fain be made, oh Lord, my righteousness,
Spotless and white in heaven's unclouded ray.

My eyes are weary looking at the sin,
Impiety and scorn upon the earth,
Oh, city of our God, within thy walls
All, all are clothed upon with the new birth.

My heart is weary of its own deep sin—
Sinning, repenting, sinning still alway;
When shall my soul thy glorious presence feel,
And find its guilt, dear Savior, washed away?

Patience, poor soul, the Savior's feet were worn;
The Savior's heart and hands were weary too;
His garments stained and travel worn and old,
His sacred eyes blinded with tears for you.

Love thou the path of sorrow that he trod,
Toil on, and wait in patience for thy rest,
Oh, city of our God, we soon shall see
Thy glorious walls, home of the loved and blest.

CLEAR AND CLOUDY DAYS.

From my windows that overlook the bay, I notice a great difference in the atmosphere at different times. Often for a week together the air will be so hazy and murky that nothing can be distinctly seen, and if a stranger were asking me about the different localities, I should have to say, "That obscure point is the Battery, and yonder gray bank is Staten Island, and that faint line in the distance is the Jersey shore." But then, after storms, there comes a day when everything is bold and clear, and seems to advance to meet me. The harbor with all its ships, I can almost touch with my finger, Staten Island comes half way up the bay to say, "How do you do," and the Orange Mountains are just behind New York. So there are hours in the christian life, and they usually come after storms, when all the mists of doubt and care are blown away, and this life and the life beyond lift themselves clearly to our vision. Then is the time to gain knowledge and joy for cloudy days. When there is to be a remarkable planetary conjunction, men are sent from astronomical observatories to the Sandwich Islands or the Cape of Good Hope in order that they may take accurate observations. So we, in these rare hours, these altitudes of faith and hope, should make those observations which will reach on and become determining elements for the rest of life.

OVERCOMING DIFFICULTIES.

Many people are going to heaven as the fish go up the rivers to deposit their spawn. They get along easily in the estuary, and for some distance above it, but at length the reach a fall. Now the question is, Can the salmon leap it? If they can they will find smooth water for another twenty miles, if they cannot they must go back to the sea.

It makes no difference how far up the stream a christian may have gone, if when he comes to obstructions he must needs turn back to sea again. The power of his life is not shown by his swimming in calm water, but by what he can do in the whirls and rapids, and by what leaps he can surmount the obstructions that lie across the stream. There is no use in being strong any where else if he is not strong here.

SUBMISSION TO CHRIST.

God does not bring men to him as he brings flowers from the earth—with one sweep of sunlight. He works upon each heart in a different way. He beleaguers and bombards every man in his own citadel. When the young man who came running to Christ, saying, "Good master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" replied to Christ's direction that he had kept all the commandments from his youth up, an ordinary minister would have received him at once into the church; but Christ knew where he had intrenched himself, and fired shot and shell right into the fort when he said, "One thing thou lackest; go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come, take up the cross, and follow me." At that, he hung his head and went away sorrowful. If Christ had given this command to the next man who applied to him, he would very likely have answered, "Yea, Lord, I have but little, and I will gladly give it up," but at the same time he might have kept back some ambition, or affection or revenge, with which he was not willing to part. In practical life it is oftentimes the case that some reserved and unwilling point is the gate of the whole mind. As a city needs not to have every particular house surrendered to the enemy or the conqueror, but is vanquished and taken when the magistrate throws open the gates and presents the keys, so a man gives up his whole soul, when he gives up these faculties which are the gates of the soul.

☞ As the soil, however rich it may be, cannot be productive without culture, so the mind, without cultivation, can never produce good fruit.—Seneca.

☞ Duties fulfilled are always pleasures to the memory.

Manners.

Young folks should be mannerly. But how to be, is the question. Many a good boy and girl feel that they cannot behave themselves in the presence of company. They are awkward, clownish, rough; they feel timid, bashful, and self-distrustful the moment they are addressed by a stranger, or appear in company. There is but one way to get over this feeling, and acquire graceful and easy manners; that is to do the best they can all the time, at home as well as abroad. Good manners are not learned so much as acquired by habit. They grow upon us by use. We must be courteous, agreeable, civil, kind, gentlemanly and womanly at home, and then it will soon become a kind of second nature to be so everywhere. A coarse, rough manner at home, begets a roughness which we cannot lay off if we try, when we go among strangers. The most agreeable people we have ever known in company are those that are perfectly agreeable at home. Home is the school for the best things.

The Child King.

"Whose likeness is this?"

"It is the likeness of a little boy, who, while you are reading of him, is running about like a little squirrel, and talking like a chatterbox, and when he laughs he shows several beautiful teeth, as white as milk and sharp almost as needles.

And, oh, if you could see the crib in which he sleeps! It cost many thousands of dollars! And the house he lives in: it is one of the finest palaces in the world! Carpets richer than any you ever saw cover the floors. The walls are beautifully painted and hung with pictures; and, when those chandeliers are lighted, nothing can be more brilliant. And then the carriage in which he goes with his mother out for a drive, and those four horses: they make the windows rattle as they sweep along!"

"Well, who is he?"

"He is a baby-emperor. His father is called Louis Napoleon, and is Emperor of France. This little fellow is called the 'Prince Imperial.' The great Napoleon was his father's uncle. When this child is old enough, all the people are expected to come together and put a crown on his head, and splendid robes upon him, and to shout, 'God save the Emperor!' He will govern thirty-five millions of people. He will have whole chests of gold and silver, and more horses and chariots than you could count. Five hundred thousand soldiers, with flags flying, and bright plumes and muskets and cannon, will march at his command."

"Oh, I wish I was going to be an emperor!"

"Do you? Think a moment. There was a little boy, the son of a king, who lived in a palace; and yet he was hung in a tree and his body pierced through with many arrows. Do you know who that was? (2 Sam. 18: 14.) There was another little boy who became a king, and the people seized him and cut off his head. The father of the very boy, whose likeness you see above, has several times come very near losing his life.

"But, if you would really like to be a king, I know One who wants a little boy that he may make him a king. He will put a crown on his head, the 'best robe' on his body, and a 'ring on his hand,' and will make him a 'king and priest unto God.' He will give him a palace, in a city whose streets are paved with gold, with high walls of jasper, and doors made of pearl. (Rev. 21: 10-27.) Around it will be a magnificent park, full of trees loaded with every kind of fine fruit. (Rev. 22: 2.) You will never have to go to bed in that place, for 'there will be no night there.' And oh, what wonderful things you will there see! And there you will never be sick, and never die."

"Oh, I think I know now, whom you mean. You mean the Lord Jesus Christ."

"Yes. It was He, who said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.'"

"But how can a little child like me go to the Lord Jesus?"

"When your mother comes home after being long away, do you not run to her and love to look her in the face? And if she bids you do any thing, how willingly you run to obey! It is because you love your mother. You must feel and act in the same way towards the Savior."

"But I can't see Jesus, as I can see my mother."

"Well, go by yourself, every day, and several times a day, and then, kneeling down alone, ask the Lord Jesus to teach you how to love and obey him.—S. S. Gazette.

"Prayer is the simplest form of speech
That infant lips can try;
Prayer, the sublimest strains that reach
The Majesty on high."

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year,	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	16.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Days of Mourning.

I.

These are days of mourning,
A scene of toil and gloom;
[illegible] wandering,
Away, away from home.
Here joy is but a mingled cup
[illegible];
Our hopes, alas! how soon they pass—
[illegible] away they go.

II.

[illegible] friends how soon they fall,
[illegible] their parting stay;
Our fondest love can ne'er avail
To keep death's shafts away.
The links of love are broken
By the cruel tyrant's sway;
Our friends, alas! how soon they pass,
To silence called away.

III.

Dread poverty here pinches,
And woes and wants distress;
[illegible] uncertain riches
Can for a short time bless.
How short lived then the phantom
That's destined to decay;
For wealth, alas! it soon must pass—
With eagle's wings away.

IV.

But soon these days of mourning,
This house of toil and gloom;
This period of sojourning,
Will end—and Jesus come.
Oh, let us then be ready
To hail the joyous day;
Our faith and hope be steady,
Till sorrows pass away.

The Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

CORRESPONDENCE.—No. 3.

My Dear Sister G.:—Perhaps it may not be wholly unprofitable to consider the following question: For what purpose was the special manifestation of the Holy Ghost to Christ's disciples given? We say special manifestation, for we do not for a moment believe that there was no Holy Spirit in the world previous to the day of Pentecost. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." John was filled with the Holy Ghost. Zacharias and Elisabeth were filled with the Holy Ghost. Simeon had a revelation from the Holy Ghost. "Very true," says one, "but its miraculous power had not then been given, and it was for this special endowment that the baptism was poured out." Nay, not so fast, my friend. Did not the disciples work miracles previous to Christ's ascension? Certainly they did, therefore this was not the "power" which they were to receive after that the Holy Ghost was come upon them.

While all of Christ's disciples possessed to some extent the influence of the Spirit, its abundant effusion of graces, its plenitude of gifts, was not granted until the baptism was received. Let us look over some of these, as they are portrayed in the teachings of Christ and his disciples. "Comforter." The word rendered Comforter signifies also an "advocate, a defender of a cause, a counsellor, patron, mediator." "The Holy Spirit is thus called because he transacts the cause of God and Christ with us, explains to us the nature and importance of the great atonement; shows the necessity of it; counsels us to receive it; instructs us how to lay hold upon it; vindicates our claim to it, and makes intercessions with unutterable groanings."

Teacher. "He shall teach you all things." He is the divine instructor in the things of God. Witness. "He shall testify of me." This the Holy Spirit did, accompanying the word preached with power, and witnessing also with divers signs and gifts.

Reprover. "He will reprove the world of sin, by showing them what sin is, and their need of an atonement—of righteousness; the Spirit would so vindicate the mission of Christ, and his divinity, as to convince the world that he was sent from God to be the Savior of sinners—of judgment; the great day when all would appear before the bar of God to receive their righteous sentence.

Guide. "He will guide you into all truth." It was by the influence of the Spirit that the eyes of their understanding were to be opened, enabling them to understand the revelations given by the prophets concerning Christ and his kingdom, which the teachings of Christ himself, which were often so hard to be understood by them, and that "Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," he would take of those things, and show them unto his disciples, and reveal to them things to come. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." This is not to be limited to instruction in regard to what God has revealed in his word, but may also apply to guidance in regard to duties not directly specified, and to various temporal matters, [illegible] which the child of God needs [illegible]. The Spirit said to Philip, "Go, join thyself to this chariot." [illegible]

Troas, Paul had a vision, and saw before him a man of Macedonia, who prayed him, saying, "Come over into Macedonia and help us." He says that he believed then assuredly that the Lord had called them to preach the gospel in Macedonia. Now Philip, and Paul, and Silas, were "led by the Spirit," not only in the study of the written word, but in reference to their journeyings from place to place to preach the gospel. Yet there are men, ministers too, who reject such guidance and go wholly of their own wittings and choosings, and some oppose those who claim that they are directed by the Spirit and providence of God, to go to any specific place to labor, although the result shows that they had a work there to do.

There is too much departure from primitive simplicity and apostolic ground. If the apostles needed guidance in their labors—forbidden here, and directed there—do we not need the same? What though some are led by their own spirit, their own fancies, deeming them to be the impressions of the Holy Spirit, shall we therefore reject the divine guidance? Just as consistently might we reject all coin and bank-bills, because some thought they had the genuine, and were mistaken. The fact that there is counterfeit money, should only lead us to greater carefulness, and to consult the "detector" diligently, in order to learn the marks of the spurious coin and notes; and so in regard to the inward voice; we must compare its teachings with the Heavenly Detector, knowing that whatever leads to a violation of its spirit, or laws, is not of God.

There was nothing in the revealed Word directing Philip to go join himself to the chariot—nothing there forbidding Paul and Silas to go into Asia—nothing directing them to go to Macedonia, yet they violated no law of God in thus obeying.

There is nothing in the Scriptures requiring A. B. and C. to forsake all and go into the world and preach the gospel; for this divine call they are wholly dependent upon the inward Teacher, and the providence of God. The call comes to them by inward revealings, and to substantiate them, there is a voice in the church, and a voice in the providence of God.

The Holy Spirit, then, is essential as a Guide. Happy they who follow its counsels, and heed its admonitions. Yours in the fellowship of Christ,

Who are Christians?

Bro. Grant:—With a heart full of sorrow for the sins of my people, I take my pen in hand, praying God to direct my thoughts, that I may be able, at least, to write nothing wrong, or rash, but as the Spirit of God may quicken my understanding and give ability to say things that shall be in accordance with the word.

The question arises in my mind, what is it to be a christian? What is it to follow the Lord? Is it to attend meeting when some favorite preacher of ours is to hold forth some doctrine we love? or is it to go to conference meeting, so we can have an opportunity to give a long exhortation, and make a long prayer? Is it to say amen, when some favorite truth is held up? is it to give to some particular ones, because they are favorites of ours? Is it to spend our money to buy some tract written by a favorite writer, that we may be able to get the advantage of our opponents in argument, supposing that gain is godliness? Is it to go to meeting some miles, through the mud and rain, to have an opportunity to hold up to the people some peculiar notions of ours, supposing that in them is embodied all present truth? Is it to preach and exhort until we are all exhausted, to prepare people for the reign of Christ, and then act as if Satan reigned over us? Is it to preach the non-resurrection of the wicked, or the resurrection of the wicked? Is it to preach the wicked will be destroyed, or that they will exist forever? Is it to preach that the dead do not know anything, or that they know more than you and I do? Is it to preach that the day of the Lord hasteth greatly, or to preach that he will come on some particular day that we have set? in other words, is it following the Lord to serve the Lord, or is it following the Lord to serve ourselves?

I fear when we come up to the judgment, God will not ask us if we believe in the destruction of the wicked, or sleep of the dead, or that he was coming on some particular day, when he never revealed it; he will not ask us, what did you believe, but what did you do? He will not ask us if we talked pretty loud and long in prayer meeting about loving our brethren, but if we showed it by our acts of kindness toward them out of prayer meeting, when we knew that they were in distressed circumstances, and needed our assistance. He will not ask us if we had to work hard for a living, to get all that we and our extravagant wives wanted, when we wanted a great deal more than we needed; but if we worked hard to help the fatherless and the widow in their affliction. A great many seem to think that it is a very nice thing to visit the fatherless and the widow; but God never told us to [illegible] visit the poor: enclose one dollar or five, according as the Lord has prospered us, in a letter, and send to them. If we forget to do so, God may not recollect to enroll our names in the book of life, for God will not have any selfish ones in his kingdom. If he did, we do not know but they would be picking up the gold in the streets of the New Jerusalem; for if we distrust God here, when he says he will take care of us, if we will take care of the poor, we might distrust him in the kingdom. The Lord never will give us entrance there, unless we keep his commandments here.

I wish to call the attention of those who love their neighbor as themselves, to the notice in the Crisis of Sept. 14th, concerning Bro. Timothy Dodge. The notice says the sick family are in distressed circumstances. Now that does not mean comfortable; it means distressed. If we were in like circumstances what should we wish to have the brethren do by us? I have taken pains to ascertain the condition of the family, and also to find out how much has been given them since this call; and I find that by the thousands that read the paper, there has been just one dollar sent them up to this time, besides a little sent them by a very few brethren in Danielsonville. When I find that such is the case—calls like this are not answered, it pains my heart; and I am led to cry out, Lord, where are thy people?

I know that hundreds of those professing to be the chosen people of God in these last days, can just as well as not send from one to five dollars to relieve those that are in distress. Brethren, shall we obey God, or shall we serve our own selfish propensities? If we want a coat, we can buy one. If our wife wants a new hat, we can get it. If we want tea, we can get it, and if we want tobacco, we can get it. If we take it into our heads that we want a great many things that are needless, we can get them. There is money enough when we want, but how is it when our neighbor wants?

O! my prayer is, that God may give us strength to examine ourselves, to see if we are in the faith. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; and he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." How are we to sow to the Spirit? Says the apostle, "Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." He does not say, let us not be weary in loud talking, or in loud praying, but, "in well doing." If we do not look well to ourselves, we shall be destroyed at last.

We may not be worth much money, that is not the point; money will never condemn a man, it is the love of money that will condemn us at last. Which do we love best, to lay up money for ourselves, or to do the commandments of God? In the judgment it will be said, I was hungry, and you fed me, I was ragged, and you clothed me, and they shall say, When, Lord? Inasmuch as you did it unto one of the greatest of these, you have done it unto me? No! but, inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these you have done it unto me.

For the Crisis.

How it Was Done.

One evening, as one of the Crisis patrons took his paper from the post office, a brother stepped up to him and asked,

"Have n't they stopped publishing those pieces on tobacco yet?"

"No," was the response; "and if they don't stop publishing them before I leave off using it, it will be a long while, I guess."

That expression kept running through his own mind afterwards, and he could not get rid of it. So, said he, "I won't use any tobacco to-day just for that." He went through with one day without using the weed. The next day he thought—"Well, there, I've kept from it one day, and why not two?" So he abstained from its use two days with no inconvenience, and neither did he hanker after it. Then, said he, "I won't use any more!"

One year has passed, and the weedy enemy has not found a place within his mouth, and he means to have it so forever. He lays the case with which he left off its use to the making up of his mind to that end. This is an example worthy of imitation. He made up his mind, and the thing was within one hundred and ninety-nine thousandths of its accomplishment. Who else is able to make up his mind, and have something to thank God for, viz., a clear mind and sound judgment? Tobacco stupefies and insensates; and for a christian to use it is the same as his saying, "God shall not have the benefit of my energies and talents—I will stupefy them with tobacco." Yes, and that is the way the devil trips him into the abuse.

Brother, you'd better "make up your mind." If you smoke tobacco, you say by so doing—"I will burn incense to Baal, and run the risk of being saved by the God of Heaven." Better not do it, brother. It won't pay in the end.

Rough intellects, which [illegible] gain attention, are pretty sure to be [illegible] and esteemed; but gentle [illegible]

For the Crisis.

The Crowning Truth in our Lord's great Prayer.—John 17: 20-24.

There is no portion of our blessed Savior's instruction more important or subduing than this, embraced in his most extended prayer. It comprehends the relations of redemption beyond all other portions; and yet it specifies these relations with a minuteness that is most wonderful. It opens with a reference to the revealed glory of God—embraces "all flesh," and by consequence all time, from creation to the "restitution"—Acts 3: 21; Rev. 21,—presents the power of his personal ministry, in the calling and keeping of his disciples from "the evil one"—specifies the Word as the truth of God, and the appointed means of their sanctification, and also the sole ground of faith to "all who shall believe through their word" throughout the gospel age—makes this class the subjects of his then special intercession; and thence till they are "made perfect into one," (ver. 23; Eph. 4: 13; 1 Thess. 4: 13–18; 1 Cor. 15: 50–55; Heb. 12: 23—the just made perfect by the resurrection,) and crowns the whole with God's gracious purpose; "that the WORLD may know" it!

Remarks. 1. Here is the whole gospel—the plan of salvation in its wonderful outline, from its first commencement on to its consummation.

2. This was "praying in the Holy Ghost."—Jude 20. It was praying according to the Spirit's fullest teaching.

3. This outpouring of the Spirit's mind in prayer agrees with the gospel preached before to "Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." Amen.

4. Thus the Holy Ghost spoke by "Paul in all his Epistles," saying, "There shall be a root of Jesse . . . to reign over the Gentiles. In Him shall the Gentiles (nations) trust."—Rom. 15: 12.

5. In vision, the last and most loving apostle saw how the prayer of Jesus will be fulfilled! Babylon (the present system) will fall, Satan be bound, the apostles and martyrs will be resurrected, when the living saints shall be transformed, and so "perfected into one body" politic. And so shall they "reign with Christ a thousand years!" "The nations" are THERE in Matt. 12: 17–21; Rev. 15: 4; 20: 3; and scores of other Scriptures. All these "words of the Holy Ghost" find their place in this prayer of Him who is the Great Example of the christian life. Amen.

6. Let us be consistent, and CUT OUT THE CROWNING TRUTH of our Lord's prayer; or else let it stand in other Scriptures in all its majestic pre-eminence! They must harmonize.

7. "THE KING of kings" can not, as such, either "reign," or even exist, only as there are subordinate and associated kings to reign with him in the kingdom. It is only then that the saints shall be "perfected into one." Short of this, they can not "receive the promise." Heb. 11: 13–39. And in their manifested regal "glory" alone will they share in the glory given to Jesus—"the glory of the kingdom."

8. Then (saith the Lord Jesus) shall the world "know that thou hast loved them as thou hast loved me!"

Conclusion. It is obvious that our Lord's prayer (and the general scope of "the Law, the Prophets and Psalms" harmonizing therewith) can not be ignored, explained away and so DENIED, save by "another Spirit." The good Lord deliver us from "every spirit" which would cut down or crowd back the prayer of the Son of God and the word of life to a dying world! Nay, let it be realized in all its fullness and all its blessedness; and may we as BELIEVERS in God's loving will, so revealed, be there when his saints shall "be made perfect into one!" "The world (the nations not deceived, Rev. 15: 4; 20: 3,) shall know" then the love of God to them as well as to Jesus. Amen and amen.

Selections.

The King in his Beauty.

BY H. L. H.

"We would see Jesus," said some in other days; and this favor was granted to many of that generation who afterwards could joyfully testify concerning that which they had seen with their eyes, which they had looked upon, and their hands handled, of the Word of Life. This was considered as such by one who said: "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear; for verily I say unto you, that many prophets and righteous men have desired to see these things which ye see, and have not seen them."

Highly were they favored who could say, "He dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory; as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

This desire to see Jesus, is beautifully illustrated in the case of Simeon. "He was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel; the Holy Ghost was upon him, and while he mused on the desolation of his people from whom the prophet and king alike had departed, and upon whose altars Ichabod seemed written, it wrought upon his inmost soul a deep and glowing impression, that, ere his eyes were dimmed by the shades of death, they should behold the Lord's Anointed. This seemed to have become the [illegible] the object of his life [illegible] and he exclaimed, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Though seeing Jesus was the especial, yet it was by no means the exclusive, privilege of the generation then living on the earth.

We may each one of us, if we walk uprightly and work righteously, receive the precious words of the prophet as a cheering and comforting assurance that we shall see him for ourselves.

Thine eyes, lone, sorrowing pilgrim—thine eyes, that, tired of earth, have long been uplifted to God—that have beheld affliction, misery and woe—that have gazed in sadness on this sin-smitten world—that have been turned away from beholding vanity, and that are now employed in looking unto Jesus—thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty!

The positiveness of this declaration gives us reason to rejoice while anticipating its fulfillment. Unlike the promises that are made by men, this is immutable—it is unfailing, and hence we have strong consolation.

You have longed to gaze upon the Lamb of God and behold his glorious countenance. You have exclaimed, "whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none that I desire on earth beside thee." But still you see him not. You turn away in sadness and wait upon the Lord that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and look for him. You weep for his comforting presence. "his absence hangs like a mountain of iron" on your "heavy heart."

But dry your tears! hush your plaintive moans—list to the declaration that comes from lips kindled with seraphic fire—"thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty." Here is no uncertainty—no mistake—the pure in heart "shall see God."

This king is not a mere spirit, an intangible, immaterial, invisible existence. He shall be seen. The vail, "that is his flesh," that hid Christ's glory from the gaze of men, and the clouds and darkness that are round about his throne, shall render him invisible no longer; but the throne and him that sitteth on it, shall be seen rising in peerless majesty, and shedding a glorious baptism of splendor on the paradise of God. Visible to all his people shall he be, and thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty.

Thine eyes shall see the king. Others have spoken of the things concerning him—have looked for him—have spoken of his "reign in righteousness"—of "his days when the righteous shall flourish,"—they have longed for his appearance, and with "all nations" have desired him: but thou shalt see him.

Others have seen his trial, thou shalt behold his reward. Others have seen his shame, thou shalt see his glory. Others have witnessed the sorrows that he endured, thou shalt behold "the joy that was set before him." Others have seen him a captive, thou shalt see him a conqueror. Others have seen his cross, thou shalt see his crown. Others have seen him dying and dead, thou shalt see him living to die no more!

Thou shalt see him! Not the bruised, thorn-crowned victim on Calvary's bloody brow! but the glory-crowned king on Zion's sacred summit! The king,—the king over all the earth, the righteous king, the king of glory, the blessed and only potentate, the king of kings, the king eternal, immortal, the only wise God. Thine eyes shall see him.

"In his beauty,"—his beauty. No borrowed charms surround this glorious king—no reflected radiance encircles his glorious throne. God needs no gilding,—perfect beauty needs no adornment. The regalia of earth's noble ones hung about him would be seen in all its tawdryness, like varnish on a diamond, or paint upon the rainbow.

But his visage was marred—there was no beauty in him and they desired him not; his eyes were dim with weeping; his brow was wrung with agony, his bosom heaved with sighs, his heart throbbed with anguish; his head was lacerated with a thorny diadem; his back was gored with scourges; his hands were torn with nails; his side was pierced; and now my weeping, guilty soul, would come beneath the shelter of the cross and wash from every stain in that outgushing, crimson stream!

But this shall not be so when the Son of man shall come in his glory and in his beauty. 'Mid the flaming myriads of holy ones—'mid the mighty shouts of his attending angels—'mid the glory that curtains the abode of the eternal, faith's eye beholds the coming King!—girt with rainbow splendors—flying on the wings of the wind—his brow adorned with many crowns—his countenance like the sun, shining in its strength—his voice like the sound of many waters—his feet like fine brass, burning in a furnace—his herald the thunder, and his guards the lightning!—his reward with him—his work before him.

"He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? He that formed the eye, shall he not see? He that hath robed the earth in verdure, and clad each flower with beauty.—He that hath hung the rainbow's splendor on the tempest's gloom—He that hath placed so much beauty in a world cursed of God and ruled by Satan—will he not appear in beauty when the earth shall be at rest—the usurper destroyed—the curse removed, and the blest day of his own coronation fully come?

Thine eyes shall see him, and if thy heart be pure, thou shalt be made like him then. Sweet hope,—hope of earth's holy men. We shall see him in his beauty, and we are not the first who have longed and looked for that event. Says the "perfect and upright man," while surrounded with grief and sorrow, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And . . . in my flesh shall I see God. Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold."

This was his earnest expectation and his desire, and fearless of disappointment, he desired that it might be graven in the imperishable rock, as the record of his faith and hope in God.

This prospect rose in enchanting loveliness before the mind of the sweet psalmist as his desire, for with this came all else that was desirable. "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." [illegible] shield; he will give grace and glory; no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

The pure in heart are blessed, for they shall see God; they shall behold his face and see his beauty. "How great is his goodness and how great is his beauty."

Lift up your heads, look up, ye mourning saints, your king is coming! A little while, and he will appear, and if faithful in his service you may share his kingdom; for "Behold a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." O that we may be among the holy ones who shall reign and dwell in that new kingdom, and shall with songs of thanksgiving "circle the eternal throne,"

"And the king in his beauty adore."

Our Rest.

"The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us."

My feet are worn and weary with the march
Over rough roads and up the steep hill-side;
Oh, city of our God, I fain would see
Thy pastures green, where peaceful waters glide.

My hands are weary, laboring, toiling on,
Day after day, for perishable meat;
Oh, city of our God, I fain would rest;
I sigh to gain thy glorious mercy-seat.

My garments, travel-worn and stained with dust,
Oft rent by briars and thorns that crowd my way,
Would fain be made, oh Lord, my righteousness,
Spotless and white in heaven's unclouded ray.

My eyes are weary looking at the sin,
Impiety and scorn upon the earth;
Oh, city of our God, within thy walls
All, all are clothed upon with the new birth.

My heart is weary of its own deep sin—
Sinning, repenting, sinning still alway;
When shall my soul thy glorious presence feel,
And find its guilt, dear Savior, washed away?

Patience, poor soul; the Savior's feet were worn;
The Savior's heart and hands were weary too;
His garments stained and travel-worn and old,
His sacred eyes blinded with tears for you.

Love thou the path of sorrow that he trod;
Toil on, and wait in patience for thy rest;
Oh, city of our God, we soon shall see
Thy glorious walls, home of the loved and blest.

Gems from Beecher.

CLEAR AND CLOUDY DAYS.

From my windows that overlook the bay, I notice a great difference in the atmosphere at different times. Often for a week together the air will be so hazy and murky that nothing can be distinctly seen, and if a stranger were asking me about the different localities, I should have to say, "That obscure point is the Battery, and yonder gray bank is Staten Island, and that faint line in the distance is the Jersey shore." But then, after storms, there comes a day when everything is bold and clear, and seems to advance to meet me. The harbor with all its ships, I can almost touch with my finger; Staten Island comes half way up the bay to say, "How do you do," and the Orange Mountains are just behind New York. So there are hours in the christian life, and they usually come after storms, when all the mists of doubt and care are blown away, and this life and the life beyond lift themselves clearly to our vision. Then is the time to gain knowledge and joy for cloudy days. When there is to be a remarkable planetary conjunction, men are sent from astronomical observatories to the Sandwich Islands or the Cape of Good Hope in order that they may take accurate observations. So we, in these rare hours, these altitudes of faith and hope, should make those observations which will reach on and become determining elements for the rest of life.

OVERCOMING DIFFICULTIES.

Many people are going to heaven as the fish go up the rivers to deposit their spawn. They get along easily in the estuary, and for some distance above it, but at length the reach a fall. Now the question is, Can the salmon leap it? If they can they will find smooth water for another twenty miles; if they cannot they must go back to the sea.

It makes no difference how far up the stream a christian may have gone, if when he comes to obstructions he must needs turn back to sea again. The power of his life is not shown by his swimming in calm water, but by what he can do in the whirls and rapids, and by what leaps he can surmount the obstructions that lie across the stream. There is no use in being strong any where else if he is not strong here.

SUBMISSION TO CHRIST.

God does not bring men to him as he brings flowers from the earth—with one sweep of sunlight. He works upon each heart in a different way. He beleaguers and bombards every man in his own citadel. When the young man who came running to Christ, saying, "Good master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" replied to Christ's direction that he had kept all the commandments from his youth up, an ordinary minister would have received him at once into the church; but Christ knew where he had intrenched himself, and fired shot and shell right into the fort when he said, "One thing thou lackest; go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, take up the cross, and follow me." At that, he hung his head and went away sorrowful. If Christ had given this command to the next man who applied to him, he would very likely have answered, "Yes, Lord, I have but little, and I will gladly give it up," but at the same time he might have kept back some ambition, or affection or revenge, with which he was not willing to part. In practical life it is oftentimes the case that some reserved and unwilling point is the gate of the whole mind. As a city needs not to have every particular house surrendered to the enemy or the conqueror, but is vanquished and taken when the magistrate throws open the gates and presents the keys, so a man gives up his whole soul, when he gives up those faculties which are the gates of the soul. [illegible]

Reading for Youth.

Manners.

Young folks should be mannerly. But how to be, is the question. Many a good boy and girl feel that they cannot behave themselves in the presence of company. They are awkward, clownish, rough; they feel timid, bashful, and self-distrustful the moment they are addressed by a stranger, or appear in company. There is but one way to get over this feeling, and acquire graceful and easy manners; that is to do the best they can all the time, at home as well as abroad. Good manners are not learned so much as acquired by habit. They grow upon us by use. We must be courteous, agreeable, civil, kind, gentlemanly and womanly at home, and then it will soon become a kind of second nature to be so everywhere. A coarse, rough manner at home, begets a roughness which we cannot lay off if we try, when we go among strangers. The most agreeable people we have ever known in company are those that are perfectly agreeable at home. Home is the school for the best things.

The Child King.

"Whose likeness is this?"

"It is the likeness of a little boy, who, while you are reading of him, is running about like a little squirrel, and talking like a chatterbox, and when he laughs he shows several beautiful teeth, as white as milk and sharp almost as needles.

And, oh, if you could see the crib in which he sleeps! It cost many thousands of dollars! And the house he lives in: it is one of the finest palaces in the world! Carpets richer than any you ever saw cover the floors. The walls are beautifully painted and hung with pictures; and, when those chandeliers are lighted, nothing can be more brilliant. And then the carriage in which he goes with his mother out for a drive, and those four horses: they make the windows rattle as they sweep along!"

"Well, who is he?"

"He is a baby-emperor. His father is called Louis Napoleon, and is Emperor of France. This little fellow is called the 'Prince Imperial.' The great Napoleon was his father's uncle. When this child is old enough, all the people are expected to come together and put a crown on his head, and splendid robes upon him, and to shout, 'God save the Emperor!' He will govern thirty-five millions of people. He will have whole chests of gold and silver, and more horses and chariots than you could count. Five hundred thousand soldiers, with flags flying, and bright plumes and muskets and cannon, will march at his command."

"Oh, I wish I was going to be an emperor!"

"Do you? Think a moment. There was a little boy, the son of a king, who lived in a palace; and yet he was hung in a tree and his body pierced through with many arrows. Do you know who that was? (2 Sam. 18: 14.) There was another little boy who became a king, and the people seized him and cut off his head. The father of the very boy, whose likeness you see above, has several times come very near losing his life.

"But, if you would really like to be a king, I know One who wants a little boy that he may make him a king. He will put a crown on his head, the 'best robe' on his body, and a 'ring on his hand,' and will make him a 'king and priest unto God.' He will give him a palace, in a city whose streets are paved with gold, with high walls of jasper, and doors made of pearl. (Rev. 21: 10–27.) Around it will be a magnificent park, full of trees loaded with every kind of fine fruit. (Rev. 22: 2.) You will never have to go to bed in that place; for 'there will be no night there.' And oh, what wonderful things you will there see! And there you will never be sick, and never die."

"Oh, I think I know now, whom you mean. You mean the Lord Jesus Christ."

"Yes. It was He, who said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.'"

"But how can a little child like me go to the Lord Jesus?"

"When your mother comes home after being long away, do you not run to her and love to look her in the face? and if she bids you do any thing, how willingly you run to obey! It is because you love your mother. You must feel and act in the same way towards the Savior."

My Father-Land.

[Adapted and Enlarged, by S. D. S.]

I.

There is a place where my hopes are stayed;
My deepest affection is there;
There verdure and blossoms never fade,
And fields are eternally fair.

Chorus.

That blissful place is my Father-land;
By faith its delights I explore;
Come, Savior, with thine angel-band,
And take me with thee to that shore.

II.

There in that place will my Savior dwell
In one eternal day;
The joys of that place no tongue can tell,
For praises and songs are for aye.
Chorus. That blissful place, etc.

III.

There in that place all the saints will roam
Forever throughout the domain,
And ever and ever in that home,
The king in his glory will reign.
Chorus. That blissful place, etc.

IV.

There in that place I mean to live,
Where trials forever are o'er,
For Jesus has promised that place to give
The saints, where they 'll sorrow no more.
Chorus. That blissful place, etc.

The Beast.

BY D. H. BERICK.

Much has been said and written concerning this power. And as there is a difference of opinion as to the government indicated by the symbol, and also as to the time when it is to act its part, we may regard the question as still open to discussion, and hence shall not be accused of innovation if we suggest a few thoughts for the candid seeker after truth.

This power is said to come out of the bottomless pit. Its ascent therefrom being an event to transpire in the end of the dispensation. That it existed in some form previously, is evident, for of it, it is said, it "was and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit." Its prior existence, however, being a matter well settled, it does not demand our particular attention at present. We shall concern ourselves principally with its history subsequent to the ascent from the abyss.

This beast is said to be one of the seven, that is, one of the original seven heads. By the phraseology, it is quite evident that John meant we should understand that this beast was one of the seven heads revived. The monster from the deep, or rather the seven heads, had received, successively, deadly wounds; but one of the seven revived, came to life again, hence, is called the eighth, that is, the eighth head or beast from the bottomless pit.

Again, it would seem that the head of chapter 13, previous to receiving the wound, was the same as the beast of chapter 17, concerning which the apostle says it "WAS;" and that the healing of that head synchronizes with, and is the same as, the ascent of the beast from the pit.

It is generally held that the beast of chap. 17, and the monster that ascends out of the pit, chap. 11 : 7, are the same. It was when the woman was drunken with the blood of saints, and her cup was FULL, that the apostle says, concerning the heads, five are fallen, one is and the other is not yet come; but when he cometh he is to continue a short space,—and to be succeeded by the beast from the pit, thus giving a clue to the time of his rise, viz., at or near the close of the wilderness state. So also in chap. 11, where the beast ascends out of the pit while the witnesses are finishing their testimony, which brings us near the close of the wilderness state and agrees with the description of chap. 17. Here then we have the beast-power brought to view in chapters 11, 13 and 17. [illegible]

But again. We only look still more closely at the chronology of this power [illegible] quent to which it does not take place, thus pointing out the circle in which his ascent is to transpire.

From chap. 11, we learn two important facts which bear directly upon this subject.

1. That the ascent of the beast from the pit takes place while the witnesses are finishing, or when they have finished, their testimony.

2. It is before the witnesses are put to death, for they are killed by the beast AFTER he comes out of the pit.

Now these facts lead us to inquire:

1. Who or what these witnesses are?
2. When did they prophesy in sackcloth?
3. When did they cease prophesying? and
4. When did the beast from the pit kill them?

These questions we believe must be answered before anything definite can be settled as to the government brought to view; and also the time when that particular government fills the place indicated by the symbol.

If we say the witnesses were the Waldenses—for many hold this view—and the slaying of them the killing of the Waldenses, we virtually say that the beast came out of the pit some two hundred years ago, for it is the "beast-power" that slays them. A similar difficulty arises if we say that the term "witnesses" refers to the martyrs in general. But it is far more easy to reconcile either of the above discrepancies, than to dispose of the many difficulties that necessarily grow out of the theory advanced by some, viz., that Napoleon III., is the beast from the bottomless pit. This theory involves the manifest inconsistency that the witnesses are not slain till, or subsequent to the accession of Napoleon in 1848. For if they are slain by the beast from the pit, and he does not come up until the reign of Louis Bonaparte, it is here we are to look for a fulfillment of the prophecy. I see no way to escape this conclusion.

It may, however, be suggested—but we think without any foundation—that the witnesses were put to death by the beast before he came out of the bottomless pit, or while in his pre-existent state; and that the apostle in noticing the fact means to say that it shall take place by a beast, the leading event in whose history shall be that he ascends out of the bottomless pit; thus distinguishing him as a particular beast, but having no reference to the time when the slaying of the witnesses took place.

In reply to the above we may remark:

1. The subject of this part of the prophecy, both in chap. 11, and also, chap. 17, is the beast from the pit.

2. This beast is interpreted to be not the seven heads but one of the seven.

3. This power, that is called one of the seven, (heads), is the eighth;—he was, is not, and yet is.

4. Admitting the witnesses were put to death by him before he came out of the pit, it must have been while he reigned as one of the seven.

5. If this beast or head refers to a dynasty, it must take place during the reign of that dynasty.

6. If the Napoleon dynasty is referred to, reference must have been had to the reign of Napoleon I., who was the first of that dynasty, family, or succession of kings.

But did any event like the slaying of the witnesses take place during the reign of Napoleon? Certainly not. The suppression of the Scriptures during the Reign of Terror,—though the circumstance might answer to the killing of the witnesses, yet the chronology of the event being at fault, spoils the application; for Napoleon did not commence his reign for some years after this. The Reign of Terror ended July 27, 1794. There is no event that looks like the reign of Napoleon till 1799, when he overthrew the directorial government; and this, indeed, could not be the point where the dynasty commenced its reign, for Bonaparte was not declared Emperor of the French till May 1804,—more than ten years after the Reign of Terror and the suppression of the Scriptures.

We see no event during the reign of the French Emperor that answers to the prophecy. However many objections there may be to other theories touching the beast from the bottomless pit, we must say, that the objections to the Bonaparte dynasty are far the most numerous and difficult. For if the former positions in relation to the "beast-power," as brought to view in chapters 11, 13 and 17, be correct, the theory that makes Napoleon III., the beast from the pit, shows the following manifest inconsistencies:—

1. That the witnesses are not yet slain unless it can be shown to have taken place since 1848. [illegible] they are still in their [illegible]

2. And if still clothed in sackcloth, the [illegible] prophecy have not ended. [illegible]

4. The ten horns, or kingdoms of Europe, or Italy, or of some other part or parts of the earth, by some means or other are to give their power to Napoleon III., an event, to say the least, that does not look very promising at present.

Thoughts on hearing the Tolling Bell.

Murmur! by the majestic river,
Whose dark waters hold thy treasure,
Dreamer, by the sad yew tree,
Let a sister come to thee,
Who, from out thy heart, would fain
Draw the sting, or share the pain.

By those cold waves thou did'st linger,
Where we saw thy darling enter,
Till thy heart almost grew chill
Gazing there so cold and still;
But, though filled with grief and pain,
Let us learn how death is gain.

Has thy loved one gone before thee,
Ope'd the crystal gates of glory?
Dost thou dream that, bright and free,
That pure spirit watcheth thee?
Would'st thou wish it again
To this world of toil and pain?

Would she not upbraid thy weeping?—
But she is n't there,—she 's sleeping—
Sweetly rests in Jesus' love,
Waiting message from above,
Then with thee she 'll joyful rise—
You 'll together take the prize.

Oft her heart grew sad and weary,
Sometimes earth looked dark and dreary—
Freed from every mortal pain—
Is not death a certain gain?
Sweetly sleeping in the Lord,
She but waits her GREAT REWARD.

When for that "Celestial Centre"
I the gates of glory enter,
O I would not go alone
To survey that great White Throne;
I would have the ransomed throng
From all ages swell the song.

There upon those hills of glory
Chant for aye that heavenly story,
Which o'er all the plain shall roll—
What a Sabbath to the soul!
Louder than the ocean's roar,
We will shout forevermore.

When our pilgrimage is over,
We 'll not go a lonely rover
To those fields of Eden bliss;
No, we wait a while for this,
Till a gathered host, we come,
Home at last! Oh, happy home!

Reasons for Believing the Advent Near.

BY ELD. A. ROSS.

No. I.

The first to which we would invite attention may be found in the second chapter of Daniel. Here, under the symbol of a great image composed of a golden head, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron, feet and toes part of iron and part of miry clay, are given the outlines of the history of this world from the Babylonian empire down to the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom, represented by the stone smiting the image upon the feet—grinding the whole to powder, and the wind carrying it away and no place being found for it, and the stone becoming a great mountain and filling the whole earth.

Our position in the stream of time may be defined by comparing the history of the past with the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, as given by the prophet Daniel. After the Chaldeans confessed their incapacity to tell the king his dream, with the interpretation, Daniel was brought in and thus addressed his majesty: "As for thee, oh king, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter: (i. e., the king thought perhaps that, as the kingdom of Babylon under his administration had arisen to universality, it would continue in that consolidated state, increasing in glory forever;) and he that revealeth secrets, maketh known to thee what shall come to pass." Which gave the future a very different complexion from what the kings vanity had led him to anticipate.

"Thou, oh king, sawest, and behold a great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, (margin, which was not in hands; i. e., he saw the stone suspended in the air without hands to support it,) which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king. Thou, oh king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, strength and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold.

"Says Bp. Newton upon this point;—"All the eastern, ancient histories are lost; but there are some fragments even of the heathen histories yet preserved which speak of this mighty conqueror and his extended empire." Berosus, in Josephus, saith that he held in subjection, Egypt, Syria, Phenicia, Arabia, and by his exploits surpassed all the Chaldeans and Babylonians who reigned before him. Josephus subjoins that in the archives of the Phenicians there are written things consonant to those which are given by Berosus, concerning the Babylonians, that he subdued Syria and Phenicia. With these agree Philostratus in his history, and Megasthenes in the fourth Book of his Indian history, throughout which he attempts to show that the before mentioned king of the Babylonians exceeds Hercules in fortitude and greatness of exploits, for he affirms that he subdued the greatest part of Lybia and Spain. Strabo, likewise, from the same Megasthenes, asserts that this king among the Chaldeans was more celebrated than Hercules, and that he proceeded as far as the Pillars of Hercules, and led his army out of Spain into Thrace and Pontus. But his empire, though of great extent, was yet of no longer duration; for it ended in his grandson, Belshazzar, not seventy years after the delivery of the prophecy, nor above twenty-three years after the death of Nebuchadnezzar; which may be the reason of Daniel's speaking of him as the only king.—"Thou art this head of gold."

The breast and arms of silver, which Daniel interpreted, "And after thee shall arise, another kingdom, inferior to thee"—symbolize the Medo Persian kingdom, which every student of history knows arose after the Babylonian, bearing universal sway. Says Josephus;—"The two hands and shoulders signify that the empire of the Babylonians should be dissolved by two kings." These two kings were the kings of Media and Persia, whose powers were united under Cyrus. This empire is said to be less or inferior to the former, because neither Cyrus nor his successors ever carried their arms into Africa or Spain so far as Nebuchadnezzar is reported to have done. See Newton's Dissertations. The inferiority of the Medo Persian to the Babylonian kingdom may be that of character. On this point Prideaux remarks that the kings of Persia were the worst race of men that ever governed an empire.

"His belly and his thighs of brass," Daniel interprets,—"And a third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth." It is well known that the subversion of the Persian empire was by Alexander the Great; upon the ruins of which was established the Grecian. Daniel's interpretation in Josephus is, that another, coming from the west, completely armed in brass, shall destroy the empire of the Medes and Persians. The Greeks were famous for their brazen armor, and were often designated brazen-coated Greeks. Hence a fitness of the symbol employed—"a third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth."

"His legs of iron; his feet part of iron, and part of miry clay;" is thus interpreted by Daniel:

"And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise. And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay; and as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay."

The fourth kingdom, symbolized by the iron, is Pagan Rome. This is the uniform opinion of commentators. The distinguishing feature of the fourth kingdom is, it shall be larger and stronger than any of the preceding. This was evidently true. It spread over a wider extent of territory, and in its military strength became invincible. The Romans did break in pieces and subdue all the former kingdoms. Rome continued in a consolidated state until the barbarian hords from the wilds of Germany came pouring in, like storms of hail and fire mingled with blood, which took place between A. D. 356 and A. D. 493; when that fair, political structure, the nursery of science and literature, was broken to pieces. From this time Rome gave rise to ten barbarian kingdoms, symbolized by the feet of iron and clay. These kingdoms retained much of the old Roman strength, and manifested it upon several occasions, so that the kingdom was partly strong and partly [illegible]. They have mingled themselves with the seed of men, by military alliances and intermarriages, yet every effort has failed to consolidate the fractions of the Roman power. For centuries it has been in the iron and clay state, and thus it is destined to continue, until the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom. For the final climax of these events is stated in these words: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," i. e., before all those ten divisions shall have passed away,—not in the days of the Babylonian, nor in the days of the Medes and Persians, nor in the days of the Macedonian empire, neither in the days of the Cæsars; but in the last stage of the fourth monarchy power, when all the policy of human legislation and the fear awakened by the armed legions of the nations of Europe shall fail to bind together those divisions of the Roman world,—shall the God of heaven set up his kingdom.

Thus we see the point at which we have arrived in the history of the world. Living as we are in the toes of the great image, we have come indeed to the end of the world. Sudden and important changes may be looked for daily. May our loins be girded and our lamps burning.

"The Union Movement."

A MEETING OF THE LAY-MEMBERS OF THE VARIOUS CHURCHES OF THE TOWN OF UNITY ON DEC. 3, 1858.

CHAPTER IV.

Present, a Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Lutheran, and Christian—all preachers. Prayer by brother M.

Presbyterian. I have been looking over the report of our last meeting in the "Christian Age," and I am disgusted with Mr. C.'s remarks just before we separated. I see that he is catering to the prejudices of the people, and drawing upon their feelings by his everlasting plea for union, as if the salvation of the world depended upon it.

Methodist. That is my mind well expressed. I see that Mr. C. is ready to take advantage of the sympathies of the people to defeat us; but he can not get round me in that way.

Christian. You admit then, gentlemen, that the prejudices of the people, their sympathies and feelings are in favor of union.

Presbyterian. Yes, sir, I admit it, and you know it, and now appeal to them to make head against us.

Christian. Then you can see that our churches have done right in making us responsible for division; for the people are opposed to it. If we were all of the same mind with our brethren, disunion would soon be at an end. But why complain of me for appealing to this popular feeling in favor of union among the members of our respective churches? Is not the feeling right? Is not the heart of that husband right in the sight of God, who feels an ardent desire to be united with his own wife? Is not the heart of that parent right, who desires to be united with his own children? Is not the heart of that child right who wishes to be united with its own father and mother? Are not the prejudices, feelings and sympathies of all the good everywhere right, who wish to be united in one body in accordance with the will of God? If they are not right, the prayer of Jesus, that they might be one, as he and his Father are one, is not right.

Presbyterian. Mr. C., I can not restrain my feelings, when I hear a man talk as if the salvation of the world depended upon Christian union.

Christian. Well, sir, restrain your feelings or not, Jesus prayed for the union of believers, "that the world might believe." Whether you think the salvation of the world depends upon union or not, the Lord saw, when he uttered this prayer, that the faith of the world, in some respects, depends upon the union of the followers of Christ. We may argue with infidels as we please, and send missionaries to the pagans, and they will never believe and never be converted, unless the professed followers of Chrsit unite.

Methodist. I see no use in everlastingly harping upon Christian union. It is not the Alpha nor the Omega of the religion of Christ. Beside, I know that I have enjoyed the love of God without all this ado about union, and God will bless us again.

Baptist. Brethren, I should like to look at this matter coolly. If it is true, as brother C. argues, that the conversion of the world depends upon the union of believers, the subject is a more serious one than I had thought it was. It appears much, as brother P. said, as if the salvation of the world depends upon union. One thing is becoming obvious, viz: that our support depends upon our union.

Presbyterian. Dr. Rice has shown, that we now have Christian union, and that the [illegible] is better than if we were all amalgamated in one church.

Lutheran. I read all that Dr. Rice said on that point, with the fond hope that he would make an apology for our present condition; but I felt more condemned at the close of my reading than at the commencement. I have never been able to twist my conscience so far as to think that when Paul exhorted the Corinthians to be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment, and that there be no divisions among them, he only intended such a state of things as we now have. And when he said, "There is one body," he meant that we now compose that one body.

Episcopalian. Brethren, I have spent much time in perusing ancient Church History, and I am free to admit that there was but one church, but one order, denomination or communion in the apostolic churches. The apostles all belonged to one church, and all the first Christians. No man the least acquainted with church history can deny this.

Baptist. Brethren, it has now been a little over two months since my brethren suspended my pastoral labors by withdrawing my support. I have had but little to do but read and meditate upon this subject; and I not only agree to the statement that there was but one church in the apostolic age, but they had but one faith. And, to be candid, ever since I have been a minister of the Gospel, when I was most engaged in the cause, and felt the deepest emotions of piety, I always prayed for the union of all the children of God.

Methodist. Brethren, I do not know what you all mean, in the strange turn things seem to be taking; but since you are expressing yourselves so freely, I will state candidly that when I got religion—yes, Mr. C. got religion—I must use that good old expression, though I know it grates upon your ear—I say, that when I got religion, I felt that I could take all the followers of Christ in my arms; I loved all the children of God. And, since reflecting, I can recollect that I have always prayed for the union of all the good, in times of revivals and when I felt more fully the power of religion. I must confess too, that I have always, in my secret prayers, most fervently prayed for the union of good people.

Christian. I have observed, brethren, in all the prayer-meetings I have attended, where the more spiritually minded are always to be found, that I rarely heard a prayer without a special petition for the union of all the God-fearing. It is the very spirit of piety that cries to heaven for the union of the Lord's people. The Lord prayed for it. The Holy Spirit, in his holy teachings through the apostles, commanded it. The holy martyrs of Jesus prayed for it. All holy men from the beginning of the reign of Christ to this day, in their most devotional, spiritual and solemn hours, have not only desired the union of the saints, but prayed for it. All the good are in favor of it. The Bible is in favor of it. The Holy Spirit requires it. Jesus prayed for it. Almighty God commands it. All the angels in heaven would unite in a shout of hallelujah to God and the Lamb, to see all the holy and pious on the earth unite.

Presbyterian. Gentlemen, I know not whether you are carried away with excitement, or driven by the loss of your salaries; but one thing is certain, at the rate you are going, you will all find yourselves caught in the "gull-trap" of Campbellism. I am not prepared to be carried away with such humbuggery.

Baptist. I would first remark to brother P., that I am an old man, and was in the ministry when he was born, and that rashness is a fault of young men. Ugly expressions, hard speeches and sarcasm may show an evil temper, but can never exhibit the spirit of Christ. I do not plead guiltless in keeping up these divisions. I can say this: I always desired to do right, but I find it is easy to produce an effect, different from what we desire. I can see now, that I preached many sermons calculated to keep up party feeling. But one thing I now see, and that is, that when I was successful in revivals, I was always on other themes—themes that inspired love among the people, and love in my own heart. You, my young brother, may indulge in hard names and party feelings, but will never save one soul, build up your church, or gain the approbation of Jesus in that way. We shall account to the Lord for our work. Our salary, that has been referred to, is a small matter. You see the [illegible] have been at in our town, in building [illegible], sustaining preachers, etc. [illegible] what we have done and what we are now doing. [illegible] during the past year, [illegible] a dozen persons. [illegible]

Presbyterian. There are [illegible] persons that have taken up [illegible]

Baptist. [illegible] their minds perplexed [illegible] we are the [illegible] care of them. [illegible] what can we do in [illegible] we can do but little, if [illegible] town, is now as manifest [illegible] can not stand before [illegible] and the pagan world, in [illegible] tion, is beyond dispute.

Lutheran. Brethren, it appears to me that the course you are taking [illegible] amount to the same as [illegible] that the resolution [illegible] members of our churches [illegible] lation. It is a bold [illegible] members of churches [illegible] in doctrine.

Episcopalian. I think as much. If [illegible] state of things is to be maintained, [illegible] lers will become the naked.

Presbyterian. I have been supplied [illegible] the evening, that you exhibit [illegible] you were going to. We will look well, [illegible] mitting to the private members of [illegible] churches to correct us in doctrine.

Christian. Brethren, I hope you will not let pride drive you from doing what you know to be your duty. Aquila and Priscilla, private members, taught the mighty and eloquent "Apollos the way of the Lord more perfectly." [illegible] humble as he.

For the Crisis.

The Golden Symbols.—A Discourse.

BY ELD. O. R. [illegible]

"This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zech. 4: 6.

The feebleness and impotency of man, or any human instrumentality to accomplish anything for God, without Divine aid, is here declared. To the inquiry, "Who is sufficient for these things?" may be given the reply, "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything," or do anything, "of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God."

Human intellect, however much enlightened,—human skill or wisdom, however wisely directed,—or human power and force, however great, can do nothing in the upbuilding of the spiritual temple, unaided by the Holy Spirit from on high. For all these are of value and may accomplish great things, when sanctified by the word of God and the Holy Spirit; and the vigor, and the more cultivated the powers of the human understanding, or the more practical their force, the greater will be the result of their application in the spiritual field of usefulness, if they be thus sanctified: as in the case of Moses, who "was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," and when called of God, became "mighty in words and deeds;" and Paul who was brought up in Jerusalem, "at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the most perfect manner of the law of the fathers." In fact, these cases of illustration, [illegible] of others, their cultivated [illegible] ciency would have forever [illegible] the accomplishment of any great and good, as the benefactors of their race, had not the Word or the Holy Ghost sanctified [illegible] them apart for God's work. [illegible] people are to study his word, [illegible] ceptible of the influences of his Spirit, [illegible] watch the events of his providence; and in proportion as they adjust themselves to his movements, [illegible] plans, and keep pace with his [illegible] they will move with the force of Omnipotence, simply by moving in a line, [illegible] harmony with his Spirit.

The Scripture is true in both the [illegible] and spiritual world: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." This house, for example, could not have gone up without God. What could man have done in its erection without Him? He created the materials of which the house is made;—the metals out of which the axes, hammers, saws, and tools [illegible] manufactured, used in its construction [illegible] He formed the men and gave them the wisdom, the genius, the strength [illegible] physical, to plan and execute [illegible] he gave the sunlight, and [illegible] ural laws in harmonious [illegible] placently upon the [illegible] and minds [illegible] working of God and [illegible] [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

My Father-Land.

[Altered and Stanzazed, by a. d. s.]

I.

There is a place where my hopes are stayed;
My deepest affection is there;
There verdure and blossoms never fade,
And fields are eternally fair.

CHORUS.

That blissful place is my Father-land:
By faith its delights I explore;
Come, Savior, with thine angel-band,
And take me with thee to that shore.

II.

There in that place will my Savior dwell
In one eternal day;
The joys of that place no tongue can tell,
For praises and songs are for aye.
CHORUS. That blissful place, etc.

III.

There in that place all the saints will roam
Forever throughout the domain,
And ever and ever in that home,
The king in his glory will reign
CHORUS. That blissful place, etc.

IV.

There is that place I mean to live,
Where trials forever are o'er,
For Jesus has promised that place to give
The saints, where they 'll sorrow no more.
CHORUS. That blissful place, etc.

The Beast.

BY F. H. BERICK.

Much has been said and written concerning this power. And as there is a difference of opinion as to the government indicated by the symbol, and also as to the time when it is to act its part, we may regard the question as still open to discussion, and hence shall not be accused of innovation if we suggest a few thoughts for the candid seeker after truth.

This power is said to come out of the bottomless pit. Its ascent therefrom being an event to transpire in the end of the dispensation. That it existed in some form previously, is evident, for of it, it is said, it "was and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit." Its prior existence, however, being a matter well settled, it does not demand our particular attention at present. We shall concern ourselves principally with its history subsequent to the ascent from the abyss.

This beast is said to be one of the seven, that is, one of the original seven heads. By the phraseology, it is quite evident that John meant we should understand that this beast was one of the seven heads revived. The monster from the deep, or rather the seven heads, had received, successively, deadly wounds; but one of the seven revived, came to life again. hence, is called the eighth, that is, the eighth head or beast from the bottomless pit.

Again, it would seem that the head of chapter 13, previous to receiving the wound, was the same as the beast of chapter 17, concerning which the apostle says it "WAS;" and that the healing of that head synchronises with, and is the same as, the ascent of the beast from the pit.

It is generally held that the beast of chap. 17, and the monster that ascends out of the pit, chap. 11: 7, are the same. It was when the woman was drunken with the blood of saints, and her cup was FULL, that the apostle says, concerning the heads, five are fallen, one is and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh he is to continue a short space,—and to be succeeded by the beast from the pit, thus giving a clue to the time of his rise, viz., at or near the close of the wilderness state. So also in chap. 11, where the beast ascends out of the pit while the witnesses are finishing their testimony, which brings us near the close of the wilderness state and agrees with the description of chap. 17. Here then we have the same power brought to view in chapters 11, 13 and 17. [illegible]

But again. We may look still more closely at the chronology of this power, [illegible] quent to which it does not take place, thus pointing out the circle in which his ascent is to transpire.

From chap. 11, we learn two important facts which bear directly upon this subject.

1. That the ascent of the beast from the pit takes place while the witnesses are finishing, or when they have finished, their testimony.

2. It is before the witnesses are put to death, for they are killed by the beast AFTER he comes out of the pit.

Now these facts lead us to inquire:

1. Who or what those witnesses are?
2. When did they prophesy in sackcloth?
3. When did they cease prophesying? and
4. When did the beast from the pit kill them?

These questions we believe must be answered before anything definite can be settled as to the government brought to view; and also the time when that particular government fills the place indicated by the symbol.

If we say the witnesses were the Waldenses—for many hold this view—and the slaying of them the killing of the Waldenses, we virtually say that the beast came out of the pit some two hundred years ago, for it is the "beast-power" that slays them. A similar difficulty arises if we say that the term "witnesses" refers to the martyrs in general. But it is far more easy to reconcile either of the above discrepancies, than to dispose of the many difficulties that necessarily grow out of the theory advanced by some, viz., that Napoleon III., is the beast from the bottomless pit. This theory involves the manifest inconsistency that the witnesses are not slain till, or subsequent to the accession of Napoleon in 1848. For if they are slain by the beast from the pit, and he does not come up until the reign of Louis Bonaparte, it is here we are to look for a fulfillment of the prophecy. I see no way to escape this conclusion.

It may, however, be suggested—but we think without any foundation—that the witnesses were put to death by the beast before he came out of the bottomless pit, or while in his pre-existent state; and that the apostle in noticing the fact means to say that it shall take place by a beast, the leading event in whose history shall be that he ascends out of the bottomless pit; thus distinguishing him as a particular beast, but having no reference to the time when the slaying of the witnesses took place.

In reply to the above we may remark:

1. The subject of this part of the prophecy, both in chap. 11, and also, chap. 17, is the beast from the pit.

2. This beast is interpreted to be not the seven heads but one of the seven.

3. This power, that is called one of the seven, (heads), is the eighth;—he was, is not, and yet is.

4. Admitting the witnesses were put to death by him before he came out of the pit, it must have been while he reigned as one of the seven.

5. If this beast or head refers to a dynasty, it must take place during the reign of that dynasty.

6. If the Napoleon dynasty is referred to, reference must have been had to the reign of Napoleon I., who was the first of that dynasty, family, or succession of kings.

But did any event like the slaying of the witnesses take place during the reign of Napoleon? Certainly not. The suppression of the Scriptures during the Reign of Terror,—though the circumstance might answer to the killing of the witnesses, yet the chronology of the event being at fault, spoils the application; for Napoleon did not commence his reign for some years after this. The Reign of Terror ended July 27, 1794. There is no event that looks like the reign of Napoleon till 1799, when he overthrew the directorial government; and this, indeed, could not be the point where the dynasty commenced its reign, for Bonaparte was not declared Emperor of the French till May 1804,—more than ten years after the Reign of Terror and the suppression of the Scriptures.

We see no event during the reign of the French Emperor that answers to the prophecy. However many objections there may be to other theories touching the beast from the bottomless pit, we must say, that the objections to the Bonaparte dynasty are far the most numerous and difficult. For if the former positions in relation to the "beast-power," as brought to view in chapters 11, 13 and 17, be correct, the theory that makes Napoleon III., the beast from the pit, shows the following manifest inconsistencies:—

1. That the witnesses are not yet slain unless it can be shown to have taken place since 1848. [illegible] they are still in their [illegible]

2. And if still clothed in sackcloth, the [illegible] prophecy have not [illegible]

4. The ten horns, or kingdoms of Europe, or Italy, or of some other part or parts of the earth, by some means or other are to give their power to Napoleon III., an event, to say the least, that does not look very promising at present.

Thoughts on hearing the Tolling Bell.

Mourner! by the majestic river,
Whose dark waters hold thy treasure,
Dreamer, by the sad yew tree,
Let a sister come to thee;
Who, from out thy heart, would fain
Draw the sting, or share the pain.

By those cold waves thou did'st linger,
Where we saw thy darling enter,
Till thy heart almost grew chill
Gazing there so faint and still;
But, though filled with grief and pain,
Let us learn how death is gain.

Has thy loved one gone before thee,
Ope'd the crystal gates of glory?
Dost thou dream that, bright and free,
That pure spirit watches thee?
Would'st thou wish it again
To this world of toil and pain?

Would she not upbraid thy weeping?—
But she is n't there,—she 's sleeping—
Sweetly rests in Jesus' love,
Waiting message from above,
Then with thee she 'll joyful rise—
You 'll together take the prize.

Oft her heart grew sad and weary,
Sometimes earth looked dark and dreary—
Freed from every mortal pain—
Is not death a certain gain?
Sweetly sleeping in the Lord,
She but waits her GREAT REWARD.

When for that "Celestial Centre"
The gates of glory enter,
O I would not go alone
To survey that great White Throne;
I would have the ransomed throng
From all ages swell the song.

There upon those hills of glory
Chant for aye that heavenly story,
Which o'er all the plain shall roll—
What a Sabbath to the soul!
Louder than the ocean's roar,
We will shout forevermore.

When our pilgrimage is over,
We 'll not go a lonely rover
To those fields of Eden bliss;
No, we wait a while for this,
Till a gathered host, we come,
Home at last! Oh, happy home!

Reasons for Believing the Advent Near.

BY ELD. A. ROSS.

No. I.

The first to which we would invite attention may be found in the second chapter of Daniel. Here, under the symbol of a great image composed of a golden head, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron, feet and toes part of iron and part of miry clay, are given the outlines of the history of this world from the Babylonian empire down to the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom, represented by the stone smiting the image upon the feet—grinding the whole to powder, and the wind carrying it away and no place being found for it, and the stone becoming a great mountain and filling the whole earth.

Our position in the stream of time may be defined by comparing the history of the past with the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, as given by the prophet Daniel. After the Chaldeans confessed their incapacity to tell the king his dream, with the interpretation, Daniel was brought in and thus addressed his majesty: "As for thee, oh king, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter: (i. e., the king thought perhaps that, as the kingdom of Babylon under his administration had arisen to universality, it would continue in that consolidated state, increasing in glory forever;) and he that revealeth secrets, maketh known to thee what shall come to pass." Which gave the future a very different complexion from what the kings vanity had led him to anticipate.

"Thou, oh king, sawest, and behold a great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, (margin, which was not in hands; i. e., he saw the stone suspended in the air without hands to support it,) which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king. Thou, oh king, art a king of kings, for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, strength and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. [illegible]

Says Bp. Newton upon this point:—"All the eastern, ancient histories are lost; but there are some fragments even of the heathen histories yet preserved which speak of this mighty conqueror and his extended empire." Berosus, in Josephus, saith that he held in subjection, Egypt, Syria, Phenicia, Arabia, and by his exploits surpassed all the Chaldeans and Babylonians who reigned before him. Josephus subjoins that in the archives of the Phenicians there are written things consonant to those which are given by Berosus, concerning the Babylonians, that he subdued Syria and Phenicia. With these agree Philostratus in his history, and Megasthenes in the fourth Book of his Indian history, throughout which he attempts to show that the before mentioned king of the Babylonians exceeds Hercules in fortitude and greatness of exploits, for he affirms that he subdued the greatest part of Lybia and Spain. Strabo, likewise, from the same Megasthenes, asserts that this king among the Chaldeans was more celebrated than Hercules, and that he proceeded as far as the Pillars of Hercules, and led his army out of Spain into Thrace and Pontus. But his empire, though of great extent, was yet of no longer duration; for it ended in his grandson, Belshazzar, not seventy years after the delivery of the prophecy, nor above twenty-three years after the death of Nebuchadnezzar; which may be the reason of Daniel's speaking of him as the only king,—"Thou art this head of gold."

The breast and arms of silver, which Daniel interpreted, "And after thee shall arise, another kingdom, inferior to thee"—symbolise the Medo Persian kingdom, which every student of history knows arose after the Babylonian, bearing universal sway. Says Josephus,—"The two hands and shoulders signify that the empire of the Babylonians should be dissolved by two kings." These two kings were the kings of Media and Persia, whose powers were united under Cyrus. This empire is said to be less or inferior to the former, because neither Cyrus nor his successors ever carried their arms into Africa or Spain so far as Nebuchadnezzar is reported to have done. See Newton's Dissertations. The inferiority of the Medo Persian to the Balylonian kingdom may be that of character. On this point Prideaux remarks that the kings of Persia were the worst race of men that ever governed an empire.

"His belly and his thighs of brass," Daniel interprets,—"And a third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth." It is well known that the subversion of the Persian empire was by Alexander the Great; upon the ruins of which was established the Grecian. Daniel's interpretation in Josephus is, that another, coming from the west, completely armed in brass, shall destroy the empire of the Medes and Persians. The Greeks were famous for their brazen armor, and were often designated brazen-coated Greeks. Hence a fitness of the symbol employed—"a third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth."

"His legs of iron: his feet part of iron, and part of miry clay;" is thus interpreted by Daniel:

"And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise. And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay, and as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men, but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay."

The fourth kingdom, symbolized by the iron, is Pagan Rome. This is the uniform opinion of commentators. The distinguishing feature of the fourth kingdom is, it shall be larger and stronger than any of the preceding. This was evidently true. It spread over a wider extent of territory, and in its military strength became invincible. The Romans did break in pieces and subdue all the former kingdoms. Rome continued in a consolidated state until the barbarian hords from the wilds of Germany came pouring in, like storms of hail and fire mingled with blood, which took place between A. D. 356 and A. D. 493; when that fair, political structure, the nursery of science and literature, was broken to pieces. From this time Rome gave rise to ten barbarian kingdoms, symbolized by the feet of iron and clay. These kingdoms retained much of the old Roman strength, and manifested it upon several occasions, so that the kingdom was partly strong and partly broken. [illegible] They have mingled themselves with the [illegible] by military alliances and in-termarriages, yet every effort has failed to consolidate the fractions of the Roman power. For centuries it has been in the iron and clay state, and thus it is destined to continue, until the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom. For the final climax of these events is stated in these words: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," i. e., before all those ten divisions shall have passed away,—not in the days of the Babylonian, nor in the days of the Medes and Persians, nor in the days of the Macedonian empire, neither in the days of the Cæsars; but in the last stage of the fourth monarchy power, when all the policy of human legislation and the fear awakened by the armed legions of the nations of Europe shall fail to bind together those divisions of the Roman world,—shall the God of heaven set up his kingdom.

Thus we see the point at which we have arrived in the history of the world. Living as we are in the toes of the great image, we have come indeed to the end of the world. Sudden and important changes may be looked for daily. May our loins be girded and our lamps burning.

"The Union Movement:"

A MEETING OF THE LAY-MEMBERS OF THE VARIOUS CHURCHES OF THE TOWN OF UNITY ON DEC. 3, 1858.

CHAPTER IV.

Present, a Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Lutheran, and Christian—all preachers. Prayer by brother M.

Presbyterian. I have been looking over the report of our last meeting in the "Christian Age," and I am disgusted with Mr. C.'s remarks just before we separated. I see that he is catering to the prejudices of the people, and drawing upon their feelings by his everlasting plea for union, as if the salvation of the world depended upon it.

Methodist. That is my mind well expressed. I see that Mr. C. is ready to take advantage of the sympathies of the people to defeat us; but he can not get round me in that way.

Christian. You admit then, gentlemen, that the prejudices of the people, their sympathies and feelings are in favor of union.

Presbyterian. Yes, sir, I admit it, and you know it, and now appeal to them to make head against us.

Christian. Then you can see that our churches have done right in making us responsible for division; for the people are opposed to it. If we were all of the same mind with our brethren, disunion would soon be at an end. But why complain of me for appealing to this popular feeling in favor of union among the members of our respective churches? Is not the feeling right? Is not the heart of that husband right in the sight of God, who feels an ardent desire to be united with his own wife? Is not the heart of that parent right, who desires to be united with his own children? Is not the heart of that child right who wishes to be united with its own father and mother? Are not the prejudices, feelings and sympathies of all the good everywhere right, who wish to be united in one body in accordance with the will of God? If they are not right, the prayer of Jesus, that they might be one, as he and his Father are one, is not right.

Presbyterian. Mr. C., I can not restrain my feelings, when I hear a man talk as if the salvation of the world depended upon Christian union.

Christian. Well, sir, restrain your feelings or not, Jesus prayed for the union of believers, "that the world might believe." Whether you think the salvation of the world depends upon union or not, the Lord saw, when he uttered this prayer, that the faith of the world, in some respects, depends upon the union of the followers of Christ. We may argue with infidels as we please, and send missionaries to the pagans, and they will never believe and never be converted, unless the professed followers of Christ unite.

Methodist. I see no use in everlastingly harping upon Christian union. It is not the Alpha nor the Omega of the religion of Christ. Beside, I know that I have enjoyed the love of God without all this ado about union, and God will bless us again.

Baptist. Brethren, I should like to look at this matter coolly. If it is true, as brother C. argues, that the conversion of the world depends upon the union of believers, the subject is a more serious one than I had thought it was. It appears much, as brother P. said, as if the salvation of the world depends upon union. One thing is becoming obvious, viz: that our support depends upon our union.

Presbyterian. Dr. Rice has shown, that we now have Christian union, and that the [illegible] we now have is better than if we were all amalgamated in one church.

Lutheran. I read all that Dr. Rice said on that point, with the fond hope that he would make an apology for our present condition; but I felt more condemned at the close of my reading than at the commencement. I have never been able to twist my conscience so far as to think that when Paul exhorted the Corinthians to be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment, and that there be no divisions among them, he only intended such a state of things as we now have. And when he said, "There is one body," he meant that we now compose that one body.

Episcopalian. Brethren, I have spent much time in perusing ancient Church History, and I am free to admit that there was but one church, but one order, denomination or communion in the apostolic churches. The apostles all belonged to one church, and all the first Christians. No man the least acquainted with church history can deny this.

Baptist. Brethren, it has now been a little over two months since my brethren suspended my pastoral labors by withdrawing my support. I have had but little to do but read and meditate upon this subject; and I not only agree to the statement that there was but one church in the apostolic age, but they had but one faith. And, to be candid, ever since I have been a minister of the Gospel, when I was most engaged in the cause, and felt the deepest emotions of piety, I always prayed for the union of all the children of God.

Methodist. Brethren, I do not know what you all mean, in the strange turn things seem to be taking; but since you are expressing yourselves so freely, I will state candidly that when I got religion—yes, Mr. C. got religion—I must use that good old expression, though I know it grates upon your ear—I say, that when I got religion, I felt that I could take all the followers of Christ in my arms, I loved all the children of God. And, since reflecting, I can recollect that I have always prayed for the union of all the good, in times of revivals and when I felt more fully the power of religion. I must confess too, that I have always, in my secret prayers, most fervently prayed for the union of good people.

Christian. I have observed, brethren, in all the prayer-meetings I have attended, where the more spiritually minded are always to be found, that I rarely heard a prayer without a special petition for the union of all the God-fearing. It is the very spirit of piety that cries to heaven for the union of the Lord's people. The Lord prayed for it. The Holy Spirit, in his holy teachings through the apostles, commanded it. The holy martyrs of Jesus prayed for it. All holy men from the beginning of the reign of Christ to this day, in their most devotional, spiritual and solemn hours, have not only desired the union of the saints, but prayed for it. All the good are in favor of it. The Bible is in favor of it. The Holy Spirit requires it. Jesus prayed for it. Almighty God commands it. All the angels in heaven would unite in a shout of hallelujah to God and the Lamb, to see all the holy and pious on the earth unite.

Presbyterian. Gentlemen, I know not whether you are carried away with excitement, or driven by the loss of your salaries, but one thing is certain, at the rate you are going, you will all find yourselves caught in the "gull-trap" of Campbellism. I am not prepared to be carried away with such humbuggery.

Baptist. I would first remark to brother P., that I am an old man, and was in the ministry when he was born, and that rashness is a fault of young men. Ugly expressions, hard speeches and sarcasm may show an evil temper, but can never exhibit the spirit of Christ. I do not plead guiltless in keeping up these divisions. I can say this: I always desired to do right, but I find it is easy to produce an effect, different from what we desire. I can see now, that I preached many sermons calculated to keep up party feeling. But one thing I now see, and that is, that when I was successful in revivals, I was always on other themes—themes that inspired love among the people, and love in my own heart. You, my young brother, may indulge in hard names and party feelings, but will never save one soul, build up your church, or gain the approbation of Jesus in that way. We shall account to the Lord for our work. Our salary, that has been referred to, is a small matter. You see the expense we have been at in our town, in building churches, sustaining preachers, etc. [illegible] what we have done and what we are doing. [illegible] ing the past year, [illegible] ed a dozen persons. [illegible]

Presbyterian. These are [illegible]

[illegible] persons that have taken up [illegible] crisis.

Baptist. I [illegible] their minds perplexed [illegible] we are the [illegible] care of them. [illegible] what can we do in [illegible] we can do but little, [illegible] town, is now as manifest [illegible] can not stand before [illegible] and the pagan world [illegible] tion, is beyond dispute.

Lutheran. Brethren, it appears [illegible] that the course you are [illegible] amount to the same [illegible] that the resolution passed [illegible] members of our churches [illegible] lution. It is a bold [illegible] members of churches [illegible] in doctrine.

Episcopalian. I think as much. [illegible] state of things is to be maintained [illegible] lers will become the ruled.

Presbyterian. I have been [illegible] the evening, that you [illegible] you were going to. We will [illegible] mitting to the private members [illegible] churches to correct us in doctrine!

Christian. Brethren, I hope you [illegible] not let pride drive you from doing [illegible] you know to be your duty. Aquila and Priscilla, private members, taught [illegible] mighty and eloquent "Apollos the [illegible] the Lord more perfectly." Let us [illegible] humble as he.

The Golden Symbols.—A Disc[illegible]

BY ELD. O. R. FASSETT.

"This is the word of the Lord unto Zer[illegible] saying, not by might, nor by power, [illegible] spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zech. 4: [illegible]

The feebleness and impotency of [illegible] any human instrumentality to acco[illegible] anything for God, without Divine [illegible] here declared. To the inquiry, "W[illegible] sufficient for these things?" may be [illegible] the reply, "Not that we are suffici[illegible] ourselves to think anything," or do [illegible] thing, "of ourselves; but our sufficie[illegible] of God."

Human intellect, however much ed[illegible] cated,—human skill or wisdom, h[illegible] wisely directed,—or human power and [illegible] however great, can do nothing in the [illegible] building of the spiritual temple, unaid[illegible] the Holy Spirit from on high. F[illegible] these are of value and may accom[illegible] great things, when sanctified by the w[illegible] God and the Holy Spirit; and the [illegible] and the more cultivated the powers [illegible] human understanding, or the more pra[illegible] their force, the greater will be the [illegible] their application in the spiritual [illegible] usefulness, if they be thus sanctifi[illegible] in the case of Moses, who "was learn[illegible] all the wisdom of the Egyptians," [illegible] called of God, became "mighty in [illegible] and deeds," and Paul who was brough[illegible] in Jerusalem, "at the feet of Gamali[illegible] taught according to the most perfect [illegible] ner of the law of the fathers." In [illegible] these cases of illustration, as in [illegible] of others, their cultivated powers and [illegible] ciency would have forever slumbered [illegible] the accomplishment of any great [illegible] as the benefactors of their race, had [illegible] Word or the Holy Ghost sanctified [illegible] them apart for God's work. The [illegible] people are to study his word, and [illegible] ceptible of the influence of his Spirit [illegible] watch the events of his providence [illegible] proportion as they adjust themselves [illegible] movements, "link themselves in [illegible] plans, and keep pace with his p[illegible] they will move with the force of [illegible] tence, simply by moving in a line [illegible] harmony with his Spirit. [illegible]

The Scripture is true in both the [illegible] and spiritual world [illegible] build the house, they labor in [illegible] build it." This house, for [illegible] not have gone up without God [illegible] could man have done in its erection [illegible] Him? He created the materials of [illegible] the house is made,—the metals out [illegible] the axes, hammers, saws, and tools [illegible] manufactured, and, in its construction [illegible] He formed the man and gave the [illegible] dom, the genius, the strength [illegible] physical, to plan and execute [illegible] he gave the sunlight [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] "Not by might, nor power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

It is my purpose to show,

I. The relation between God and his church in the upbuilding of the spiritual temple.

II. The means to be employed, or influence [illegible], by which she is to accomplish her work.

I. The relation between God and his church in the upbuilding of the spiritual temple, is symbolized in the most beautiful imagery, in the context, which I denominate the golden symbols:—for the imagery seen in the vision of the Prophet, was composed of this beautiful and valuable metal.

"And the angel that talked with me, came again, and waked me, as a man is wakened out of his sleep."—Ver. 1. A man suddenly waked out of his sleep, does not always see objects with perfect distinctness before his vision; nor does he, until his powers recover their full consciousness; then he recognizes and apprehends the things around him in their true forms, positions, and characters; so it was with the prophet thus waked; and therefore the repetition of his inquiries in respect to the vision first presented to his observation.—'And said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold, a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof: and two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof."

After the inquiry by the prophet, What these were? The angel informs him:—"This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Then he gives the result to be accomplished by the union symbolized by such mysterious imagery.—Vers. 7—10.

The prophet then inquires again, "What are these two olive trees upon the right side of the candlestick, and upon the left side thereof?" The angel does not answer the inquiry; for the prophet has not as yet been sufficiently careful in his inspection of the vision. So observing with more care, he asks more intelligibly: "What be these two olive branches, which through the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves"—or, as the marginal reading is more correct: "which empty out of themselves oil into the gold. i. e., golden pipes? The angel replies, "These are the two anointed ones, (sons of oil) that stand by the Lord of the whole earth."

Let us consider the vision:

1. There is a "golden bowl" seen above, and between the two olive trees, and in the midst of "the golden lamps."

2. There are "two olive trees," or "branches," or standards, one on the right side, and the other on the left of the golden bowl."

3. There are attached to these "trees," or "branches," or standards, "seven several golden pipes," communicating with seven golden lamps upon the top.

4. There is "golden oil," communicated from the "bowl," the source of supply, by hidden and mysterious conduits into "the olive trees," or "sons of oil," as reservoirs, which through the seven golden pipes supply the golden lamps.

Such is the vision of the prophet. We will consider its meaning.

1. The "golden bowl," above and between the "olive branches," and in the midst of the seven golden lamps, or candlesticks, symbolizes, "The Lord of the whole earth:" for of the olive trees, placed on either side of the "bowl" it is said: "These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." John saw a similar representation: "In the midst of the seven candlesticks, one like unto the Son of Man."—Rev. 1: 13. The symbol of the "golden bowl" is a beautiful and fit emblem representing the purity, and holiness of the Lord, and Him as the fountain of the Word and Spirit. Gold is the purest and most valuable of the metals, and hence its great use in the temple service: the altar and throne were of pure gold, etc., etc. Heathen idol-abominations have their images and gods of gold. Nebuchadnezzar made an image of gold and set it up in the plains of Dura. How much more should the symbol of the Lord of the whole earth be of gold. "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts!"

2. The two olive trees," "branches," or sons of oil, symbolize "the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth."—Ver. 14. As the prophet inquires respecting these particularly, saying, "What are these, my Lord?" He answers, "This is the Word of the Lord to Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."—Ver. 6. The word of the Lord, as embodied in the two Testaments, I conceive to be represented by this symbol. In Rev. 11: 3, 4, the olive trees and candlestick are included and represented [illegible] "Two witnesses:" the [illegible] the candlestick [illegible] the Old and New Testaments; therefore the answer, [illegible] These [illegible]

[illegible] the two olive trees [illegible] "[illegible] of themselves," [illegible] the divine and human intelligence conjoined; instruction from heaven and earth; yet all inspired, while there is much that is human: for "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;" and "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God." God has provided an unfailing source of strength for his people; their supply is not from a dead and stagnant reservoir of oil, but living "olive trees," that draw from two sources;—heaven and earth.

3. The "seven golden lamps," attached to the "two olive trees," by the seven golden conductors or pipes, symbolize "the seven churches." Seven representing a full or whole number, they symbolize all the churches throughout the world. "The seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches."—Rev. 1: 20. Though particularly symbolizing the seven churches of Asia there addressed, yet through them, the churches of all time are addressed. The image here employed is one of great beauty, showing that the churches of God are to be the light-bearers in our dark world. They were "all of gold," indicating purity, preciousness, and indestructibility. Observe, the "golden bowl" was between the "two olive trees," and in the midst of the golden candlesticks; i. e., the Lord of the whole earth is between the two Testaments, as he thus came in the days of his flesh; and in the midst of his churches in all time.

4. The "golden oil" in the "golden bowl" and in "the olive trees," as reservoirs, and emptied into "the seven golden pipes," to feed "the seven golden lamps on the top," symbolizes the Holy Spirit, in his quickening influence; enlightening the churches with a knowledge of the Lord, and the word of the Lord, from whence he proceeds; and making them the organs of light to the world, both of the knowledge of the Lord and of his divine word. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." "Ye are the light of the world," says the Savior. "If we say we have fellowship with Him," "and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth; but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

The following scriptures are made plain by this symbol: "The entrance of thy word giveth light." "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." The word of God is accompanied by the Holy Spirit to the churches. The word sanctifies the heart; and the Holy Spirit enlightens. Through the receiving and preaching of the word of the Lord, the churches are blest, and individuals are convicted, converted and saved. This symbol instructs us that the churches are the great medium of light and knowledge to the world; through them the world is to be illuminated with a knowledge of God and his word, through the agency of the Holy Spirit. And without the Holy Spirit and a knowledge of the word of God, the churches are but dark lanterns; giving no light in the midst of surrounding darkness.

We see also with this symbol before us, the propriety of our Lord's great command to his churches: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" and the promise is given, "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Wherever his people go preaching his word, the Holy Spirit is sure to follow, and "fall on all them that hear the word." Peter declared concerning the Gentiles, "And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning." But not until the word of God was preached among them, were they thus visited.

An Exposition.

In a late discourse by Henry W. Beecher, he gave utterance to the following, on the words, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork." "How our translation does mar and despoil the beauty of the following sentence. Our translation says: 'Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.' But the thought of the Hebrew is that the day standing like a sentinel upon the mountain top, when its watch is done and it comes to lay down its burden, looking over all that has been done through all its hours, declares it to the night that is coming on; and the night in its turn tells its story to the day, and so the white-plumed sentinel of the day, and the raven-plumed sentinel of the night are ever uttering unto each other the knowledge of what God has done on earth."

The Will of God.—Often think that the real value of what we do is proportioned to the conformity with which we do it to the will of God. If in merely eating and drinking I do it because it is the will of God that I should, I am doing what is more agreeable to him than if I were to do what should even cost me my life, without any divine intention. I would advise you often, during the day, to beseech God that he would inspire you with a real love of your vocation, and that you should say like St. Paul, when converted, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Wouldst thou that I should serve thee in the lowest office in thy house? I will reckon myself here, too, blessed. Provided I serve thee, I cannot in what capacity."

Hades.

"O death, where is thy sting? O (hades) grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. 15: 55.

Having carefully considered the meaning of sheol as used in the O. T., and found that it is never used to denote future punishment, but invariably "the state of the dead;" which is one where "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom;" we pass to notice the meaning and use of hades, the corresponding word in the New Testament. It occurs eleven times, and is rendered hell ten times, and grave once. When sheol in the Hebrew is translated into Greek, translators employ the word hades. Take an example.—"Thou wilt not leave my soul in (sheol) hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."—Ps. 16: 10. This passage is quoted by Peter in Acts 2: 27. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in (hades) hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."

As we have a Bible definition of sheol, we have at the same time one of hades, its correspondent. Then it follows, as there is no "knowledge" in sheol, there can be none in hades; as the wicked are "silent" in sheol, they must be also in hades; as sheol represents "the state of the dead" without regard to character, so does hades.

The passage from 1 Cor. 15: 55, at the head of this article, shows that the hades of the N. T. is a place from which some will come forth and sing,—"O (hades) grave, where is thy victory?" If this is "the final and eternal receptacle of all the ungodly," as some tell us, how can they come out and shout victory over its power? If one of those who are cast into "the final and eternal receptacle of all the ungodly," comes out with a song of triumph, why may not all? We leave the reader to harmonize such theological definitions of sheol or hades with the Bible, reason, or common sense.

Says Dr. Kitto, in his Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, "Hades means, literally, that which is in darkness." Hence Job, speaking of the state of people in death or sheol, says, they go to "a land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order and where the light is as darkness."—Job 10: 22. In the Greek Lexicon of Liddell and Scott, hades is defined to mean "the nether world, the grave, death." Dr. Kitto says:—"A careful examination . . will . . lead to the conclusion that . . no . . sanction . . to an 'intermediate state' is afforded by these passages where hades occurs, but that they 'denote the grave,' . . . both of the righteous and wicked."

Says Dr. Geo. Campbell, a Presbyterian Commentator of Scotland, "In my judgment, hades ought never in Scripture to be rendered hell." "Sheol signifies the state of the dead in general without regard to goodness."

Moses Stuart says:—"Hades means grave, sepulchre, depository of the dead." When we adopt the Bible definition, as well as the classical, all seems plain; and passages before obscure are robbed of their mystery. Take an example. When Christ was speaking of his church, he says:—"The gates of (hades) hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. 16: 18. In my earlier christian experience, the popular preaching led me to suppose, from this passage, that some how the wicked got out of hell and came around to hinder us from getting into heaven; but all became clear, when I learned the true meaning of hades. We learn the reason why "the gates of (hades) hell shall not prevail" against the church. Says the Savior to John, upon the isle of Patmos:—"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, amen; and have the keys of (hades) hell, and of death."—Rev. 1: 18. As he has the keys, he has the power to unlock hades and let the prisoners out; or in other words, he has become "the resurrection and the life," and will bring up his church from the grave, when she will sing, "O (hades) grave, where is thy victory?"

Mr. Whiston, in explaining hell, says:—"The comets are so many hells, appointed in their orbits alternately to carry the damned to the confines of the sun, there to be scorched by its violent heat; and then return with them beyond the orb of Saturn, there to starve them in those cold and dismal regions." Truly, men have turned from the truth to fables, and made void the word of God by their traditions. It seems as though [illegible] were not satisfied till they had invented [illegible] theory, [illegible] before, and unsustained by the Bible.

In Rev. 20: 13, we learn that all who are in hades are among the dead, and are to come forth and live, before they are judged or punished. "The sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and (hades) hell (margin, grave) delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works." We see from this passage that all in hades are dead; and as "the dead know not ANYTHING," the point comes out again that in hades or sheol "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom;" consequently, no suffering nor enjoyment. Hence, the popular idea that in sheol, or hades, men have a semi-reward or punishment, is only another fable, without any foundation in the Scripture. No one is put in hades for reward or punishment.

We can find only one passage in the whole Bible which seems to teach that men are alive between death and the resurrection; and that is in the account of the rich man and Lazarus. Consciousness can be made out in this case only by assuming that this parable is a historical account; and if such a position could be maintained, we should then have a plain contradiction in the Bible. We would ask, in all candor, is it right to change a parable into literal history to sustain a position that will overthrow the word of the Lord, when, if taken parabolically, it would be in harmony with all the Scriptures? We dare not take the responsibility of interpreting the Bible in such a manner.

We read in this parable, concerning the rich man,—"In (hades) hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 23. The rich man is represented as crying for help; but we learn that the wicked are to "be silent in (sheol—hades) the grave." Again it is expressly declared that those in hades are dead—that "the dead know not any thing"—that those in sheol or hades have no "device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom." We see that the Bible hell is entirely unlike the theological one. If this rich man was in the literal hades—hell—he could not devise a plan for helping some one else that was outside.

There can be no doubt but that the account of the "rich man and Lazarus" is a parable. A manuscript of the seventh century commences it as follows:—"And he spake also another parable." One of the tenth century reads—"The Lord spake this parable." As truly as this is a parable, and we think there is no room for a doubt, it follows that the rich man, death and hades, here mentioned, do not represent these things in a literal sense. The question arises, what does hades represent when used symbolically? and what is done to that which is buried in it? In this parable, we understand the rich man represents the Jews, Lazarus the Gentiles, and hades their political and moral degradation consequent upon rejecting Christ. Their torment in this state is graphically expressed in Deut. 28: 15–68. Please read. The Savior expresses the same solemn truth, when he says: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Lk. 21: 24. As the parable shows, the Jews were to be placed in a low, degraded, suffering condition; while the Gentiles were to be elevated and come into the Abrahamic covenant, by embracing Christ.

We would ask the reader if it is right to put a construction on hades, in this parable, that will be opposed to its use in all plain and literal passages? and at the same time contradict many other portions of the Bible which speak on the state of the dead; besides doing violence to reason, philosophy and common sense? Let those do it who are willing to bear the responsibility at the judgment.

As in the O. T. sheol is personified, so is hades in the New. Death is represented as a person taking the life of human beings, and hades as another one who lays them away for safe keeping till called for. When death has done its last work, hades will have no more to do. Death may be compared to the hangman, and hades to the sexton, who deposits the dead in the tomb. In Rev. 6: 8, we read: "And I looked, and behold a pale horse; and his name that sat on him was Death, and (hades) Hell followed with him." In this example Death is represented as a person killing people, while Hades follows after him to lay the dead away till the time of the resurrection. When the hangman has taken the life of the last criminal, and then dies himself, of course there are no more to be hung. We read in 1 Cor. 15: 26, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." In this passage death appears to be personified, and is to be destroyed after it has done its last work, which is to execute the wicked, when they die the "second death." This is like taking the life of the hangman after he has hung the last man. His life is taken because his work is finished; there are no more to be executed. Thus death is destroyed when it has executed all the wicked.

The following are all the passages where the word hades occurs: "And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell."—Matt. 11: 23. "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. 16: 18. "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell."—Luke 10: 15. "And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Luke 16: 23. "Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."—Acts 2: 27. "He, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption."—Acts 2: 31. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. 15: 55. "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for ever more, amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."—Rev. 1: 18. "And I looked, and behold a pale horse, and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him."—Rev. 6: 8. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it: and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."—Rev. 20: 13–14.

The State of Europe.

Says a London correspondent, Oct. 7th, when speaking of the state of Europe:—

"Whatever be the hopes and schemes of the members of the Peace Society, the opinion is gaining ground all over Europe that we are on the eve of a new war and of several revolutions."

This appears to be the opinion of all careful observers of the signs of the times. All things seem converging to an awful focus. A national subscription has been started in Italy for the purpose of procuring a million of muskets. The organization of military forces and Italian leagues is rapidly progressing, and preparations indicate that they are nearly ready for action. The government of Romagna has issued a decree forbidding the exportation of sulphur and saltpetre into the territory of the Pope. All the bishops have received orders to pray for the restoration of the Italian Dukes. Bonaparte still sustains the Pope by means of his troops at Rome, but talks of withdrawing them, and said in his late speech at Bordeaux,—"What will be the condition of Rome when I withdraw my troops?—anarchy and terror, or peace?" A catholic paper has a letter from Rome, which says—

"The spoliation of the Church has commenced in Romagna. A decree of the Revolutionary Government transfers the property from the hands of the legal administrators into the hands of a commission dependent on the Government."

The hatred of the harlot seems to be continually growing stronger and more active. A Florence correspondent of Oct. 7th says—

"To carry the army of Central Italy up to the number of 60,000 men. It would seem by the martial ardor and activity here displayed, as if preparations were really making for a fight. The signs every day more and more indicate that such an issue is approaching. The concentration of troops along the shore of the Adriatic, from Ferrara to Ancona, and on the borders of the Papal dominions—as the Revolution has divided them—leave no room to doubt that a collision is imminent."

Popular Theology.

The following extracts give some idea of the theology believed and taught at the present day, instead of the doctrine of the Bible. When we consider it candidly, and compare it with the Scriptures, we are astonished to see the wide departure from the word of truth which many have made. We now see why Paul was moved by the Holy Spirit to write, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned into fables." 2 Tim. 4: 3–4. In Dickenson's new Testament, this passage reads:—"The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but will accumulate teachers to themselves according to their own eager desire, having an insatiable curiosity, and they shall indeed withhold their attention from the truth and will be turned to fables."

Henry, in his commentary, says:—

"By the damnation of the wicked, the justice of God will be eternally satisfying but never satisfied."

Let the reader fully weigh the force of this passage, and then inquire if the wicked can ever be punish*ed* as the Bible declares? Paul says they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction." To be in harmony with Mr Henry, he should say, they shall be punish*ing* with everlasting destroy*ing*, but they will never be punish*ed*. And when he says, "The wages of sin is death," he should say, the wages of sin is dying; but if even this were true, they would finally die: because when one is dying, he is approaching a point, or state, where it will be truly said of him, he is dead.

Benson, when speaking of the damned, says:—

"They must be perpetually swelling their enormous sum of guilt, and still running deeper, immensely deeper, in debt to divine and infinite justice. Hence, after the longest imaginable period, they will be so far from having discharged their debt, that they [illegible] than when they first began to suffer. [illegible] Infinite [illegible] their guilt, [illegible] and confine them in the dark [illegible] all its [illegible] which, alas [illegible] for ever [illegible]."

Where [illegible] in putting [illegible] where they cannot help sinning, where their crimes will continually exceed their punishment,—and then punish them for doing what they can not avoid? We would thank the good Lord for showing us that such God-dishonoring doctrines have no foundation in his word.

Mr. Benson goes on to say:—

"God is present in hell, in his infinite justice and almighty wrath, as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture—the presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there manifest his love, so hell would be hell, if God did not there display his wrath. It is the presence and agency of God, which gives everything virtue and efficacy. . . . . God is therefore present in hell to see to the punishment of these rebels against his government, that it may be adequate to the infinity of their guilt; his fiery indignation kindles, and his increased fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their nature will admit."

In speaking of the duration of their torment he says:—

"Number the stars in the firmament, the drops of rain, sand on the sea shore; and when thou hast finished the calculation, sit down and number up the ages of woe. Let every star, every drop, every grain of sand, represent one million of tormenting ages; and know that as many more millions still remain behind, and yet as many more behind these, and so on without end."

We leave the reader to his own reflections.

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

Tract Fund for the West.

Oct. 5th. A letter from a good sister who says:—

"Enclosed I send $10 to you, which I wish you to use for the benefit of the cause. I desire to do the little I can to spread the gospel, to direct those who are lost in the wilderness of sin to the path of light which leads to paradise restored. I have felt, since I read in the Crisis your noble plan for circulating tracts, that I wanted to add my mite, which you now have, with my earnest prayers that the seed we thus sow may spring forth and bear fruit to the glory of God. I desire to have my work well done that I may inherit the kingdom prepared for those who are faithful to the trust committed to them. From your pilgrim sister, W."

Sister, if it please God, your $10 shall preach to hundreds of persons that you have never seen. May you meet some of them in glory, and rejoice together, is my prayer.

Little do we know the result of the casting of our bread on the water. A few months since I had the privilege of spending Lord's day in a neighborhood where I was entertained by a good brother, a member of a —— church, and preached once each in two of the village churches. Of course, I worked for nothing, but a friend in another place took two books next day and gave me $5, which squared that all up. While at the place I gave one minister some books and sold the brother where I stayed several more. I have never been there since, but a few weeks ago a letter came to hand from a person acquainted with this family who was just completing his preparation for the ministry in a N. Y. University. He had been converted previously, and turned his attention from law to gospel. He wrote as follows:—

"—— University, Aug 3d, '59.

Rev. H. L. Hastings—Dear Bro.,—I wish to obtain copies of several small books published under your supervision. I wish to get all of the following: Pauline Theology, Tracts on Immortality, Fables of Infidelity, Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, The Voice of the Church, etc. If you will please tell me where I may obtain them at the least expense, I will be obliged. I wish them as soon as possible, as I leave the university in two weeks more, and could not tell you where to direct to me after that; besides, wishing them for the perusal of a friend who is a firm believer in your views of destruction, I wish to take them with me upon a visit to him after graduating. I first saw your Tracts on Immortality at deacon ——s, in W——. (Where I left it.—H.) Was pleased myself and last vacation asked him to lend it to me, which he kindly did—carried it to this friend, no less than a Baptist deacon, and he was so taken that I promised to procure one of your Tracts on Immortality and let him have it. I have forgotten the terms, and as that is an item with students, please state. Should be happy to hear as soon as convenient. B."

I wrote him he could have any of my works with, or without, price; and since that I have through him received an order from another man who desired to read on the subject. So much for a few books left behind in that good family where I was privileged to speak of the grace and mercy of God.

10th. Returning from N. Y., I received a letter from Bro. G——, who says:—

"You will find enclosed $3, one of which a sister "L. S." sends. This is a small donation in comparison with the large ones which some have given; nevertheless it is given cheerfully. May the Lord bless you in your labors of love, and give you, as I feel confident he will, an ABUNDANT entrance into his everlasting kingdom. These are the feelings of my heart, and also of the sister who contributes."

Bro. G——, "God bless you" is excellent, always; but when it is backed up by such material aid as that, it will, I trust, be doubly effective.

An old colored woman in church was singing most vehemently, with closed eyes, at the missionary meeting,—

"Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel!"

when the collector nudged her with his plate, saying, "No use for you to sing 'Fly abroad thou mighty gospel,' widout you gib someting to make um fly!" A good many like to do all their missionary work in singing, and keep their eyes shut so close they cannot see the necessity for giving something to "make it fly." You believe in both singing and doing.

Here is a letter from "the regions beyond":—

"We are lonely, being deprived of preaching, yet not forsaken. Bro. S—— preaches in this vicinity occasionally. We went two weeks ago about sixteen miles to hear him preach, and saw him baptize five. Next Sunday he preaches at S——, at which time we shall know what is going to be done for the Tract cause. Bro. —— calculates to send $—— for the tracts, and $—— for his father; and I want to do something, but wait until I can; and I want it to come out of my own means, so if it be but a little it shall be some self denial. I have not forgotten what first awakened my [illegible] sense of duty, and led me to search into these things and behold what great things the Lord hath in store for those that love and obey him; and the reason why I have not done anything before, is, not because I was not willing to aid in spreading the truth, but because I had not the means, till I could turn something for money."

I have not forgotten, sister, what first awakened you to these things,—a little 12 page tract—the "Key of Truth," unlocked your Bibles, hearts, house, cellar, barn, pockets and all. Many are the poor souls groping in darkness just as you were, and yet while disgusted with the quarreling of sectarians, they are, like you, desiring to be Christians if they only knew the way. And these tracts we hope will reach others and so open their eyes, hearts, doors and pockets, to preach the gospel in the regions beyond them, and to sound out the word of the Lord. One such little tract, costing half a cent, or a cent, has frequently done more real service for God and man, than was apparent after the holding of some general meeting at a cost of perhaps $100 for preachers and their expenses, and twice as much for the trouble, loss of time, and travel of hearers. And yet some persons and preachers seem to be so strangely blind to their own interests, that they are afraid to stir up people to scatter tracts, for fear it will take a few cents that would otherwise go into the contribution box for them. Now it is true they are poor enough, but every man reached by a tract will help to push the car, and the more help the faster it goes. But, says one, "Support preachers." Yes, certainly, nevertheless hundreds of times an ill-timed sermon has done more hurt than good, and yet it cost as much to pay the man's fare on the cars to give him a chance to define his "position," deliver his "message," or to hammer "the churches," or to sow "tares," and errors among his brethren, as it would to have scattered from one hundred to five thousand tracts; which, if they had been good ones might have done some good,—could have done no harm,—would have gone where the preacher could not go,—preached when he had left, and it may be brought forth fruit after he and his "position" or "message" were dead, and buried, and forgotten. So much for that.

Here is another letter, Oct. 7, '59:—

"I enclose $1.10 for a Bible and some tracts. I would like to see explained in the Crisis, the meaning of the following passages: John 3: 13; Luke 16: 23, and 23: 42. I should like to have you or some of your preaching brethren come in this vicinity and hold meetings, as I think we need light. I sometimes feel as if I ought to speak, but being a sinner myself you know it would not answer. Remember me to God in your prayers, as I desire to find the way to Christ. I oft times feel that I would like to be baptized. I think that there might be a great deal of good done here if some one could only start it. Can you not do something for this place in the name of Christ? L."

Yes. I can do something. I will send you tracts to scatter. Then you talk with the folks about hearing some more on the same subject, and see if you can get a hall, a church, a school-house, or a kitchen, to preach in. Then send me word how to get to you from Providence or from New York, and then pray about it, and if I can feel it duty, and can get time, I will come, and if not, if I can find some one else who is willing to go and not scatter more tares than wheat, and who can preach for nothing and find himself, I will send him along forthwith. Now you go right to Jesus and tell him you want to serve him. Then you confess to the world that you mean to be on the Lord's side, and God will bless you. Then try to do all the good you can. May God guide you by his counsel.

I have not time to give a full exposition of your passages now. John 3: 13 illustrates the unbelief of man. As much as to say, "I have told you of earthly things, which all may and hundreds have witnessed and experienced; and if you do not believe these, how can you believe them if I tell you of heavenly things, which no one has seen but me? If you will not [illegible] about earthly things, when confirmed by men, [illegible] believe when I tell you heavenly things. [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. [illegible] WHOLE NO. 217.

[illegible] we are workers together [illegible] we labor, we are to [illegible] that it is "Not by might, nor power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

It is my purpose to show,

I. The relation between God and his church in the upbuilding of the spiritual temple.

II. The means to be employed, or influences [illegible], by which she is to accomplish her work.

I. The relation between God and his church in the upbuilding of the spiritual temple, is symbolized in the most beautiful imagery in the context, which I denominate the golden symbols:—for the imagery [illegible] the vision of the Prophet, was composed of this beautiful and valuable metal.

"And the angel that talked with me, came again, and waked me, as a man is wakened out of his sleep."—Ver. 1. A man suddenly waked out of his sleep, does not always see objects with perfect distinctness before his vision; nor does he, until his powers recover their full consciousness; then he recognizes and apprehends the things around him in their true forms, positions, and characters; so it was with the prophet then waked; and therefore the repetition of his inquiries in respect to the vision first presented to his observation.—'And said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold, a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof: and two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof."

After the inquiry by the prophet, What these were? The angel informs him:—"This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Then he gives the result to be accomplished by the union symbolised by such mysterious imagery.—Vers. 7—10.

The prophet then inquires again, "What are these two olive trees upon the right side of the candlestick, and upon the left side thereof?" The angel does not answer the inquiry; for the prophet has not as yet been sufficiently careful in his inspection of the vision. So observing with more care, he asks more intelligibly: "What be these two olive branches, which through the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves"—or, as the marginal reading is more correct: "which empty out of themselves oil into the gold. i. e., golden pipes? The angel replies, "These are the two anointed ones, (sons of oil) that stand by the Lord of the whole earth."

Let us consider the vision:

1. There is a "golden bowl" seen above, and between the two olive trees, and in the midst of "the golden lamps."

2. There are "two olive trees," or "branches," or standards, one on the right side, and the other on the left of the golden bowl."

3. There are attached to these "trees," or "branches," or standards, "seven several golden pipes," communicating with seven golden lamps upon the top.

4. There is "golden oil," communicated from the "bowl," the source of supply, by hidden and mysterious conduits into "the olive trees," or "sons of oil," as reservoirs, which through the seven golden pipes supply the golden lamps.

Such is the vision of the prophet. We will consider its meaning.

1. The "golden bowl," above and between the "olive branches," and in the midst of the seven golden lamps, or candlesticks, symbolizes, "The Lord of the whole earth:" for of the olive trees, placed on either side of the "bowl" it is said: "These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." John saw a similar representation: "In the midst of the seven candlesticks, one like unto the Son of Man." —Rev. 1: 13. The symbol of the "golden bowl" is a beautiful and fit emblem representing the purity, and holiness of the Lord, and Him as the fountain of the Word and Spirit. Gold is the purest and most valuable of the metals, and hence its great use in the temple service: the altar and throne were of pure gold, etc., etc. Heathen idolatrous nations have their images and gods of gold. Nebuchadnezzar made an image of gold and set it up in the plains of Dura. How much more should the symbol of the Lord of the whole earth be of gold. "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts!"

2. The "two olive trees," "branches," or sons of oil, symbolize "the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth."—Ver. 14. As the prophet inquires respecting them particularly, saying, "What are these, my Lord?" He answers, "This is the Word of the Lord to Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."—Ver. 6. The word of the Lord, as embodied in the two Testaments, I conceive to be represented by [illegible] Rev. 11: 3, 4, the olive trees and candlestick are included and represented [illegible] "Two witnesses;" the [illegible] the candlesticks [illegible] the Old and New Testaments; therefore the witness [illegible]

[illegible] the divine and human intelligence conjoined; instruction from heaven and earth; yet all inspired, while there is much that is human: for "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;" and "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God." God has provided an unfailing source of strength for his people; their supply is not from a dead and stagnant reservoir of oil, but living "olive trees," that draw from two sources;—heaven and earth.

3. The "seven golden lamps," attached to the "two olive trees," by the seven golden conductors or pipes, symbolize "the seven churches." Seven representing a full or whole number, they symbolize all the churches throughout the world. "The seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches."—Rev 1: 20. Though particularly symbolizing the seven churches of Asia there addressed, yet through them, the churches of all time are addressed. The image here employed is one of great beauty, showing that the churches of God are to be the light-bearers in our dark world. They were "all of gold," indicating purity, preciousness, and indestructibility. Observe, the "golden bowl" was between the "two olive trees," and in the midst of the golden candlesticks; i. e., the Lord of the whole earth is between the two Testaments, as he thus came in the days of his flesh; and in the midst of his churches in all time.

4. The "golden oil" in the "golden bowl" and in "the olive trees," as reservoirs, and emptied into "the seven golden pipes," to feed "the seven golden lamps on the top," symbolizes the Holy Spirit, in his quickening influence, enlightening the churches with a knowledge of the Lord, and the word of the Lord, from whence he proceeds, and making them the organs of light to the world, both of the knowledge of the Lord and of his divine word. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." "Ye are the light of the world," says the Savior. "If we say we have fellowship with Him," "and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth, but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

The following scriptures are made plain by this symbol: "The entrance of thy word giveth light." "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." The word of God is accompanied by the Holy Spirit to the churches. The word sanctifies the heart; and the Holy Spirit enlightens. Through the receiving and preaching of the word of the Lord, the churches are blest, and individuals are convicted, converted and saved. This symbol instructs us that the churches are the great medium of light and knowledge to the world, through them the world is to be illuminated with a knowledge of God and his word, through the agency of the Holy Spirit. And without the Holy Spirit and a knowledge of the word of God, the churches are but dark lanterns; giving no light in the midst of surrounding darkness.

We see also with this symbol before us, the propriety of our Lord's great command to his churches: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" and the promise is given, "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Wherever his people go preaching his word, the Holy Spirit is sure to follow, and "fall on all them that hear the word." Peter declared concerning the Gentiles, "And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning." But not until the word of God was preached among them, were they thus visited.

An Exposition.

In a late discourse by Henry W. Beecher, he gave utterance to the following, on the words, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork." "How our translation does mar and despoil the beauty of the following sentence. Our translation says: 'Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.' But the thought of the Hebrew is that the day standing like a sentinel upon the mountain top, when its watch is done and it comes to lay down its burden, looking over all that has been done through all its hours, declares it to the night that is coming on; and the night in its turn tells its story to the day, and so the white-plumed sentinel of the day, and the raven-plumed sentinel of the night are ever uttering unto each other the knowledge of what God has done on earth."

The Will of God.—Often think that the real value of what we do is proportioned to the conformity with which we do it to the will of God. If in merely eating and drinking I do it because it is the will of God that I should, I am doing what is more agreeable to him than if I were to do what should even cost me my life, without any divine intention. I would advise you often, during the day, to beseech God that he would inspire you with a real love of your vocation, and that you should say like St. Paul, when converted, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Wouldst thou that I should serve thee in the lowest office in thy house? I will reckon myself here, too, blessed. Provided I serve thee, I care not in what capacity."

Hades.

"O death, where is thy sting? O (hades) grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. 15: 55.

Having carefully considered the meaning of sheol as used in the O. T., and found that it is never used to denote future punishment, but invariably "the state of the dead;" which is one where "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom," we pass to notice the meaning and use of hades, the corresponding word in the New Testament. It occurs eleven times, and is rendered hell ten times, and grave once. When sheol in the Hebrew is translated into Greek, translators employ the word hades. Take an example.—"Thou wilt not leave my soul in (sheol) hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."—Ps. 16: 10. This passage is quoted by Peter in Acts 2: 27, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in (hades) hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."

As we have a Bible definition of sheol, we have at the same time one of hades, its correspondent. Then it follows, as there is no "knowledge" in sheol, there can be none in hades, as the wicked are "silent" in sheol, they must be also in hades, as sheol represents "the state of the dead" without regard to character, so does hades.

The passage from 1 Cor. 15: 55, at the head of this article shows that the hades of the N. T. is a place from which some will come forth and sing,—"O (hades) grave, where is thy victory?" If this is "the final and eternal receptacle of all the ungodly," as some tell us, how can they come out and shout victory over its power? If one of those who are cast into "the final and eternal receptacle of all the ungodly," comes out with a song of triumph, why may not all? We leave the reader to harmonize such theological definitions of sheol or hades with the Bible, reason, or common sense.

Says Dr. Kitto, in his Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, "Hades means, literally, that which is in darkness." Hence Job, speaking of the state of people in death or sheol, says, they go to "a land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order and where the light is as darkness."—Job 10: 22. In the Greek Lexicon of Liddell and Scott, hades is defined to mean "the nether world, the grave, death." Dr Kitto says:—"A careful examination ... will ... lead to the conclusion that ... no ... sanction ... to an 'intermediate state' is afforded by these passages where hades occurs, but that they 'denote the grave,' ... both of the righteous and wicked."

Says Dr. Geo. Campbell, a Presbyterian Commentator of Scotland, "In my judgment, hades ought never in Scripture to be rendered hell." "Sheol signifies the state of the dead in general without regard to goodness."

Moses Stuart says:—"Hades means grave, sepulchre, depository of the dead." When we adopt the Bible definition, as well as the classical, all seems plain; and passages before obscure are robbed of their mystery. Take an example. When Christ was speaking of his church, he says:—"The gates of (hades) hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. 16: 18. In my earlier christian experience, the popular preaching led me to suppose, from this passage, that some how the wicked got out of hell and came around to hinder us from getting into heaven, but all became clear, when I learned the true meaning of hades. We learn the reason why "the gates of (hades) hell shall not prevail" against the church. Says the Savior to John, upon the isle of Patmos:—"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, amen; and have the keys of (hades) hell, and of death."—Rev. 1: 18. As he has the keys, he has the power to unlock hades and let the prisoners out; or in other words, he has become "the resurrection and the life," and will bring up his church from the grave, when she will sing, "O (hades) grave, where is thy victory?"

Mr. Whiston, in explaining hell, says:—"The comets are so many hells, appointed in their orbits alternately to carry the damned to the confines of the sun, there to be scorched by its violent heat; and then return with them beyond the orb of Saturn, there to starve them in those cold and dismal regions." Truly, men have turned from the truth to fables, and made void the word of God by their traditions. It seems as though men were not satisfied till they had invented some new theory, unheard of before, and unsustained by the Bible.

In Rev. 20: 13, we learn that all who are in hades are among the dead, and are to come forth and live, before they are judged or punished. "The sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and (hades) hell (margin, grave) delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works." We see from this passage that all in hades are dead; and as "the dead know not ANYTHING," the point comes out again that in hades or sheol "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom;" consequently, no suffering nor enjoyment. Hence, the popular idea that in sheol, or hades, men have a semi-reward or punishment, is only another fable, without any foundation in the Scripture. No one is put in hades for reward or punishment.

We can find only one passage in the whole Bible which seems to teach that men are alive between death and the resurrection; and that is in the account of the rich man and Lazarus. Consciousness can be made out in this case only by assuming that this parable is a historical account; and if such a position could be maintained, we should then have a plain contradiction in the Bible. We would ask, in all candor, is it right to change a parable into literal history to sustain a position that will overthrow the word of the Lord, when, if taken parabolically, it would be in harmony with all the Scriptures? We dare not take the responsibility of interpreting the Bible in such a manner.

We read in this parable, concerning the rich man,—"In (hades) hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." —Lk 16: 23. The rich man is represented as crying for help; but we learn that the wicked are to "be silent in (sheol—hades) the grave." Again it is expressly declared that those in hades are dead—that "the dead know not any thing"—that those in sheol or hades have no "device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom." We see that the Bible hell is entirely unlike the theological one. If this rich man was in the literal hades—hell—he could not devise a plan for helping some one else that was outside.

There can be no doubt but that the account of the "rich man and Lazarus" is a parable. A manuscript of the seventh century commences it as follows:—"And he spake also another parable." One of the tenth century reads:—"The Lord spake this parable." As truly as this is a parable, and we think there is no room for a doubt, it follows that the rich man, death and hades, here mentioned, do not represent these things in a literal sense. The question arises, what does hades represent when used symbolically? and what is done to that which is buried in it? In this parable, we understand the rich man represents the Jews, Lazarus the Gentiles, and hades their political and moral degradation consequent upon rejecting Christ. Their torment in this state is graphically expressed in Deut. 28: 15–68. Please read. The Savior expresses the same solemn truth, when he says: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Lk. 21: 24. As the parable shows, the Jews were to be placed in a low, degraded, suffering condition, while the Gentiles were to be elevated and come into the Abrahamic covenant, by embracing Christ.

We would ask the reader if it is right to put a construction on hades, in this parable, that will be opposed to its use in all plain and literal passages? and at the same time contradict many other portions of the Bible which speak on the state of the dead, besides doing violence to reason, philosophy and common sense? Let those do it who are willing to bear the responsibility at the judgment.

As in the O. T. sheol is personified, so is hades in the New. Death is represented as a person taking the life of human beings, and hades as another one who lays them away for safe keeping till called for. When death has done its last work, hades will have no more to do. Death may be compared to the hangman, and hades to the sexton, who deposits the dead in the tomb. In Rev 6: 8, we read: "And I looked, and behold a pale horse, and his name that sat on him was Death, and (hades) Hell followed with him." In this example Death is represented as a person killing people, while Hades follows after him to lay the dead away till the time of the resurrection. When the hangman has taken the life of the last criminal, and then dies himself, of course there are no more to be hung. We read in 1 Cor. 15: 26, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." In this passage death appears to be personified, and is to be destroyed after it has done its last work, which is to execute the wicked, when they die the "second death." This is like taking the life of the hangman after he has hung the last man. His life is taken because his work is finished; there are no more to be executed. Thus death is destroyed when it has executed all the wicked.

The following are all the passages where the word hades occurs: "And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell."—Matt. 11: 23. "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. 16: 18. "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell."—Luke 10: 15. "And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Luke 16: 23. "Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."—Acts 2: 27. "He, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption." —Acts 2: 31. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. 15: 55. "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."—Rev. 1: 18. "And I looked, and behold a pale horse, and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him."—Rev. 6: 8. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it: and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."—Rev. 20: 13–14.

The State of Europe.

Says a London correspondent, Oct. 7th, when speaking of the state of Europe:—

"Whatever be the hopes and schemes of the members of the Peace Society, the opinion is gaining ground all over Europe that we are on the eve of a new war and of several revolutions."

This appears to be the opinion of all careful observers of the signs of the times. All things seem converging to an awful focus. A national subscription has been started in Italy for the purpose of procuring a million of muskets. The organization of military forces and Italian leagues is rapidly progressing, and preparations indicate that they are nearly ready for action. The government of Romagna has issued a decree forbidding the exportation of sulphur and saltpetre into the territory of the Pope. All the bishops have received orders to pray for the restoration of the Italian Dukes. Bonaparte still sustains the Pope by means of his troops at Rome, but talks of withdrawing them, and said in his late speech at Bordeaux,—"What will be the condition of Rome when I withdraw my troops?—anarchy and terror, or peace?" A catholic paper has a letter from Rome, which says:—

"The spoliation of the Church has commenced in Romagna. A decree of the Revolutionary Government transfers the property from the hands of the legal administrators into the hands of a commission dependent on the Government."

The hatred of the harlot seems to be continually growing stronger and more active. A Florence correspondent of Oct. 7th says:—

"To carry the army of Central Italy up to the number of 60,000 men. It would seem by the martial ardor and activity here displayed, as if preparations were really making for a fight. The signs every day more and more indicate that such an issue is approaching. The concentration of troops along the shore of the Adriatic, from Ferrara to Ancona, and on the borders of the Papal dominions—as the Revolution has divided them—leave no room to doubt that a collision is imminent."

Popular Theology.

The following extracts give some idea of the theology believed and taught at the present day, instead of the doctrine of the Bible. When we consider it candidly, and compare it with the Scriptures, we are astonished to see the wide departure from the word of truth which many have made. We now see why Paul was moved by the Holy Spirit to write, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned into fables." 2 Tim. 4: 3–4. In Dickenson's new Testament, this passage reads:—"The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but will accumulate teachers to themselves according to their own eager desire, having an insatiable curiosity, and they shall indeed withhold their attention from the truth and will be turned to fables."

Henry, in his commentary, says:—

"By the damnation of the wicked, the justice of God will be eternally satisfying but never satisfied."

Let the reader fully weigh the force of this passage, and then inquire if the wicked can ever be punish*ed* as the Bible declares? Paul says they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction." To be in harmony with Mr Henry, he should say, they shall be punish*ing* with everlasting destroy*ing*, but they will never be punish*ed*. And when he says, "The wages of sin is death," he should say, the wages of sin is dying; but if even this were true, they would finally die; because when one is dying, he is approaching a point, or state, where it will be truly said of him, he is dead.

Benson, when speaking of the damned, says:—

"They must be perpetually swelling their enormous sum of guilt, and still running deeper, immensely deeper, in debt to divine and infinite justice. Hence, after the longest imaginable period, they will be so far from having discharged their debt, that they find more due than when they first began to suffer. ... Infinite justice [illegible] their guilt, [illegible] and confines them in the dark [illegible] all its [illegible] which, [illegible]

Wh[illegible] in putting [illegible] where they cannot help sinning, where their crimes will continually exceed their punishment,—and then punish them for doing what they cannot avoid? We would thank the good Lord for showing us that such God-dishonoring doctrines have no foundation in his word.

Mr. Benson goes on to say:—

"God is present in hell, in his infinite justice and almighty wrath, as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture—the presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there manifest his love, so hell would be hell, if God did not there display his wrath. It is the presence and agency of God, which gives everything virtue and efficacy. . . . . God is therefore present in hell to see to the punishment of these rebels against his government, that it may be adequate to the infinity of their guilt; his fiery indignation kindles, and his increased fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their nature will admit."

In speaking of the duration of their torment he says:—

"Number the stars in the firmament, the drops of rain, sand on the sea shore; and when thou hast finished the calculation, sit down and number up the ages of woe. Let every star, every drop, every grain of sand, represent one million of tormenting ages; and know that as many more millions still remain behind, and yet as many more behind these, and so on without end."

We leave the reader to his own reflections.

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

Tract Fund for the West.

Oct. 5th. A letter from a good sister who says:—

"Enclosed I send $10 to you, which I wish you to use for the benefit of the cause. I desire to do the little I can to spread the gospel, to direct those who are lost in the wilderness of sin to the path of light which leads to paradise restored. I have felt, since I read in the Crisis your noble plan for circulating tracts, that I wanted to add my mite, which you now have, with my earnest prayers that the seed we thus sow may spring forth and bear fruit to the glory of God. I desire to have my work well done that I may inherit the kingdom prepared for those who are faithful to the trust committed to them. From your pilgrim sister, W."

Sister, if it please God, your $10 shall preach to hundreds of persons that you have never seen. May you meet some of them in glory, and rejoice together, is my prayer.

Little do we know the result of the casting of our bread on the water. A few months since I had the privilege of spending Lord's day in a neighborhood where I was entertained by a good brother, a member of a —— church, and preached once each in two of the village churches. Of course, I worked for nothing, but a friend in another place took two books next day and gave me $5, which squared that all up. While at the place I gave one minister some books and sold the brother where I stayed several more. I have never been there since, but a few weeks ago a letter came to hand from a person acquainted with this family who was just completing his preparation for the ministry in a N. Y. University. He had been converted previously, and turned his attention from law to gospel. He wrote as follows:—

"—— University, Aug 3d, '59.

Rev. H. L. Hastings — Dear Bro.,—I wish to obtain copies of several small books published under your supervision. I wish to get all of the following: Pauline Theology, Tracts on Immortality, Fables of Infidelity, Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, The Voice of the Church, etc. If you will please tell me where I may obtain them at the least expense, I will be obliged. I wish them as soon as possible as I leave the university in two weeks more, and could not tell you where to direct to me after that; besides, wishing them for the perusal of a friend who is a firm believer in your views of destruction, I wish to take them with me upon a visit to him after graduating. I first saw your Tracts on Immortality at deacon ——s, in W——. (Where I left it.—H.) Was pleased myself and last vacation asked him to lend it to, me, which he kindly did—carried it to this friend, no less than a Baptist deacon, and he was so taken that I promised to procure one of your Tracts on Immortality and let him have it. I have forgotten the terms, and as that is an item with students, please state. Should be happy to hear as soon as convenient. B."

I wrote him he could have any of my works with, or without, price; and since that I have through him received an order from another man who desired to read on the subject. So much for a few books left behind in that good family where I was privileged to speak of the grace and mercy of God.

10th. Returning from N. Y., I received a letter from Bro. G——, who says:—

"You will find enclosed $3, one of which a sister "L. S." sends. This is a small donation in comparison with the large ones which some have given; nevertheless it is given cheerfully. May the Lord bless you in your labors of love, and give you, as I feel confident he will, an ABUNDANT entrance into his everlasting kingdom. These are the feelings of my heart, and also of the sister who contributes."

Bro. G——, "God bless you" is excellent, always; but when it is backed up by such material aid as that, it will, I trust, be doubly effective.

An old colored woman in church was singing most vehemently, with closed eyes, at the missionary meeting,—

"Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel!"

when the collector nudged her with his plate, saying, "No use for you to sing 'Fly abroad dou mity gospel,' widout you gib someting to make um fly!" A good many like to do all their missionary work in singing, and keep their eyes shut so close they cannot see the necessity for giving something to "make dat fly." You believe in both singing and doing.

Here is a letter from "the regions beyond":—

"We are lonely, being deprived of preaching, yet not forsaken. Bro. S—— preaches in this vicinity occasionally. We went two weeks ago about sixteen miles to hear him preach, and saw him baptize five. Next Sunday he preaches at S——, at which time we shall know what is going to be done for the Tract cause. Bro. —— calculates to send $— for the tracts, and $— for his father; and I want to do something, but wait until I can; and I want it to come out of my own means, so if it be but a little it shall be some self denial. I have not forgotten what first awakened me to a sense of duty, and led me to search into these things and behold what great things the Lord hath in store for those that love and obey him; and the reason why I have not done anything before, is, not because I was not willing to aid in spreading the truth, but because I had not the means, till I could turn something for money."

I have not forgotten, sister, what first awakened you to these things,—a little 12 page tract—the "Key of Truth," unlocked your Bibles, hearts, house, cellar, barn, pockets and all. Many are the poor souls groping in darkness just as you were, and yet while disgusted with the quarreling of sectarians, they are, like you, desiring to be Christians if they only knew the way. And these tracts we hope will reach others and so open their eyes, hearts, doors and pockets, to preach the gospel in the regions beyond them, and to sound out the word of the Lord. One such little tract, costing half a cent, or a cent, has frequently done more real service for God and man, than was apparent after the holding of some general meeting at a cost of perhaps $100 for preachers and their expenses, and twice as much for the trouble, loss of time, and travel of hearers. And yet some persons and preachers seem to be so strangely blind to their own interests, that they are afraid to stir up people to scatter tracts, for fear it will take a few cents that would otherwise go into the contribution box for them. Now it is true they are poor enough, but every man reached by a tract will help to push the car, and the more help the faster it goes. But, says one, "Support preachers." Yes, certainly, nevertheless hundreds of times an ill-timed sermon has done more hurt than good, and yet it cost as much to pay the man's fare on the cars to give him a chance to define his "position," deliver his "message," or to hammer "the churches," or to sow "tares," and errors among his brethren, as it would to have scattered from one hundred to five thousand tracts; which, if they had been good ones might have done some good,—could have done no harm,—would have gone where the preacher could not go,—preached when he had left, and it may be brought forth fruit after he and his "position" or "message" were dead, and buried, and forgotten. So much for that.

Here is another letter, Oct. 7, '59:—

"I enclose $1.10 for a Bible and some tracts. I would like to see explained in the Crisis, the meaning of the following passages: John 3: 13; Luke 16: 23, and 23: 42. I should like to have you or some of your preaching brethren come in this vicinity and hold meetings, as I think we need light. I sometimes feel as if I ought to speak, but being a sinner myself you know it would not answer. Remember me to God in your prayers, as I desire to find the way to Christ. I oft times feel that I would like to be baptized. I think that there might be a great deal of good done here if some one could only start it. Can you not do something for this place in the name of Christ? L."

Yes. I can do something. I will send you tracts to scatter. Then you talk with the folks about hearing some more on the same subject, and see if you can get a hall, a church, a school-house, or a kitchen, to preach in. Then send me word how to get to you from Providence or from New York, and then pray about it, and if I can feel it duty, and can get time, I will come, and if not, if I can find some one else who is willing to go and not scatter more tares than wheat, and who can preach for nothing and find himself, I will send him along forthwith. Now you go right to Jesus and tell him you want to serve him. Then you confess to the world that you mean to be on the Lord's side, and God will bless you. Then try to do all the good you can. May God guide you by his counsel.

I have not time to give a full exposition of your passages now. John 3: 13 illustrates the unbelief of men. As much as to say, "I have told you of earthly things, which all may and hundreds have witnessed and experienced; and if you do not believe these, how can you believe, when I tell you of heavenly things, which no one has seen but me? If you cannot [illegible] about earthly things, [illegible] confirmed by men, [illegible] you will not believe when I tell you heavenly things. [illegible] ed into heaven and seen them, and consequently no man could confirm my statements with his testimony.

Luke 16: 23 is usually admitted to be a parable. I am free to confess I do not know what all of it means. There are several expositions of it. One is that of those who believe it a literal fact, but who believe that spirits of wicked dead men are rapping spirits. How the rich man should be kept and tormented when he might have been out turning over tables and chairs, I have not seen explained. I think as a parable it teaches something different from what lies on the face of it; as the parable of the sower teaches something besides sowing; and that of the lost sheep teaches something besides sheep-keeping. Neander, the great German scholar, says the point or moral of the parable is, "The invincible unbelief of the Jews." "If they believe not Moses and the prophets neither will they believe though one rose from the dead." Hence in the parable their father Abraham is represented as reproving them. Several persons perhaps think themselves fully competent to explain the passage. Prof. Hudson's tract on it is very valuable. But I am not able to comprehend the whole of Jesus' teachings. Christ is wiser than I.

As to Luke 23: 43, some of the Greek manuscripts put the comma after the expression to-day, instead of after thee; thus connecting the time with the making of the promise, rather than the fulfillment of it. There are several strong reasons why this appears to be correct, which I have not now time to state. Study your Bible. Learn all you can, and may God bless you.

Bro. O. R. L. Crosier writes from Michigan:—

Bro. Grant or Hastings:—Would it meet the minds of the friends furnishing 'Tracts for the West' to send us some? Probably more good could be done at and about Grand Rapids than in any other one place in Michigan. There are several preachers of us, all wide awake,—others rather dozy, and a large number of first rate brethren scattered about. Almost any quantity of good tracts could be used judiciously, and doubtless would do much good. I wish brethren East who have means to spare could see what we see every week. If they have sympathy with Christ, they would do something to give those hungry souls the bread of life."

You shall be remembered in the distribution, Bro. Crozier, if the Lord will. I could not get the tracts ready in season for the Conference. The Eastern brethren will some of them do all they can. They are not rich, and they have not the great prairies of the West to dig bread from. Their living is much more expensive than it would be there. Many of them do not own a foot of land, and some of those that do are not much better off; but they will help. And then there are some others that have no bigger hearts, but rather larger purses,—they will help too. Only let the preachers at the West "stand up for Jesus," and not, like some, deny the Lord that bought them; let them preach a practical and vital christianity, and we at the East will stand by them till we split the last biscuit, and given them the biggest half. God bless you, Bro. C. Remember "auld lang syne." May God's work spread grandly and rapidly about Grand Rapids.

Oct. 12th. Bro. D. writes:—

"I had the loan of the Crisis on the 8th of this month. It is dated Sept. 21st. I saw by that that you are trying to raise $1000 to send tracts to the West. I send you $5 towards it. . . I do hope you will meet with good success in your undertaking. Your well-wishing brother, D."

So much for lending one copy of the Crisis. It will do to lend another, I think. Brethren, that "Crisis" might do more good if it had a few thousand more subscribers. Who will get them? We want that as a regular medium of communication, while the little tracts go digging like sappers and miners away under the strong fortifications of error and sin. "God speed the right!"

A sister, who has lived at the West, writes:—

"Oct. 11th. My heart has thrilled with joy at the success the Western cry of 'Come over, or send us help,' has met with, and yet there is room for others to contribute, if it be but little,—that little may do a great amount of good. My heart is in the work, if nothing else; yes, I have long considered it a greater cross not to work for my Master than it used to be to work, when I had naught to hinder but my proud heart, and my excuse was I had but one talent. And oh, how wicked! that I should virtually say my Father was an hard Master, requiring more of me than he had bestowed upon me."

Sister, if there first be a willing mind, it is accepted according to that you have. Thanks be to God, that through the dark and thorny path Israel's Shepherd has at last learned you to hear his voice and follow him.

"O to be brought to Jesus' feet,
Though sorrows bring me there!"

A sister from Ill. writes for

"Something that will be useful to distribute in a Bible class. We have one here composed of—(no matter about the names, you know,) and non-professors. I was highly pleased when I read of your proposed plan of publishing tracts to distribute in the West. I have been very anxious to do something, but have not been able as yet. When I get the Crisis, I am anxious to know what has been done in this department. I sent a couple of dollars to Bro. Grant last spring, and got a few books, and [illegible] them I hope would [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] have received the doctrine of the resurrection, life through Christ alone, and the destruction of the wicked. Many others are calling for more light! more light! Now, Bro. H., if you are able (I know you are willing,) to send me some tracts to be distributed among a poor, but intelligent people, who are anxious to know the truth as it is in Jesus, I will faithfully discharge my duty in the fear of God, praying that it may be to you bread cast upon the waters, and to them a light to guide them to the kingdom of our soon coming King. There is a large field here, all white and ready for the harvest; but laborers are few. The enemy is continually sowing tares in the field, whose fruit is Spiritualism and infidelity. There is one man here who has been an advocate of infidelity for many years, who is now rejoicing in the hope of the resurrection of the dead, and has publicly professed, and understandingly put on, Christ by baptism by hearing the word explained to him in its true light. Yours in Christ."

Thus goes the battle at the West. Let us push it. You shall have some tracts, sister. Your Bro., H. L. Hastings.

For the Crisis.

"Don't Give up the Ship."

This is the world-renowned sentence which the dying Lawrence uttered; and it was worthy of that hero, whom admiring foe and mourning countrymen revere alike. It is a noble sentiment, and in itself a host. Figuratively, I adopt the resolve—I wont give up the ship—or in other words, I wont give up the sailors, without whom the ship would be of little service. The Lord helping me, they shall have tracts, even had I to wait a year in gathering funds to print them. The enterprise is not a "speculation;" and those who assist will have their reward, besides the pleasure, if required, of helping to cast the bread of life upon the waters of the deep. The money may come slowly, but come it will, I have no doubt, and we shall give to the lips of the bravest men, the cup of the living truth for which thousands of them are thirsting.

Since my last, I gratefully acknowledge the receipt of one dollar each from Mrs. C Warner, Ore Hill, Conn.; R Boston, Milton, Mass.; C. H Sutton, Manayunk, Pa.; and 50 cents from G. A. Lewis, Plymouth Hollow, Ct. I thank you, my dear friends, in the name of the seamen, and entreat others to help this noble cause.

Correspondence.

From Eld. Wm. Sheldon.

Bro. Grant:—Since my last letter to you, I have been scattering the truth in different localities. On the 27th of Sept., I left my home, in company with Eld. Teeple, to go to Conference. On our way thither we stopped at Utica, Minn., over an hundred miles from my residence, to hold a meeting of days. Our congregations were not large till Sunday, but the meetings were appreciated by those who were in attendance. Eight sermons were preached in that town, three by Eld Teeple, and five by the writer. Elds. C. L. Page and W. Sweet were present. On Sunday evening we sat down to the Lord's table. It was a good time. Here let me say that I always observe this ordinance in Scriptural style; that is, eat the supper at supper time, not at dinner time; surround a table as our Master did, using unleavened bread.

At the close of this meeting we proceeded on our way to the Annual Conference, where we greeted many "friends of Jesus," and enjoyed a glorious meeting. Although this conference is yet in its infancy, it already numbers fourteen ministers, and a goodly number of churches, with a fair prospect of a speedy and generous addition of both ministers and churches.

At the commencement of conference, I arranged to begin a meeting on the 10th of Oct., at the Court House in the village of Viroqua. At the time appointed, preached my first sermon in the Court House to a good congregation of interested listeners. But at the solicitation of the Springville friends, the meeting was adjourned to that place, thinking that the interest awakened there by the conference should be followed up. Accordingly I commenced laboring in Springville with pleasing success; the interest continuing to deepen among the members of other churches and non-professors, as well as among our own people. However, I had remained in Springville but two days when I received the following note from Viroqua Village, signed by thirteen prominent citizens of the place, among whom were the signatures of the editors of the "Expositor," the judge, the registrar of deeds, and several lawyers and doctors:—

"Elder Sheldon:—Dear Sir,—Having heard your sermon delivered in the Court House in this village on the 10th inst., and believing you might accomplish much good here by repeating your efforts,—we, the undersigned, do hereby tender you a cordial invitation to revisit us immediately for that purpose. We wait your pleasure. Respectfully."

As these were candid men, not belonging to the nominal churches, and were anxious to know the truth, duty constrained me to announce to them that I would recommence my meetings at the Court House in their village, on the evening of the 15th. We expect that God will do a great work in [illegible]

Bro. Y. Higgins is preaching in this locality, and in the surrounding region. May he be prospered of the Lord. There are a few dear children, in this place, who are alive in the good cause of Christ.

During the conference, and during my subsequent meetings in this village, I have made my home with a respectable and intelligent merchant, Hon. J. R. Savage, an ex-member of the legislature of this state, who is becoming deeply interested in the precious truths of revelation, together with his amiable companion. He has spared no pains to render my home pleasing. His influence has been fully in our favor. May the Lord lead him in the path of obedience.

Friends, who wish me to hold protracted meetings with them, can address me, as formerly, at Castle Rock, Dakota Co., Minnesota; but let such remember that I am too poor to pay my own traveling expenses. I expect to be at home by the first of December next, when I will arrange for another campaign, as an evangelist.

Springville, Wis., Oct. 13th, 1859.

From Sr. A. C. Judson.

Bro. Grant:—Why is it that so many ministers of our faith are congregated in the N. England States? The appointments that are given out in the Crisis from week to week, show that a large majority are traveling over the same circuits, in that region, and preaching to the same congregations; while from north, south and west, are continued calls for help,—multitudes of destitute churches, and many lonely christians here and there, who are hungering and thirsting for the dispensation of the word,—who have not, perhaps, heard a gospel sermon for months, or even years.

Now, why is it? Are souls any more precious in New England than elsewhere? or is there a want of self-sacrifice in the cause of Christ among the ministers there? Is there a possibility that there are less hardships, more ease, and better pay there than in other sections, and that "poor human nature" is somewhat influenced by these considerations to induce the fact I have mentioned? Now suppose ten, at least, of the laborers in our Master's vineyard, should leave their comfortable localities in your pleasant region, and answer some of the calls for help in different portions of our land,—would the cause suffer in consequence? Would it not rather be benefited, and God honored?

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Palmer Depot, Mass., Oct. 19th 1859, Betsy Mattison, wife of Daniel Mattison, aged thirty-four years.

Sister Mattison made profession of religion some seventeen years since, at which time she joined the Methodist church. Since then she has ever lived a christian life. During her long illness—her disease was consumption—she was never known to utter a murmur of complaint, but patiently endured all as becometh a meek disciple of Christ. She died in a full belief of eternal life only through Christ at the resurrection.

May the grace of God uphold her husband in his sad bereavement and fit him more fully for a blest reunion in that future life, where parting is unknown.

Bro. A. M. Higgins preached the funeral discourse, and sought to comfort the mourners present by presenting the glowing hopes which the gospel inspires in the christian's heart. O. P. Allen.

Palmer, Oct. 31st, 1859.

Died, in North Haverhill, N. H., Sept. 18th, 1859, Bro. Josiah Osborne, aged fifty-eight years, eleven months, and seven days, leaving a wife and six children.

The subject of this notice was for years a faithful member of the Christian church, but when he heard the glorious news of Christ's coming, he with joy received it. Our brother was one of those that seemed to glory in the cross of Christ, for he bore the yoke so faithfully and constantly, that it seemed to be easy and the burden truly light. Before great and small, at home or abroad, his theme was, to hold up the word of God as our safe guide to the future world, and although a lover of time, and evidences that might show the Savior near, yet his constancy and devotion at the family altar, showed that his religion was not like those that make no effort, only when borne on the wave of excitement. Our brother and his companion were always ready to welcome the servant of God under their roof, to share with them the comforts of this life, (as many can testify) and his religion did not lead him to feast the servants of the Lord and starve the poor beast that carried the messenger of God.

His health began to decline in May last, and in June he took his bed; he continued to fail until he could no longer grapple with disease. But our brother has gone down in full faith in the power of the great Life Giver to ransom him from the power of the grave and to redeem him from death. The writer was with him two weeks before he died, sat up with him, and had the privilege of kneeling in prayer by his side, and hearing his exhortation and counsel to his companion and children, to meet him where the tear of sorrow and grief will never fall, nor parting hand be given.

May the good Lord impart grace to the afflicted widow in this hour of trial; and his Spirit to enable the children to make the necessary preparation, to meet that praying, devoted father in the kingdom of God.

Our brother was carried to the meeting-house in Piermont, where the funeral services were performed, where he had many times assembled with the saints for the worship of God. Discourse by Bro. Wm. Merrill, from Job. 14. 14.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

FRANCE.

[Per North America.]

The Paris Constitutionnel, in an article signed by the principal editor, in reply to the assertions of the English press that the policy of the Emperor has left a state of political incertitude in Europe, states the aim proposed by the Emperor in the beginning of the war, and compares it with the advantages gained, and accuses the English journals of inconsistency.

The Paris correspondents of the English journals generally indulge in gloomy forebodings.

The writer for the Herald states plainly that the impression gained ground that a rupture between France and England was imminent. Several provincial journals published simultaneously violent articles against England, which are known to have been supplied by a government official. England is warned that the hour of trial approaches which may put an end to her greatness forever.

SPAIN

A Paris journal asserts that a declaration of war by Spain against Morocco has been strongly urged by France.

A Paris letter in Le Nord asserts that Palmerston had declared to the French Ambassador that England would not suffer Spain to occupy both sides of the Straits, and would oppose it by force. The English Cabinet, he said, would make the question an European one.

The London Times is of opinion that any danger to Europe or British possession of Gibraltar, from the Spanish enterprise against Morocco, is absurd, but an attack by France on the independence of Morocco, and an attempt to add its territory to Algeria, would justify the strongest remonstrances on behalf of Europe.

The London Shipping Gazette of the 24th, says: We have reason to believe there will be no war between Spain and Morocco, the Moors having made the required concessions.

Accounts from various parts of Spain, however, continue to speak of great preparations for war with Morocco. Troops are collecting in every part for conveyance to Africa.

ITALY

The Pope had returned to Rome on the 20th. A great crowd assembled on his passage through the city.

The government of Rome had received intelligence that the Bishop of Rimini, and other priests, had been imprisoned, and that the authorities at Pesaro had seen letters from emissaries, inciting to rebellion the provinces now held in submission by Papal troops.

The reports of disturbances at Palermo are confirmed. The conflict between the troops and people began on the 9th, and lasted till the 11. At Bagliera, near Palermo, quiet had been restored, but Palermo was in a state of siege.

The Giornale di Roma states that the Pope, the day after his arrival at Castel-Gandolfo, visited the church of the Immaculate Virgin, belonging to the Jesuits, and that all the members of "the fraternity were admitted to the honor of kissing his foot."

A new Tract or Pamphlet—"Reasons for the hope that is in me." It will occupy about 50 pages,—large, clear type. Price hereafter.

Bibles of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Minion, references between the verses, $1.50 to 2.25. Nonpareil, marginal references, or references between verses, $1.30 to $2.10. Pearl, references between verses, $1.75. Marginal references, $1.30 to $1.75. Diamond, marginal references, 75 cts. to $1. Bindings, Roan, Calf and Morocco: these make the difference in prices.

Terms for Bibles cash with the order, as I am not able to send them out on credit. 20 per cent. off to those who order ten dollars' worth, i. e., for $8 in cash I send by express $10 worth of Bibles. These prices are very low, much less than those of booksellers generally. I have not all these kind on hand now, but expect to have them in a few days, as soon as they can be imported.

The Englishman's Greek Concordance, $4. Hebrew Concordance, $20. Greek Testament from 50 cts. to $4. Greek Lexicons from $1.25 to $6.25. Hebrew, $1.50 to $10.50. Cash with order.

Directions. 1. Write as soon as possible, if you wish Books or Tracts.

2. Do not expect me to send any or many except such as are on this list. I sometimes have others, but not always. If you want them, say so, and I will send if I have them; but if not, get them at the Crisis office, and do not expect me to write and hunt them up and send them to you. I have too much to do.

3. Do not make me answer needless questions or useless letters. I have not the time nor strength to do it. I write day after day, and still am behind with my correspondence.

4. Tell me where you live, your town, post office, county and state, and sign your name plainly to your letter, and put your address under it. Do not forget this.

5. If you want tracts to scatter, send $1, or $5, or $10, and get a lot. 1600 pages for $1. If you are too poor to pay and want tracts, send in and you can have them free. Send stamps to pay postage if you can, if not, I will do it. Let the tracts fly!

6. Tell how to send the tracts—by mail or express. What express? What is the nearest depot?

7. My address is always Providence, R. I., and my office in Providence is 43 Weybosset street, near the post office, and opposite the Bank of North America, up stairs, in a watch shop with H. W. Pray.

9. After Nov. 10th till Dec. 1st, orders may be sent "care of G. W. Young, Box 3124 New York city P. O." During that time I can be found at 138 Williams St., New York. I want all orders, so far as possible, sent in by that time, that I may fill them and have it done with.

9. Cut out this paper and read it over when you order books and tracts of me.

10. If you want any Greek or Hebrew books, I can get them for you as cheap as any one when in N. Y. I can get you any other books you need. Yours, L. H. Hastings.

Notices, &c.

Notice.

Friends wishing to communicate with the church in River Point, R. I., will please direct their letters to Albert Greene, clerk of the church.

Notice.

There will be a Second Advent Conference held in Worcester, Mass., with the brethren worshiping in Warren Hall, commencing Wednesday, Nov. 16th, at 2 o'clock P. M., to hold over the following Sunday. At this meeting in addition to the usual religious services, there will be a suitable portion of the time occupied in the investigation of doctrinal truths, among which, and not least, will be considered the evidences that exist in proof of the fact that the coming of our Lord is especially near. The brethren in that region, both preachers and lay brethren, are cordially invited to attend as the Lord may direct. The following preachers have declared their intentions to be present, and others are expected: J. Hemenway, J. Billings, J. G. Smith, H. Pratt, C. Goodrich, J. G. Hook.

S. W. Bishop, for the Brethren.

[illegible]

When the tempest o'er us lowers, [illegible]
[illegible] the wayfarer's star?
Jesus, dear Jesus.
[illegible] morning star?
Jesus, dear Jesus.
[illegible] temptation, care and strife,
When the heart with grief is rife,
Who will guide us safe through life?
Jesus, dear Jesus.

Who has pointed out the way?
Jesus, dear Jesus.
That leads to one eternal day—
Jesus, dear Jesus.
Thou alone our guide shall be,
[illegible]
Help us now all sin to flee,
Jesus, dear Jesus.

Who can make the desert bloom?
Jesus, dear Jesus.
Who can raise us from the tomb?
Jesus, dear Jesus.
When that glorious day shall dawn,
[illegible] in a day 'll be born,
And we shall no longer mourn
Thy absence, dear Jesus.

Hasten the time when strife shall cease,
Jesus, dear Jesus,
[illegible] the universal peace,
Jesus, dear Jesus;
Thou shalt then as king preside
O'er thy kingdom far and wide,
Then forever we 'll abide
With thee, dear Jesus.

The Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

CORRESPONDENCE.—No. 4.

My Dear Sister G.:—In my last I had only room to notice the offices of the Holy Spirit, as brought to view in the instructions of Christ, connected with the "promise of the Father." In view of them alone, do we not need the Spirit to sustain these several offices toward us? If so, we too need to "tarry," if not at Jerusalem, at the throne of grace, until, like the disciples of old, we receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost, for without it we cannot be thus comforted, counselled, instructed and guided.

Just before Jesus ascended to the Father, he commanded his disciples to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. This brings to view another office of the Spirit, viz., to impart power, or energy. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." But why wait for the endowment of power? These were disciples of Jesus, they had been chosen out from the world, to perform a special work for Christ. They had left all, and been followers of him in his journeyings; they had received his gospel so far as they were capable of comprehending it, and proclaimed it to others. In the name of Jesus they had cast out devils, healed the sick, and performed various other miracles. What wait they for? What lack they yet?

Behold them as they walk by the way, disputing one with another as to which of them shall be the greatest. Any evidence of unsanctified nature hereby evinced? Look at Peter! To-day he boldly declares his faith that Jesus is the Son of God. To-morrow he rebukes that Savior, and declares that what he has testified shall befall him, shall not so be; and is thus reproved by Christ: "Get thee behind me, Satan, (adversary) thou art an offence unto me; for thou savorest not the things of God, but those that be of men." To-day he declares in all the confidence of faith, "Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I!" To-morrow he follows the Savior afar off, then with an oath denies all knowledge of him, and all through fear of a servant girl. [illegible] strongly marked vacillations [illegible].

When the box of alabaster was broken, and the costly ointment poured upon the head of Jesus, "his disciples saw it, and had indignation, saying, for what purpose is this waste?" Any workings of the carnal mind here manifested? When certain of the Samaritans refused to entertain Jesus, James and John were for having fire call down from heaven to consume them. Any revengeful spirit in this? So slow of heart were they to understand the mystery of the incarnation and the atonement, that they at one time lost their faith quite, and [illegible] a falling, and when Jesus [illegible] after his resurrection, he upbraided them with their folly and unbelief. [illegible]

[illegible] ambitious, covetous, [illegible] vacillating, fearful and un- [illegible] associated with the Savior, [illegible] to be taken from them, [illegible] something more than [illegible]

[illegible] have received the holy anointing. [illegible] go forth at the present day to preach the gospel to the world, no better qualified by grace—though it may be by education—than were those fishermen of Galilee. They manifest the same infirmities of the flesh—the same vacillations—the same lack of energy and faith.

It is not the Biblical Institute, nor the Seminary, nor College, that qualifies the individual for the work of soul-saving, but the same essential baptism of power—the same tongue of fire—the same "anointing," "sealing," and divine "unction," that descended upon those waiting disciples, gathered together in that "upper room" at Jerusalem. What a transformation it wrought in all their hearts! With what living, energizing power did Peter preach to assembled thousands, the gospel of the Nazarene—the crucified? It was "not with the enticing words of man's wisdom" that he won over three thousand to the faith; no, no! it was the Spirit that demonstrated the word, and sent it home, sharp and powerful, to their guilty hearts!

Has the word lost its former power? Alas! too true! And why? Because not wielded by the hand of the Spirit. Many preach the word very correctly as to doctrine, they accumulate a vast number of passages and arrange them in very systematic harmony, to establish some favorite theory; but while it falls musically perhaps upon the outward ear, it penetrates not the heart, it awakens no slumbering conscience, it reveals no covered sin; it stirs up no feeling of gratitude, adoration, nor love, it kindles no fire upon the mouldering embers, it moves no heart. What is the matter? The bullet is there—the powder is there—but, alas! no spark from heaven's smitten steel is there, to send them home to the heart! But more of this anon.

Yours as ever, M. D. W.

Religion.

IS IT PROGRESSIVE IN PRINCIPLE?

It was recently assumed in a sermon before Williams College that "religion is progressive and theology stationary"—that improvements cannot be made upon the theological positions of the early Fathers and councils, but as the distinguished preacher was a representative of the Calvinistic school, we presume that he admits improvement till the day of the learned John of Geneva. To admit his position, is to take the scholastic nonsense of other generations as the best solution of difficulties in divinity, and most harmonious views of worship in any time. What shall we answer to this? It is evidence that a man believes that his own school and church are authentic, however long they may have been groveling, and again, that all the improvements among them are only supposed,—there is nothing really good but what was,—which is to say that inspiration prevails with that body; and that while other people may be religious, and possess a truly progressive system of morals, if not an enlightened mode of worship, they cannot have a Bible theology as the basis of their religious institutions, because they are not bound by the stationary theological platform of a former and fast receding age. The very gist of exclusiveness lies in this assumption, that theology is stationary, and as a succeeding step, the church, which is built upon theology and not upon religion, must be regarded as infallible.

The Rev Dr. Bellows, in his sermon at the commencement at Harvard, intimates a New Church movement—a catholic ground of fellowship, or broad church with a ritual, but if the object be to establish a pure church and simple worship,—to exhibit apostolicity itself,—why not go back to the simplicity of the apostles? The apostles do not direct any ritual, they do not bind a man even in form, much less in conscience, to any precise liturgy. We could hail Dr. Bellows as a true reformer, and with many more could unite upon liberal church principles, but who would bear the idea of a new hierarchy? It is denied that this is intended, but how could the plan eventuate else? Man has been considered a religious being—admitted to possess a nature adapted to religion. But this is only shown in the fact that he seeks worship, in which he proposes to propitiate, by which he seems to be aware of religious need, and would secure supply; that supply he finds in the satisfaction of having done that which was demanded; and, dependent upon a gracious providence and care, which his imagination or his faith has secured to him, he feels confident, this much is gained; and in the real fact, the divine providence over the truly devout worshiper.

Now each man's religion is, to him, a heritage; but a heritage sometimes with encumbrances. If a man have no religion, he must be exceedingly impoverished; yes, extremely, absolutely impoverished! For all things else will man surrender before the ancient religious heritage. Each man will value his inheritance in proportion as certain considerations weigh upon him. This fact is no less true in regard to the [illegible] patrimony [illegible] labors and [illegible]

[illegible] from love of gain. Religion [illegible] a great claim in the world, and still may be divided into various classes. Outside of christianity, there are many, even, whose devotion to the modes of worship, which are founded, as we believe, entirely on fables, would shame the languid and frigid homage of the professor of the christian religion, whose great claim for their conceptions of the divine, and manner of approaching divinity, is an ancient and time-honored position, with universal consent. It should be remembered that all idolaters invest the objects of worship with divinity, i. e., divinity is the ideal. Hence, as we have said, the god, whatever it may be, must be intended to exhibit the conception of divinity; and the worship, of necessity, should be the attempt to approach the ideal. The whole, without the light of christianity, is a miserable abortion; but still the best possible production from the sources employed.

Theology is the great bulwark of society, from whatever source and in whatever age. If heathen nations have been bad and deeply depraved with their idolatry, and under the darkness of mythology; it were a grave question—would they not have been worse off without any religion—without any idea of the gods or divinity? The Pagan and Mohammedan, being defective, especially in the great conceptions of Deity, have given but little improvement; yet I must contend that so far as the really theological has prevailed, it has been the stay of the social structure, and support of social order. Many heathen have been far from infidel; indeed, the inquiry of philosophical minds with them should naturally lead them to reverence and worship; which, as we must all agree, is the way to faith. Under the christian system, faith comes before enlightened worship, but in the religion of christianity generally, worship first. And in the dependence of the young mind upon example for the direction and force of its action, this must almost necessarily be the case, how much more so with the heathen mind, without the authority of revelation! All nations claim authority, in morals and politics, from their theology. In the Jewish, God himself made the social and political structure depend upon the knowledge of himself, which is the true idea in genuine theology. But in the religion of the Jews, based as it was upon knowledge, and exhibited in certain ceremonies, which, while they gave the credit to the divine wisdom and power, gave distinction to the people who were called to practice the rites and observances, and thus gave them precedence, we have an example of others and as they did, so each will do—they will refer to the great principles of their theology as the authority in their religious system. It is well that it should be so, yet the stationary position results from it. If Christians and even Protestants would not imitate Jews, Pagans and Mohammedans, then the whole civilized world might rejoice, for the Jew, as such, cannot be improved in his theology; his religion arising therefrom, his religion is stationary too. What another dispensation may assert for him is another question. The same is true of a Mohammedan or Pagan. He is mainly the creature of arbitrary circumstances and conditions. He then cannot deviate widely from his original bent. Not so with the christian, from the nature of the influences, and in one word, the whole power by which he, as a believer, is constituted. His position, not being limited by circumstances,—being a centre stand itself,—his knowledge of God may continually increase, hence his theology is improved. Then he progresses, not only in his religion, but in the apprehension of the divine.

Theology is indeed stationary, and religion too, with the classes referred to, aside from christianity, and it is to be feared that it is being made so by many christian sects after the Catholic exhibition of blind zeal, with adherence to the past in all things. Rather in Protestant sects, the effort is to improve religion, give it the true impetus of progression; while the great basis of a scriptural religion—genuine theology—would be wrapped in the swaddling bands of infancy—a juvenile giant, lying in the sleep of ages.

I would like to have you send me your address and that of those that you know of, that I may give you a call if I come near you. Those that write, be particular to give me the state of affairs in your place, then I can judge where I am the most needed. I intend to travel the most of this year and hold quarterly conferences in several places, the object of which will be to enter into order, so that brethren that cannot go to the Annual conference may be accommodated with a home within their reach. I expect to start for Howard Co., next month—shall be glad to call and visit all the brethren. I expect to go forth at my own expense, and wish to know of all the pilgrim homes. I am glad that some preachers who have traveled West give the different places and names. I wish others would do so.

[illegible] hear the many inquiries for them, they would start these little preachers. There are many large places that could be reached, and now is the time, when the towns are small, to commence and grow with them. The people emigrate from all sections, with different religious views. Neither one can support their cause, and they will not unite together. We have long prayed for help. We hope now an opportunity has been presented, that you all will take hold.

By the way, I acknowledge those papers sent me by Bro. G. W. Frisbie, Forestville, Ct. Thank you; they are at work. I hope to see more, especially those containing the Minutes of our Conference, so we can let the people know what we are doing.

"Thy Word is a Lamp unto my Feet." Ps. 119: 115.

How glorious the light that around us is beaming,
Our hopes, O how cheering, our prospects how bright!
What radiance from God's blessed word now is gleaming
On the path of the pilgrims who walk in the light.
Time's darkness and shadows are fading—are ending!
Before the bright day-star in glory ascending!
The glow of the morning through heaven is extending!
'Tis guilding the mountains and banishing night.

We come from a world that is lying in darkness,
For sin hath cast round it her mantle of gloom,
No tongue can portray half its terrible blackness,
'Tis cheerless and dark as the shades of the tomb;
Yet still midst the darkness and gloom so uncheering,
The light brings to view our blest Savior's appearing,
It tells of the kingdom of heaven that 's nearing,
It gladdens the pilgrims with prospects of home!

Then, pilgrims, whilst traveling this journey so dreary,
We'll praise Him who gave us his word as a light,
In this we'll rejoice, though we're downcast and weary;
'T will guide us the remnant of this far-spent night
We'll heed the monitions that by it are given,
While o'er time's rude billows by tempests we're driven,
Be guided by it to the kingdom of heaven,
There know the fruition of glory and light!

Take Care of Your Reputation?

Certainly you ought, reader, or rather let God take care of it. What is a man or woman without a good reputation—a reputation for probity, honest integrity, uprightness of purpose, a wish and will to do good and communicate?

"A good name," says Solomon, "is rather to be chosen than great riches." Careful, prayerful caution, should be evermore, not to injure our reputation by thought, word or deed. Give no just cause of offense to any one. "Provide things honest in the sight of all men." "Do nothing through strife or vain glory." Beware of officiousness and self-conceit. Do your utmost to gain a patient and profitable hearing, that God may be glorified. A man with a lost reputation, what can he do for God, to benefit his fellow men? "Confidence in an unfaithful man is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint."

While we lay infinite stress upon the value of a good reputation, we do not fear of losing it, by declaring all the words of this life, by being "in season and out of season," by reproving, rebuking, exhorting with all long-suffering and doctrine—by doing our whole duty—"Stand for Jesus" everywhere—face the foe. The sure way of losing a good reputation, is by stooping and crouching, bowing and scraping to a man-fearing, time-serving policy—shrinking from declaring boldly God's whole truth, come life, come death. "He that saveth his life shall lose it."

God never pledges Himself to take care of our reputation, save in the discharge of our duty, except we honor him by a faithful, unflinching adherence to every known precept. "Them that honor me will I honor." Beloved reader, do you wish a good name, imperishable—a reputation unsullied, evermore? "Confer not with flesh and blood." Speak out, cry aloud, spare not, hold up your head; look the enemy full in the face; fight the good fight, clear your skirts of blood. Suffer not sin to rest upon your neighbor. "Stand for Jesus, and Jesus will stand for you." Go forward, stem the current—"follow on to know the Lord." "Be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

Very many lose their reputation by fearing to lose it. Look at the false prophets, false priests, the Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites, who tithed mint, anise and cummin, and "omitted the weightier matters of the law—judgment, mercy and faith!" who loved the praise of men more than they did the praise of God! Where now their good reputation? And where the good reputation of those at the present day who follow in their steps?

"The memory of the just is blessed: but the name of the wicked shall perish." Whoever lost a good reputation by being faithful, bold in the cause of God? Did Moses, Joshua, Elijah, Daniel, Nehemiah, Paul the apostle? Did Luther lose his good reputation by his holy boldness, in fighting against the "Mother of Harlots"? Did Whitfield, Wesley, Bunyan, Baxter, lose their reputation by their faithfulness, [illegible] self, and swinging loose on God? Did the beloved Dudley Tyng lose his good reputation by opening his lips wide for the dumb? For this very thing his name is embalmed forever and ever in the memories of the blessed! Has the beloved Cheever, of our own city, lost his good reputation by standing boldly for Jesus on the auction block, and in the prison house? His name will be had in everlasting remembrance, with that of Wilberforce, and Clarkson, while his opposers and slanderers will sink into oblivion! "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." Reader, are you seeking a good reputation? Stand boldly for Jesus then.

"When the retinue of heaven
Shall in matchless grandeur come,
And the countless hosts of mortals
Stand to hear their final doom—
Jesus smiling—saints rejoicing—
You will then be welcomed home!"

Workers.

Most of the great and beneficent operations of nature are silent. How quietly the sun diffuses his beams of genial light and heat. How gently does the dew distill upon the earth; in the morning its pearly drops adorn the fields and moisten the thirsty earth: but so imperceptibly have they gathered, that no one can hardly tell how or whence they came. But their service is none the less appreciated on this account. So in all the various departments of nature. Most of its processes are so silent and hidden that few know or comprehend them. They are known almost wholly by their results.

So in society, it is not always or generally those who make the most noise that accomplish the most. The practical worker has little time or disposition for boasting and pretension. 'Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven.' It is very easy for some to talk and boast of their plans. Persons of an ardent temperament and strong imagination can easily get up almost anything on speculation. But practical people very soon understand the difference between planning and executing. Ardent and enthusiastic men are often very useful in carrying forward an enterprise, doing much to infuse life and vigor into the less hopeful. But they can rarely be trusted to plan any new work.

In our school days, we recollect hearing of a professor in the natural sciences, who used to make a great display of his experiments beforehand. He would tell his class of the wonders he was about to bring to their view, and so raise their expectation to a high pitch. On the trial he often failed, and only got a laugh on him for his pains. Our old professor was a plain, practical man, and remarkably successful. He would never promise anything, often warned us of failure, yet scarcely ever failed. Thus his experiments pleased us, and more than satisfied our hopes. We have often made the comparison, and reflected that this is very much the way of the world. Those who boast and promise most, usually bring the least to pass, while the still, earnest, patient worker, often unobserved, brings out the mightiest results, and ere we are aware, has obtained a most noble and enduring reputation.

What the ministry, the church, and the world want is workers. There is a vast amount of work to be done, and it must be done little by little, a grain at a time. It cannot be wrought in the mass. True, we must take large and extensive views, there must be liberal and comprehensive plans. But these must be executed step by step, action by action. Another thing is essential. Do one thing at a time. It is great folly to be perpetually devising new schemes—leaving one half finished to commence another, and so complete nothing. Undertake nothing without first counting the cost, when commenced, earnestly persevere until the work is done. Then you may be ready to enter on another. In this way you turn what you do to the best account, and insure success."—Morning Star.

Family Music.

Yes! there is music all around us
If we only list awhile,
And there is beauty every where,
The home of childhood to beguile.

Music, as well as the reading of our language, should be taught in every family, in every school and seminary. Its beautiful results are many.

1st. Singing improves the voice, takes away harshness, sweetens its tone, and gives it greater compass.

2d. Singing improves speaking.

3d. Singing refines the taste, elevates the affections, improves the heart, assists devotion.

4th. Singing is a delightful, interesting and profitable part of worship—especially domestic.

5th. Singing is an element of power.

Parent, teach your children to sing, commence early. Teach them to sing hymns of praise, of a pure and elevated character.

A more delightful scene cannot be presented this side of heaven, than when parents, with their sons and daughters, surrounding the domestic circle, devoutly unite their voices in sacred song.

"Domestic happiness, thou only bliss
Of Paradise that has escaped the fall.
—Golden Rule.

Riding a Hobby.—The Archbishop of Dublin tells of a horseman, who, having lost his way, made a complete circle; when the first round was finished, seeing the marks of horses' hoofs, and never dreaming that they were those of his own beast, he rejoiced, and said, "This, at least shows me that I am in some track." When the circuit was finished, the signs of travel were doubled, and he said, "Now, surely, I am in a beaten way;" and with the conclusion of every round the marks increased, till he was certain that he must be in some frequented thoroughfare, and approaching a populous town; but all the, while he was riding after his horse's tail, and deceived by the track of his own error. So it is with men that ride a hobby.

Diet—The Ministry.

"To the law and the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8: 20.

The usual word in the Greek Scriptures for meat is Broma; (that which is eaten; and derived from Brosko, to eat,) and is used interchangeably with the most precise of all terms, to express the distinctive idea, of "flesh."—Rom. 14: 15–21; 1 Cor. 8: 1–18. Another word is Trophe, from a word to nourish, and embraces the usual food eaten at that time. Of course, it included animal food, almost universally eaten throughout the whole range of Patriarchal, Prophetic and Apostolic times.—Matt. 8: 4; 6: 25; 10: 10; John 4: 8.

Note I. This food—flesh—was allowed by Jehovah—created "to be received with thanksgiving."—1 Tim. 4: 3. Nay; it was ordained and most solemnly sanctioned by God, as an essential part of Patriarchal and Mosaic worship. "The Passover" was a feast on flesh. It was one of the holiest of all memorial services among God's chosen people.

Note II. Abraham, the father of the faithful, the friend of God, ate flesh. He killed a calf to feast his celestial visitants! Thus did other godly worthies.

Note III. Jesus and his holy apostles "ate the Passover"—ate flesh—the sacrificed lamb.

Thus the purity of their persons—the efficiency, spirituality, and success of their ministry did not depend on their abstinence from animal food. They ate for nourishment. They ate what God appointed. They were sustained like other men, in their most spiritual approaches to God, by flesh that had been "salted with salt" and offered in sacrifice.

It is then a great mistake to assume for ourselves or others any "spiritual gift" on the ground of abstinence from what God has "appointed to be received with thanksgiving!" Abstinence on the ground of prudence and of christian charity is acceptable.—Rom. 14: 15; 1 Cor. 8: 13. But no dietetic rule that reflects on the goodness of God, or the holiest habits of his most honored servants, or that "puts a stumbling block in the way of the disciples," can be christian or even humane, because—

Note IV. It is the distinctive character of the false teachers whom the Holy Ghost saith should arise in Rome and the Romish earth—inclusive of the whole apostasy—that they should "forbid to marry and command to abstain from meats."—1 Tim. 4: 1–5. This is a bad place to put ourselves in—the company is bad too. Let us avoid it.

Note V. Christ's first miracle made water into first rate wine. John 2: 11–23. The apostle enjoins wine on a worthy minister as a drink instead of water, in a case of infirmity.—1 Tim. 5: 23. There is no reverse command from God—no miracle where wine was converted into water, as if water could be better than wine in all cases to clergymen.*

It has been my privilege to preach and reason of "righteousness, temperance and the judgment to come," but never to "go beyond the word of the Lord," as if God and the history of all the holy of all dispensations could be at fault!

Note VI. The Essenes and other anchorites at the first advent, the Monastics of Rome and of modern times, are not taken up into the catalogue of worthies with Abraham in Hebrews 11. History and holy scripture harmonize here.

The conclusion is, that we may eat wholesome food—"whatsoever is set before us, asking no questions, as the Holy Ghost" hath directed. Other "spirits" make other rules. Where christian charity demands abstinence from things even lawful, it is reasonable, right and acceptable to God. Amen. Monkery has no place in christianity.

Change of Clothing.

Change of clothing is a subject of vast importance, because, being injudiciously done, it has cost the life of thousands. One of the best, most useful, and humane men in our country, respected and admired at home and abroad—Abbot Lawrence, of Boston—brought on the illness which prematurely terminated his life by an injudicious change of clothing. Rachel, the great tragedienne of modern times, attributed the sickness which cut short her life to the same cause, on the occasion of going in the cars from New York to Boston. The general rule for daily changes should be to put on additional clothing the very moment we are sensible of a feeling of chilliness, irrespective of the time of day, or night, or season, or year. But, on the other hand, it is always hazardous to lessen the clothing for warmer weather, at any time during the day. Many lives will be saved if it be made a standing regulation never to diminish the amount of clothing after having first dressed in the morning; change to a cooler dress for warmer weather on the morning of the succeeding day. Persons are generally too eager to put on lighter clothing as spring advances, and on the coming of summer. It is safer, and more philosophical to regulate the heat by the eating, and let the clothing remain the same until the spring is fully established, [illegible] arrived, for in the latitude of New York [illegible] fire is sometimes very comfortable on the first day of June, and families very greatly err in removing grates and stoves from the general room at an [illegible] [illegible] condition for hours, together on an unexpectedly cool morning, rather than the summer arranged fire-place or stove should be soiled with ashes and coal, thus running the risk of giving a chill to some less robust member of the family, which may cause a sickness of weeks and months following. The same inconsideration and fear of trouble [illegible] postpone the convenience of fire-making until late in the fall, and rather than have a bright cheerful fire the very first fall morning that is cool enough to make fire agreeable, they will sit shivering in the prim parlor for hours, in shawls and overcoats, or blankets piled on their laps. Shame on us for thus tampering with glorious good health, for thus inviting spirit-breaking and body-destroying disease.

Wearing flannel is another most important subject. It is worn next the skin winter and summer for the purpose of regulating the heat of the body, and preventing the effects of those sudden changes between in and out-doors, which are necessary to most persons in following the daily avocations of life. Woolen flannel is worn for this purpose because it is a "non-conductor," least calculated of any ordinary article of clothing to transmit heat, to carry it from one thing to another; that is to say, it takes a long time for a particle of heat to travel from one side of a blanket to the other; therefore, we say that flannel confines the heat to the body, "it keeps us warm," keeps the warmth about us in cold weather, and in very hot weather keeps the greater heat on the outside of us. Thus, in our changing climate, it aids in keeping the temperature of the body the same, and should be generally worn by all children, old, and weakly persons all the year. A much thinner article should be worn in summer. That the changes as to the feeling of heat and cold are less severe in connection with the "non-conductor," woolen flannel, than as to other articles, called conductors, may be tried any moment by placing the hand on a blanket, and then on a piece of cotton sheeting, or Irish linen, or an article of silk, for in all these things we must appeal to our own convictions from actual experience, rather than to the philosophical argument. Still, it is always gratifying to the reflecting to understand the reason of things, as it aids to their remembrance and is a stimulus to their observance. Flannel next to the surface has another important advantage, its fibres are sticky, they irritate the skin, and each one, by its constant titillation, induces a redness not quite so apparent to the eye as the intolerable itching which it causes in some, is evident to the senses when a garment is first put on. The effect of this irritation, as physicians term it, is to draw the blood to the surface as certainly as a scratch of a pin, or the application of a blister plaster, but in a more moderate way, and the keeping of blood toward the surface is the health and the life of all. It is when it tends inwards that the wheels of the complex machinery are clogged, and men begin to die. As long as blood can be kept freely and fully on the surface, there is no death by disease.

But since the incessant application of an irritant tends at length to make the skin callous, hard, unfeeling, the flannel should be removed on retiring at night, and a cotton garment worn so as to give the skin rest during sleep, thus aiding sound repose. This should be done for motives of personal cleanliness, that by throwing the flannel over a line or on the back of a chair, it may have a thorough airing, and thus by shaking it well in the morning, before putting it on again, it may be dry, fumigated, clean, with the additional advantage, that if not worn during the night, it is more serviceable during the day, making less clothing necessary, which should be a study, for the more we bundle ourselves up, the more we may, the more is the skin debilitated by the constant enervating warmth and need of ventilation. Thus it is that those who wear a great deal of clothing, and muffle themselves up so very carefully, whenever they put their heads out of doors, are always ailing, the "slightest thing in the world" gives them a cold, according to their own confession, and they are invalids for life. The reader who has been in the habit of sleeping in flannel, and from the statements made, is convinced that a change is wisdom, can do it the first night, the coldest of the winter though it may be, with entire impunity, if for a night or two he is at extra pains to heat his feet before the fire, stockings off, for half an hour, rubbing them with the hands meanwhile, until every part is perfectly dry and warm, and in addition will have an extra cover over the lower limbs. And even if he should take a little cold by the change, persevere resolutely, and the system will soon feel the benefit of the practice.—Health and Disease.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.00
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brs., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

The Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

CORRESPONDENCE.—No. 4.

MY DEAR SISTER G.:—In my last I had only room to notice the offices of the Holy Spirit, as brought to view in the instructions of Christ, connected with the "promise of the Father." In view of them alone, do we not need the Spirit to sustain these several offices toward us? If so, we too need "to tarry," if not at Jerusalem, at the throne of grace, until, like the disciples of old, we receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost, for without it we cannot be thus comforted, counselled, instructed and guided.

Just before Jesus ascended to the Father, he commanded his disciples to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. This brings to view another office of the Spirit, viz., to impart power, or energy. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." But why wait for the endowment of power? These were disciples of Jesus, they had been chosen out from the world, to perform a special work for Christ. They had left all, and been followers of him in his journeyings; they had received his gospel as far as they were capable of comprehending it, and proclaimed it to others. In the name of Jesus they had cast out devils, healed the sick, and performed various other miracles. What wait they for? What lack they yet?

Behold them as they walk by the way, disputing one with another as to which of them shall be the greatest. Any evidence of unsanctified nature hereby evinced? Look at Peter! To-day he boldly declares his faith that Jesus is the Son of God. To-morrow he rebukes that Savior, and declares that what he has testified shall befall him, shall not so be; and is thus reproved by Christ: "Get thee behind me, Satan, (adversary) thou art an offence unto me; for thou savorest not the things of God, but those that be of men." To-day he declares in all the confidence of faith, "Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I!" To-morrow he follows the Savior afar off, then with an oath denies all knowledge of him, and all through fear of a servant girl. [illegible] strongly marked vacillations [illegible]

When the box of alabaster was broken, and the costly ointment poured upon the head of Jesus, "his disciples saw it, and had indignation, saying, for what purpose is this waste?" Any workings of the carnal mind here manifested? When certain of the Samaritans refused to entertain Jesus, James and John were for having fire called down from heaven to consume them. Any revengeful spirit in this? So slow of heart were they to understand the mystery of the incarnation and the atonement, that they at one time lost their faith quite, and gave a fishing, and when Jesus [illegible] after his resurrection, he [illegible] with their folly and unbelief.

[illegible] ambitious, covetous, [illegible] vacillating, fearful and un[illegible] associated with the Savior, [illegible] taken from them, [illegible] something more than [illegible]

[illegible] Galilee. They manifest the same infirmities of the flesh—the same vacillations—the same lack of energy and faith.

It is not the Biblical Institute, nor the Seminary, nor College, that qualifies the individual for the work of soul-saving, but the same essential baptism of power—the same tongue of fire—the same "anointing," "sealing," and divine "unction," that descended upon those waiting disciples, gathered together in that "upper room" at Jerusalem. What a transformation it wrought in all their hearts! With what living, energizing power did Peter preach to assembled thousands, the gospel of the Nazarene—the crucified? It was "not with the enticing words of man's wisdom" that he won over three thousand to the faith; no, no! it was the Spirit that demonstrated the word, and sent it home, sharp and powerful, to their guilty hearts!

Has the word lost its former power? Alas! too true! And why? Because not wielded by the hand of the Spirit. Many preach the word very correctly as to doctrine; they accumulate a vast number of passages and arrange them in very systematic harmony, to establish some favorite theory; but while it falls musically perhaps upon the outward ear, it penetrates not the heart; it awakens no slumbering conscience, it reveals no covered sin; it stirs up no feeling of gratitude, adoration, nor love; it kindles no fire upon the mouldering embers, it moves no heart. What is the matter? The bullet is there—the powder is there—but, alas! no spark from heaven's smitten steel is there, to send them home to the heart! But more of this anon.

Yours as ever, M. D. W.

Religion.

IS IT PROGRESSIVE IN PRINCIPLE?

It was recently assumed in a sermon before Williams College that "religion is progressive and theology stationary"—that improvements cannot be made upon the theological positions of the early Fathers and councils: but as the distinguished preacher was a representative of the Calvinistic school, we presume that he admits improvement till the day of the learned John of Geneva. To admit his position, is to take the scholastic nonsense of other generations as the best solution of difficulties in divinity, and most harmonious views of worship in any time. What shall we answer to this? It is evidence that a man believes that his own school and church are authentic, however long they may have been groveling; and again, that all the improvements among them are only supposed,—there is nothing really good but what was,—which is to say that inspiration prevails with that body; and that while other people may be religious, and possess a truly progressive system of morals, if not an enlightened mode of worship, they can not have a Bible theology as the basis of their religious institutions, because they are not bound by the stationary theological platform of a former and fast receding age. The very gist of exclusiveness lies in this assumption, that theology is stationary, and as a succeeding step, the church, which is built upon theology and not upon religion, must be regarded as infallible.
